A telegraph dated New York yesterday, states that Her Majesty the Queen has ratified the Fishery Treaty, and orders have been sent to Canada for the immediate admission of our fishermen to the unrestricted freedom of fisheries.

NEW YORK, September 12.

The Empire City, bringing late news from China arrived to day. The Revolutionists were in possession of two large towns near Whampoa, and were hourly expected to attack Canton. A portion of the U. S. surveying squadron were moored off the factories, designed to protect American interests.

The Mandarins had stopped the export of rice. Several Chinese merchants had moved out of the city. Large bodies of Imperialist troops were stationed outside the walls.

From Panama, dates are to the 2nd. The Railroad was progressing slowly owing to heavy rains.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.

The steamer Franklin has been seized by order of the Government for a violation of the neutrality laws, in fitting out an expedition against Venezuela. The Catherine Augusta, which sailed recently, will also be seized.

CHARLESTON, Sept. 12.

Accounts reach us daily of the effects of the late dreadful storm both on sea and land. The barque Maria and the brig Savanilla, both of Boston, have been spoken, both dismantled and in distress. The deaths by fever in that city reached 17; no abatement at Savannah, and the city presents a desolate appearance—even the drug stores are closing, all others having closed. Doctors are all lying ill, and physician have been called in from the country.

BOSTON, Sept. 15.

The steamship Niagara arrived here this morning.

The Slave Trade.

The Maryland Colonization Herald says:—"The slave trade direct, from Africa to the United States, has been for some time suspended, but indirect, or through Cuba and Texas, it has at times been tolerably active—at least, we have the avowal of one of the principal actors in the operation for it. Pedro Blanco, next to De Susa, the largest slave trader on the West Coast of Africa for the past forty years, assured us in 1838 that the United States was his best market, through the west end of Cuba and Texas. Upon our expressing doubt as to his statements, he offered to produce his correspondence with citizens of Florida, Louisiana and Arkansas, and other States direct. We declined knowing any more of the matter. It was enough to have recently seen the harbor of Sierra Leone filled with condemned American bottoms, built in Baltimore, the names and persons of the contractors but too well known to us."

Provincial Parliament.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL CHAMBER,
Quebec, Wednesday Sept. 6, 1854.

His Excellency the Governor General, at 3 o'clock P.M., this day, proceeded in state to the Legislative Council Chamber, and having taken his seat upon the throne, commanded the attendance of the Legislative Assembly. The members of that body, preceded by their Speaker, the Honorable L. V. Sicotte, speedily appeared at the bar. The Honorable L. V. Sicotte, informed his Excellency that the choice of the Assembly had fallen upon him to be their Speaker, and he prayed for the members the customary Parliamentary privilegs. After which his Excellency was pleased to deliver the following:

SPEECH:

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council; Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

It affords me much satisfaction to meet you. The increase in the members of the Legislative Assembly which has taken place under the Statute which came into operation for the first time on the occasion of the recent general election, will, I trust, give additional weight to the deliberations of the Legislature, and afford more ample security than has hitherto existed for the due representation in parliament of all interests in the Province.

Subjects of great magnitude and importance will necessarily come under your consideration during the Session, which is now commencing.

The Imperial Parliament, advancing with accelerated speed in the course of liberal Colonial Policy which it has followed of late years, has recently passed two Acts which impose on this Legislature responsibilities of a very grave character.

One of the Acts empowers the Canadian Parliament to alter the Constitution of the Legislative Council. The substitution of the principle of popular election for that of nomination by the Crown in the appointment of members of that body is obviously a task of considerable difficulty, in the execution of which little aid can be derived from experience, as Parliamentary Government and Ministerial responsibility in the British sense of the term are for the most part unknown to the constitutions of countries, where the Legislative bodies consist of two Elective Chambers. In order, however, to give to this inportant branch of the Legislature the weight and influence which it is most desirable that it should possess, some changes in its constitution seems to be imperatively required; and the difficulty to which I have referred, will I trust be surmounted by your wisdom, and by the patriotism of the members of that honorable body.

The other act of the Imperial Parliament removes the restrictions which have for some time past prevented the Provincial Legislature from dealing with Clergy Reserves. From an early period in the history of Upper Canada, this provision, which was originally intended for the support of the Protestant faith has been a source of discord and agitation in that section of the province. It is most desirable, in the interest of religion and social harmony, that a final and conclusive adjustment of this long pending controversy should take place without delay. The subject was distinctly brought before the people of the Province at the late election, and their opinions upon it expressed in no equivocal manner. I trust therefore that you will be able without difficulty to agree upon a measure for accomplishing this object which will give general satisfaction.

The condition of properties held under the Seigniorial Tenure will also, it may be presumed, engage your attention at an early period, with a view to the determination of certain questions affecting them which cannot be kept in suspense without detriment to the interests both of Seigniors and censitair.—You will no doubt see the importance of approaching this subject with caution, and with a due regard to the legal and equitable claims of all parties interested. Security of property is an indispensable condition to economical progress, and persons who invest their funds in property in Canada, must look to the justice and moderation of the Legislature for that protection, which in a neighboring Country is afforded by judical tribunals.

You may probably take into consideration the expediency of assimilating the Municipal Institutions of Lower Canada, in so far as circumstances will permit, to the system which since its introduction has contributed so materially to the prosperity of Upper Canada; and also of extending to the former section of the Province the advantages of the Municipal Loan Fund Act. On these and other subjects of importance measures will be submitted for your deliberation.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly,

I will direct the Public Accounts for the past year and the Estimates for the current year to be laid before you: and I rely on your readiness to make the necessary provision for the exigencies of the public service.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen,

You may probably be of opinion that the prosperous condition of the revenue affords an opportunity of which Parliament may properly avail itself to revise the existing Tariff, with a view to the removal of such duties as affect Raw Materials employed in ship building and other branches of manufacture within the Province, and to the reduction of others, to which articles entering largely into the consumption of the people are now subject.

I will lay before you the copy of a Treaty which has been concluded between her Majesty and the Government of the United States, for the adjustment of various questions affecting the mutual interests of her Majesty's subjects in British North America on the one hand, and of the citizens of the United States on the other, and I recommend to your consideration the propriety of amending the Act passed in 1849 for the free admission into Canada of certain articles of the growth or production of the United States, so as to bring it into harmony with the provisions of this Treaty.

The Government and the Congress of the United States have evinced a liberal and friendly disposition in dealing with this subject, and I trust that they will be met by a corresponding spirit by the Provincial Legislatures.

The removal of duties on the importation of the natural products of Canada, into the markets of the United States, will, it may be hoped, have a tendency to perpetuate and extend the prosperity which has prevailed of late to so remarkable a degree in this Province.

The New Ministry.

The Ministry having been beaten, Mr. Hincks in a speech notified the House that he, in conjunction with his colleagues, had tendered their resignation, which had been accepted.

On Monday, the 11th, a new ministry was formed, the members from Lower Canada remaining the same as before. The Upper Canadian Members have been replaced, as follows:—

UPPER CANADIANS.

Sir Allan Mc Nab,	President of the Council
Wm Cayley,	Inspector General
John A M Donald,	Attorney General West

Provincial.

Confederation of the Provinces.

The following is from the Journal de Quebec:—

"It is reported that there is to be a confederation of the Provinces almost immediately, and they say that the session will last but a few days—that all the important measures of legislation will be set aside to give place to this new and all-important question, that Sir Edmund Head carries in the folds of his robe, in the shape of an imperial despatch, this question of peace or war.

"It is possible that there may be the question of confederation in some colonial document emanating from the Executives of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and the Canadian Parliament may indeed be called on to express its opinion upon this important transformation, but this cannot be to the exclusion of the legislation loudly demanded by our people.

"When they begin to occupy themselves seriously about this confederation, we shall discuss the question."

It is a very remarkable fact, that the exports of Canadian lumber and breadstuffs to the United States exceed those to Great Britian. Hitherto Upper Canada has been the granary of the Province, and the Districts bordering on the Ottawa, the sources of the vast lumbering trade of the country. The boundless forests of Lower Canada, have, however, never been worked, for want of means of transit from the tributaries of the river Saint Lawrence to the Atlantic. This great desideratum will now be supplied by the Grand Trunk Railway, which opens out the finest forests of mast trees so much wanted, with an abundant supply of water power to drive the saw mills during the open season. The section of the Grand Trunk Railway from Richmond to Quebec and St. Thomas runs through the Eastern Townships for 140 miles, called the Midland Counties, the finest agricultural and grazing parts of Canada, capable of rearing any quantity of cattle, and destined at no long period to supply the navies of Great Britain with salt provisions, and the soap boilers and candle manufacturers with tallow.

The rapid development of the resources of Canada, has already unquestionably been materially felt in Liverpool. The Dock Committee has never yet been able to furnish sufficient accommodation for the timber trade, and the demand for this accommodation has greatly enhanced the fortunes of Lords Derby and Sefton, as well as the Marquis of Salisbury, and every possessor of property in and around Liverpool, Birkenhead, and the shores of the Mersey. A galvanic impetus will be equally felt ere long by the proprietors of Cheshire Salt Works, and the Yorkshire and Lancashire Manufacturers, furnishing a practical answer to Mr. Cobden and others who have so tauntingly asked "Of what use are our Colonies? Why spend any more money on them?" Henceforth, perhaps, British America may be excepted, and receive more consideration than it has been the fashion to bestow on this portion of the British empire.

Capitalists know that in Canada and the lower Provinces, British law prevails under Constitutional Government, and what the Legislature has once sanctioned, as regards Provincial Bonds, will never be repudiated by the Ministry of the day, whatever changes may arise, from time to time, under the varying phases of local politics.—Liverpool Courier.

CANADA AS A FIELD FOR THE EMIGRANT.—"An emigrant," whose letter is published in the North Devon Journal, gives an account of his preference for the Canadas, although he gets good bedding, good boarding, and civility cheap, in the States. Travel has made him acquainted with Dutch, Swiss, and Germans. He says he earns a dollar per day from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m. Labourers can get 30*l*, with board, &c. "Workers alone must come out, then, and they can get something worth working for, and not merely be toiling from Monday morning to Saturday night to keep his house over his head, and not always able to do that. Labor of every kind is in great request in Canada. I believe it to be just as good there as in the tates—I can speak with certainty of Canada. Masons can get two dollars per day, and when I was there they could not be had for money. Painters of the lowest order can get 7s. 6d, and grainers and letterers 10s. Labourers through the harvest can command 5s per day. In short, working men of any trade and grade may find employment here. Bear the fact in mind, ye struggling, suffering ones, twice as much to be earned here in less hours, and food very much cheaper."

Destructive Fire and Loss of Life in Hamilton.

We (Hamilton Gazette, Sept. 14th,) regret to have to record the destruction by fire of the large Foundry in this city, owned by Messrs. Question and Fisher, together with the greater calamity of the death of one of our gallant band of firemen. The fire broke out on Tuesday night about 12 o'clock, in the Machine shop, and spread rapidly,—this is the more singular, as the watchman had left only about 20 minutes before that time. The Brigade was early on the spot, and succeeded in confining the flames to the main building. About four o'clock the fire showed some symptoms of spreading and an Engine Company, No. 3, was taken to the rear, and No. 4 left in the front, with orders not to go into the alley way, as the wall was in a very dangerous state. Some of the members notwithstanding the orders, returned within the alley, and the wall falling caught 4 persons before they could escape. Three were immediately got out, one of whom was badly hurt.—The other one, William Henry Woods, was caught about the centre of the alley and must have been instantly killed,—the men were, however compelled to leave him until the next wall fell, which came down in a short time after. It was about two hours before he was got out when the body presented a most frightful appearance. The deceased was a First Lieutenant of No. 4 Engine Company, and was endeared to all who knew him, by his kind and gentle behaviour.

An inquest was held on the remains, when the following verdict was returned: "That William Henry Woods came to his death in consequence of the falling of the wall upon him, while engaged as a fireman, said building being on fire, and owned by Messrs. McQuesten & Fisher.—The cause of the fire, the Jurors have been unable to ascertain."

The loss is estimated at between £3,000 and £4,000, upon which, we understand, there is an insurance of about £2,000. An inquest was held in the forenoon on the body of the unfortunate young man. A number of witnesses were examined, but nothing was elicited that could throw any light on the origin of the fire. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the above facts. Since the above was written, one of the three wounded (Lawrence Powers) has breathed his last. He was a member of Fire Company No. 4. Woods was First Lieut. of the same company.

MAN OVERBOARD.—Joseph Wiggins, captain of the schooner Hebe, reports that he left Toronto at 11 o'clock p. m., on the 6th instant, en route for Darlington, and that he had a new hand on board by the name of William Kerns, for the purpose of assisting to load and unload cordwood, and that sometime during the night, said Kerns became missing. It is not known by any one on board how the accident occurred, but it was conjectured that, having occasion to go on deck, and being unacquainted with the vessel, he unfortunately missed his way, and fell overboard, and was drowned.—Bowmanville Star.

Great Western Railway.

The Directors of this Company have now placed, day and night, watchmen at every concession along the line, to keep off cattle. This must involve a very considerable expense, as nearly 800 persons must be employed in herding, if the same compliment is engaged to the west that is here, and eastward to the Falls, yet, notwithstanding all this, the slaughter of pigs is as great as ever; scarcely an engine comes in but the cow-catcher appears as if it had been cleaning up the offal of a slaughter-house, and one day last week, being at the depot, when a train arrived, we heard the engine-driver boast that "this had been a good trip; he had killed three cows near London, on the downward trip, and a sow and ten pigs on returning from the Falls." The great reason why these animals trespass on the road, is in search of water, and if the company could turn the springs that run along their line, to the upper side and outside, the cattle, then, having plenty of water, might soon forget the lake and their old haunts, and would not attack the fences as they now do; as it is, however, there is every day a very serious loss of valuable stock and property, not to say anything of the danger to the trains. The only remedy that appears possible at present, is to kill the whole of the old stock off. One man to every mile of the road will do very little to keep the track clear—pigs will creep in almost everywhere —Spectator.

A Farmer's Wife I'll be.

BY N. STONE.

AIR - The bonnie brier bush.

I'm a wild and laughing girl, just turned of sweet sixteen,
As full of mischief and of fun as ever you have seen;
And when I am a woman grown, no city beaux for me;
If e'er I marry in my life a farmer's wife I'll be.

I love a country life,—I love the joyous breeze,
I love to hear the singing birds among the lofty trees;
The lowing herds and bleating flocks make music sweet for me,
If e'er I marry in my life, a farmer's wife I'll be.

I love to feed the chickens and I love to milk the cows,
I love to hear the farmer's boy a whistling at his plough;
And fields of corn and waving grain are pleasant sights to me;
If e'er I marry in my life, a farmer's wife I'll be

I love to see the orchards, where the golden apples grow;
I love to walk in meadows where bright streamlets flow;
And flowery banks and shady woods have many charms for me,
If e'er I marry in my life, a farmer's wife I'll be.

Let other girls, who love it best, enjoy the gloomy town,
Midst dusty walls and dusty streets to ramble up and down;
But flowery fields and shady woods, and sunny skies for me,
If e'er I marry in my life, a farmer's wife I'll be.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle here in by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition, or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as a theme of Great Britain, to clerk its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS, JOHN D. PECK, AMOS G. BEMAN, JOHN JONES, J. D. BONNER, J. MCCUNE SMITH, } Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now trimuphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shattesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the desitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number:

PRESIDENT.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

It was moved by the Rev. J. Wemberley, Rector of Dorrington, seconded by the Rev. George Wilkins, and adopted:—

"That the best thanks of this Meeting be presented to the Earl of Shaftesbury, for his kindness in presiding on the present occasion."

Constitution of the National Council.

For the purpose of improving the character, developing the intelligence, maintaining the rights and organizing a Union of the Colored People of the Free States, the National Convention does hereby ordain and institute the

"NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE COLORED PEOPLE."

Art. 1. This Council shall consist of two members from each State, represented in this Convention, to be elected by this Convention, and two other members from each State to be elected as follows: On the 15th day of November next, and biennially thereafter, there shall be held in each State, a Poll, at which each colored inhabitant may vote who pays ten cents as poll-tax, and each State shall elect, at such election, such delegates to State Legislatures, twenty in number from each State, at large. The election to be held at such places and under such conditions as the public meetings in such localities may determine. The members of the National Council in each State, shall receive, canvass, and declare the result of such vote. The State Council, thus elected, shall meet on the first Monday in January, 1854, and elect additional members to the National Council, in proportion of one to five thousand of the colored population of such State; and the members of council thus elected, to take office on the sixth day of July next, and all to hold office during two years from that date; at the end of which time another general election by State council shall take place of members to constitute their successors in office, in the same numbers as above. The State council of each State shall have full power over the internal concerns of said State.

Art. 2. The members of the first council shall be elected by this convention, which shall designate out of the number, a President, a Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, corresponding Secretary, and committee of five on Manual Labor—a committee of five on Protective Unions—of five on Business Relations—of five on Publications.

Art. 3. The committee on Manual Labor School shall procure funds and organize said School in accordance with the plans adopted by this National Convention, with such modifications as experience or necessity may dictate to them. The committee shall immediately incorporate itself as an academy under "The General Committee of the State of——," and shall constitute the Board of Trustees of the Manual Labor School, with full power to select a location in the State designated by the National council, to erect buildings, appoint or dismiss instructers in the literary or mechanical branches. There shall be a farm attached to the School.

Art. 4. The committee on Protective Unions shall institute a Protective Union for the purchase and sale of articles of domestic consumption, and shall unite and aid in the formation of branches anxiliary to their own.

Art. 5. The committee on Business Relations, shall establish an office, in which they shall keep a registry of colored mechanics, artizans and business men throughout the Union. They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and boys seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital, skill, or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. They shall receive for sale or exhibition, products of the skill and labor of colored people.

Art. 6. The committee on Publication shall collect all facts, statistics and statements, all laws and historical records and biographies of the colored people, and all books by colored authors. They shall have for the safe keeping of these documents, a Library, with a Reading Room and Museum. The committee shall also publish replies to any assaults, worthy of note, made upon the character or condition of the colored People.

Art. 7. Each committee shall have absolute control over its special department; shall make its own by-laws, and in case of any vacancy occurring, shall fill up the same forthwith subject to the confirmation of the council. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and financial, and shall submit a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 9. In all cases of the meetings of the National Council, or the committees, the traveling expenses (if any) of the members shall be paid out of the respective funds.

Art. 10. The council shall immediately establish a bureau in the place of its meeting: and the same rooms shall, as far as possible, be used by the several committees for their various purposes. The council shall have a clerk, at a moderate salary, who will keep a record of their transactions, and prepare a condensed report of the committees for publication; and, also, a registry of the friends of the cause.

Art. 11. The expenses of the council shall be defrayed by the fees of membership of subsocieties or councils, to be organised throughout the States. The membership fee shall be one cent per week,

Art. 12. A member of the council shall be member of only one of the committees thereof.

Art. 13. All officers holding funds, shall give security in double the amount likely to be in their hands. This security to be given to the three first officers of the council.

Art. 14. The council shall have power to make such Bye-Laws as are necessary for their proper government

The following resolutions, having a direct bearing upon the plan of organization were adopted by the Convention and are therefore appended to the Council's Constitution.]

Resolved That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committees.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a premium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That any State applying for admission into this Union, shall be admitted on such terms, as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and separate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

Poetry.

The Beleaguered City.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

I have heard in some old marvellous tale,
Some legend strange and vague,
That a midnight host of spectres pale
Beleaguered the walls of Prague.

Beside the Moldan's rushing stream,
With the wan moon overhead,
There stood as in an awful dream;
The army of the dead

White as a sea-fog, landward bound,
The spectral camp was seen,
And, with a sorrowful, deep sound,
The River flowed between.

No other voice or sound was there,
No drum, nor sentry's pace:
The mist-like banners clasped the air,
As clouds with clouds embraced.

But when the cathedral bell
Proclaimed the morning prayer,
The white pavilions rose and fell
On the alarmed air.

Down the broad valley fast and far
The troubled army fled;
Up rose the glorious morning-star,
The ghastly host was dead

I have read in the marvellous heart of man,
That strange and mystic scroll,
That an army of phantoms vast and wan
Beleaguer the human soul.

Encamped beside Life's rushing stream,
In fancy's misty light,
Gigantic shapes and shadows gleam
Portentious through the night.

Upon its midnight battle-ground
The spectral camp is seen;
And, with a sorrowful, deep sound,
Flows the river of life between.

No other voice or sound is there,
In the army of the grave;
No other challenge breaks the air,
But the rushing of Life's wave.

And when the solemn and deep church bell
Entreats the soul to pray
The midnight phantoms feel the spell,
The shadows sweep away.

Down the broad Vale of Tears afar
The spectral camp is fled,
Faith shineth as a morning star,
Our ghastly fears are dead.

Biographical Sketch of Thorwaldsen.

Seventeen hundred and seventy was not a remarkable year in the general annals of Europe. Whitfield died; Lord North was made Prime Minister; Marie Antoinette first displayed at Versailles the grace and brilliance which inspired the well known rhapsody of Burke. Of the great events that were preparing on both sides of the Atlantic, politicians saw little or nothing; but in the history of genius it stands recorded as the birth-year of Thorwaldsen; and the lovers of art, in ages yet remote, will look back to it with veneration and love.

Thorwaldsen's father was a wood-carver; his mother, the daughter of a country vicar. In the records of early Scandinavian voyages, his father's name has been traced to one of those hardy mariners whose claims to the original discovery of America, after having been forgotten for centuries, have been so successfully revived in our own day; and Thorwaldsen was a decendant of the first American that was ever born of European parents on the western shores of the Atlantic. His childhood was a rough one, of which he never loved to speak. His father worked in the navy-yard, spent his little earnings as fast as he got them; was good-hearted, kind, and indulgent; and this is about all that is known of him. His mother had been very beautiful, but poverty and its hard struggles had deprived her early of her personal charms. Neither of them lived to see their son's triumph.

Two or three anecdotes of his early days have been preserved. One day he went out with another boy to steal apples, and had clambered, with the help of his companion, to the top of the fence, when they were discovered. His companion ran away, without troubling himself about Thorwaldsen, who fell and struck his chin against the fence, inflicting a wound that left its traces there to the day of his death.

Another time he had got on the top of the sentry-box near the equestrian statue in the great square of Copenhagen. Here, too, his companions got off safely, while he was carried to the guard-house, and his parents publicly reprimanded for their son's trangression.

In art, he got his first lessons from his father, who quickly taught him all he knew. At eleven he began to attend the evening drawing-school at the Academy of Art. His father and mother taught him to read, and this was all the direct instruction that he ever received. At seventeen he won his first prize at the Academy, a small silver medal, and his parents, who had scarcely forgotten the public reprimand he had drawn down upon them, now had the satisfaction of seeing his name honorably mentioned in the newspapers.

Two years afterwards, he gained a second prize, and warmly encouraged to devote himself exclusively to art. Abildgaard, an historial painter, and one of the Professors at the Academy, took particular pains to give a right direction to his studies; and some young artists, whose acquaintance he formed, set him upon a course of reading, which laid the first sure foundations of a more general culture.

Every year the Academy gave a gold medal to the successful competitor in the department of sculpture. Thorwaldsen was persuaded by his friends to try for it. The candidates on these occasions are shut up, each by himself, in a room, where they receive their subject and prepare their designs, without any chance of assistance. When Thorwaldsen found himself alone, with the verse of Scripture that was to furnish his subject before him, he was so terrified by the fear of failing, that he tried to made his escape by a back staircase. Fortunately for art, one of the Professors met him on his way, and succeeded in persuading him to return. He went back, won the prize, and with it a new protector, Count Reventlow, Minister of Foreign Affairs. The subject was, "Heliodorus driven from the temple."

His next prize, which he gained after another interval of two years, brought with it the right to travel three years on a pension. Instead, however, of going at once, he remained four years longer in Copenhagen, on an annual stipend, studying the languages and science, and preparing himself to perform his part worthily. Both his patrons found him abundant employment. When the time for starting came, his heart failed him; and here again we have to thank his friends for urging him to the second great and decisive step in his career. War was raging on land and sea, and it was no easy matter to get to Italy. The frigate Thetis, however, was bound to the Mediterranean; and Reventlow secured him a passage in her. He bade his father and friends adieu, but did not dare to say good-bye to his mother, who could not bring herself to look upon a separation which her heart told her must be final. So, without telling her that he was actually going, he put a small box of ducats into her hands, and stole away. It was the 13th of August, 1796.

Fraught with gales and the daily danger of falling in with enemies, the passage was a long and adventurous one, giving him a glimpse of Spanish life at Malaga, and of Moorish at Tripoli. All the officers took a great liking to him; and the captain and chaplain tried hard, but vainly, to get him to take advantage of his leisure and learn Italian. But this he would not do; and when the hour of separation came, he was so unwilling to separate himself from his countrymen that he would fain have given up his travelling pension and returned with them to Copenhagen. But his friends were too true to listen to him; and embarking, with many tears, in a small coaster that was going from Malta to Palermo, he went first to Sicily, thence to Naples, where he staid a month, and at last to Rome, which he reached on the 8th of March, 1797; a day to which he used to look back, when his fame was at its height, as the true day of his birth.

There was already a celebrated Dane at Rome, the antiquarian Zoega, of which Heeren makes pleasant mention in his autobiography. Thorwaldsen brought him letters, and was received kindly. The advice and criticisms of the old man were of great service to him; but Zoega did not fully comprehead the character of his young countryman, and soon wearied him with his rigorous style of criticism, which genius will never submit to unless it finds its merit is appreciated. As for Thorwaldsen, he felt, to borrow his own expression, that the snow had melted away from his eyes. For the first time, he knew himself and his own powers, and resolutely set himself to cultivate them. He studied hard, not drawing and modelling only, but pursuing the other studies to which Zoega had directed his attention, and which he now felt he must master before he could be perfectly at home in his art. Three years he toiled day and night resolutely. Many were the statues he set up and finished, and when he had done all he could to them, either destroyed or mutilated, as yet unworthy to be seen. His compositions on paper were still more numerous, some of them finished drawings, but the greater part sketches of subjects and studies from the life. His ideal rose with his power of execution; and these years were a kind of struggle to reveal himself, which still ended in the consciousness of something more to be revealed.

Meanwhile, time had been gliding by him, and the term of his pension was almost expired. He now resolved to do something which should prove to his country that her bounty had not been injudiciously bestowed. His mind was already richly stored with mythology, and from this treasure-house of sculpture he chose the Hero of the Golden Fleece on his triumphant return. It was finished in April, 1801. But when it was all done, he became dissatisfied and destroyed it. He was not discouraged. The subject had taken a strong hold of his imagination, and after a short interval he came back to it again.

This time, however, instead of confining himself to the size of life, he chose the heroic size, the natural proportions of heroes and demi-gods. It was completed in January, 1803, and immediately attracted that attention which, in Rome, is given only to works of unquestionable merit.

And now, he was to go home. His pension had expired, his means were exhausted, he had neither hopes nor commissions. He packed up his small stock, leaving his statue to be sent to Denmark by the first opportunity, and was only waiting for his travelling companion, a German artist, to enter the carriage, when his companion came to tell him he must wait another day. The trunk was carried up stairs again, and Thorwaldsen went to take another look at his Jason. While he was standing before it, a cicerone came in, with a rich English traveller who had heard it spoken of, and wished to see it. "How much would it cost to put it in marble?" asked the visitor, whose intelligent eye was instantly struck by its merit. It was the first time Thorwaldsen had ever heard this welcome question. "Six hundred sequins," said he. "Six hundred sequins is not enough; I will give you eight hundred, and advance you a sum to begin with." The name of the visitor, which, as that of Luman Reed of our own city, should be written in letters of gold, was Thomas Hope, the author of "Anastasius."

It is not our intention to follow Thorwaldsen minutely through the rest of his career—still a struggle for many years, not for existence, but for supremacy, and then a triumph, such as no artist ever had before. The struggle for supremacy was long, and not free from bitterness. Canova was at the height of his fame, and in the full possession of his eminent powers. A firm band of disciples and admirers was gathered around him, many of whom were bound to him, also, by the ties of gratitude. Naturally large-minded, and of noble instincts, he used generously the immense fortune and influence which he had won by the successful cultivation of his arts. But his love of glory had grown with possession, and he could ill brook a rival in the field which he had been accustomed to look upon as his own. It was long before his partisans would acknowledge the claims of the young competitor, equally unwelcome as a Protestant and a foreigner. But statue after statue came from his hands, with a rapidity and growing perfection which compelled them to treat him with respect. At first they contented themselves with dividing the field; and as Thorwaldsen had already manifested his predilection for bas-relief, they spoke of that as his peculiar and unquestionable province—Thorwaldsen for bas-relief, Canova for statues. But at last they were constrained to acknowledge that he could make statues too. In 1811, he was appointed Professor in the Academy of St. Luke, and shortly afterwards made his great bas-relief of the [illegible] spread his fame over Europe. Commissions, honors, and titles poured in upon him from every quarter. Kings and Emperors came to visit [illegible]; and in the visits which [illegible] Austria, and Poland, he was treated with the attention reserved for the highest rank. He made three visits to Denmark. On the first, he was received with every mark of respect, and apartments prepared for him in the Academy of Art, where he was constantly surrounded by all the eminent men of the country. On the second, a frigate was put under his orders, and was sent for him to Leghorn. And when she arrived the whole city poured forth to meet him. Cannons were fired, bells rung, banners displayed, and his carriage dragged in triumph by the [illegible] of men who contended for the honor [illegible]. He had resolved to [illegible] and the building that was to receive them, under the name of the Thorwaldsen Museum, was begun [illegible] visit. His return to Rome [illegible] triumphal receptions; and at Rome, at the [illegible] a large band of friends met him with a solemn welcome at the Milvian bridge.

Yet, he was still the same [illegible] man, in the midst of all the honors, working about as he had always done, and living in the same apartments that he had occupied at the first dawn of his fortunes. In these latter years he had sought his subjects chiefly in Scriptures, and modelled, among many other things, a series of bas-reliefs from scenes in the life of Christ. Though still strong and without any symptoms of intellectual decay, he knew that the end was approaching, and looked calmly from the height of an ambition more than gratified, towards the mysteries of the future [illegible] his final repose [illegible] where [illegible] he passed through the court, was seen to fix a calm and thoughtful look upon the elevated spot in the centre, which he had chosen for his burial-place. And there his ashes rest, with all the records of his greatness around him. Happy man, who, living for a great and noble end, consecrated the fruits of his labors to the glory of his country! Happy country, which fostered so kindly the genius of her son, and freely bestowed in life those honors which are so often coldly reserved for the grave!

Man's Sphere.

BY MRS. SWISSHELM.

We are glad to see that woman are repaying the immense debt of gratitude our sex owes to mankind, for the very great pains which have been taken to define woman's sphere. "One of the strong-minded" addressed the editor of Putnam, in the September number, and in return for a late article in that magazine on "women and the woman's movement," defines the proper sphere of man. The male geographer assumes that man is the best judge of what is proper in women, and vice versa, she improves upon the suggestions by marking some outlines of a man's sphere. It is so very common for each man, in defining woman's sphere, to say what he should like his wife to do, and what to leave undone, that she retaliates by saying what she should like her husband to do, and what to refrain from doing. She knows a man who works in wood, and as she would not like to have her husband so employed, concludes that worsted work is out of man's sphere, and expects that all men will avoid contact with [illegible] wool, in order to make themselves worthy of this distinction. It is no matter that the wife of the worsted worker may fully approve his employment; his sex is to be elevated to the dignity ours has already obtained, of being required to make themselves generally agreeable to the other sex, and particularly conform to the taste of each individual of it.

It is this that has so long been demanded of woman. It is not enough that she please her own husband, fathers or brothers, but every scribbler and stump orator in the community demands that the entire sex conform their actions to his taste. This lady writer complains, with the same show of reason, that many men engage in occupations which she should disapprove, and requires them all to consult her wishes about what is proper to be done.

As Nature has specially ordained woman for the gentler offices of the world's work, so insist that no woman shall do anything else—except menial drudgery, and she replies by saying:

"It requires but a glance at the masculine man to perceive, that though he does not combine in himself all human excellences, he is strong and brave and far-seeing. It is evident, therefore, that all men of all times, whatever be their individual characteristics or tendencies, whatever the measure of their capacities, ought to be engaged in such labors either bodily or mental, as are suited to the Herculean powers of their sex. There must be no doffing the lion's skin to spin with Omphale. 'Nature pardons no mistakes.' She has formed the male man to do the hard work and the hard thinking of the world, and whenever he forsakes his proper business, the interests of society must suffer in consequence.

"It is undeniable that there are multitudes of men (weak-minded men) who condescend to light and easy pursuits, far more suitable to the delicate perceptions, the instinctive tact, and aptness for retail which characterise woman. This is a growing evil and needs to be checked. Instead of 'fulfilling their mission,' by performing the onerous tasks that are too heavy and exhausting for the delicate constitution of woman, and unsuited to her higher nature, men have undertaken a great variety of manufactures requiring neither strength of muscle nor vigor of intellect. They have condescended to petty shop-keeping, to the vending of laces, and ribbons, and dolls' heads. Fancy the sinewy arm, and strong hand of a man deploying webbs of gauzy texture before the eyes of lady customers,—and worse yet, with 'large brain,' capable of I know not what generalizations' deducting the cent a yard, 'because it is you!'

"An hour ago, I dismissed from my door a stalwart youth, equipped for the battle of life, with a small tin trunk full of various colored buttons. Fy on him! Is not the Hoosac yet to be tunnelled—the North Pole to be reached—the Pacific railroad and Atlantic telegraph yet to be constructed—perpetual motion and the quadrature of the circle to be arrived at? If these things are too high for him, let him chop wood, become the 'chambermaid of cattle,' or vindicate his growing beard in some way. 'We feel it to be our duty' to warn the public against the dangerous example of these pedestrian sellers of buttons and sowing silk. To be sure it is a very harmless thing when only now and then an unsexed masculine takes a fancy to so small a business, but suppose any considerable number of men should forsake their 'proper sphere' to engage in such pursuits; in short, (for our reason and rhetoric may as well jump at once to the customary climax,) we should not like to have 'our husband' peddle buttons, and therefore it is unbecoming for any man to do so.

"Perhaps [illegible] of woman, by [illegible] have [illegible] of [illegible] schools, as never those schools exist. Now, if there is a man, in one of our fair States, that does not know that the peculiar, especial business of all women, at all ages, and under all circumstances, is the care of children, 'to mould the rising generation,' to train up the future men of our Republic in the way they should go, that man must be extremely ignorant. Of course, he does not 'take the papers.' But women, even the mothers of the children, are shut out from all legitimate influence over the public schools. We ought not to submit to this. The next thing, we shall find the nursery itself invaded, and men will take the very pap-spoon and bib from our hands. If the 'men' are really sincere when they say that our especial mission is to mould the characters and form the minds and manners of the young, we may hope to live to see the dawn of the day when their expaced 'judgment' shall slowly bring them to the conclusion, that, if woman is to train and educate the future men of the Republic, it is necessary for her to have the legal and pecuniary means of doing so. But our feminine impulsiveness is such that we can hardly refrain from goading on the deliberate sex a little, on this subject.

"'We are willing that a man should dabble in ink and write books so long as he doing so does not involve the wife's comfort,' but let his books always be of the masculine order—vigorous—original—humorous—profound. Dreams, and fancies, and reveries, though beautiful as the fringes of the morning cloud, and sparkling as the early dew, are not for him. Shallowness of thought, and inconsequential arguments are unpardonable in the strong-minded sex. We cannot forgive the man that is so unwise as to offer to the reading public, weak and worthless trash. He had better follow the plough, stand at the anvil, or even sit and lean his 'large brain' against the wall, like poor Mr. Jellyby."

KEEPING A GOOD LOOK-OUT.—An Irish brick-layer was one day brought to the Edinburgh infirmary severely injured from a fall from a house-top. The medical man in attendance asked the sufferer at what time the accident occurred. "Two o'clock, yer honor," was the reply. On being asked how he came to fix the hour so accurately, he answered, "Because I saw the people at dinner, through a window, as I was coming down."

From the Philadelphia Merchant, Aug. 19th.

The Merchant.

The following little morceau, which we came across accidentally the other day, is perfect in its way. It contains the whole of the life history of thousands in a nutshell; and it is as good as a whole volume of morality. How many may be found all over the land whose entire existence from the age of twenty till dusky death snatches them away, is made up of

"Tare and tret,

through toil and sweat, forgetting, or rather never thinking that life's lease seems not quite so long as the sun; and that it has conditions and claims relating to a higher sphere of action and a nobler state of being; conditions and claims that cannot be avoided nor neglected without robbing our present existance of much of its loveliness, and the beauty and grandeur of its proportions.

It is not quite enough that the books in the counting-room of business life are balanced. The sharp, shrewd, hard-dealing money-maker may set himself down in the splendid parlor of his princely mansion, and say, "Thank God, I am even with the world and owe it nothing!" There may be some One Else whose books don't show quite as fair as his, having been kept on different principles and different views of the true and the right. The ledger book on High may not balance with the ledger book below, showing that "there is more in heaven," if not on earth, "than is dreamed of in his philosophy." But ponder well the lesson conveyed in the following lines:—

Tare and tret,
Box and net,
Box and hogshead, dry and wet,
Rotten and [illegible],
Of every grade,
Wholesale, retail, will you trade?

Goods for sale,
Rod or bale,
Ell or quarter, yard or nail,
Every dye,
Will you buy?
None can sell as cheap as I.

Time's a-flying away
While [illegible]
And [illegible]
Of [illegible]
Here [illegible]
Cash [illegible]

Bye and bye
He will die—
But the ledger book on high
Shall unfold
How he sold,
How he got and used his gold!

Is the Human Stature Diminishing?

It is a very common opinion, that in early ages of the world, men in general possessed superior physical properties, and were of greater size than they are at present; and this notion of diminished stature and strength seems to have been just as prevalent in ancient times as at present. Pliny observes of the human height, that "the whole race of mankind is daily becoming smaller;" an alarming prospect if it had been true. Homer more than once makes a very disparaging comparison between his own degenerate contemporaries and the heroes of the Trojan war. But all the facts and circumstances which can be brought forward on this subject, tend to convince us, that the human form has not degenerated and that men of the present age are of the same stature as in the beginning of the world. In the first place, though we read both in sacred and profane history of giants, yet they were at the time when they lived, esteemed as wonders and far above the ordinary proportions of mankind. All the remains of the human body (as bones, and particularly the teeth) which have been found unchanged in the most ancient urns and burial places, demonstrate this point clearly. The oldest coffin in the world is that found in the great pyramid of Egypt; and Mr. Greaves observes that this sarcophagus hardly exceeds the size of our ordinary coffins, being scarcely six feet and a-half long. From looking also at the height of mummies which have been brought to this country, we must conclude that those who inhabited Egypt two or three thousand years ago were not superior in size to the present inhabitants of that country. Lastly, all the facts, which can be collected from ancient works of art, from armor, as helmets and brestplates, or from buildings designed for the abode and accomodation of men, concur in strengthening the proofs against any decay in nature. That man has not degenerated in stature in consequence of the effects of civilization is clear; because the inhabitants of savage countries, as the natives of America, Africa, Australia, or South Sea Islands, do not exceed us in size.—Scottish Guardian.

THE MAJOR'S LAST.—Major M——e, of Washington, who is very fond of a good joke, perpetrated one the other night, by which several were victimized, but it was good, notwithstanding: "Speaking of the voracity of sharks," said the Major, "when the steamer Baltic was lying near Alexandria, some too years since, the steward lost overboard a silver ladle of considerable value. Nearly a year subsequent a shark was captured near the mouth of the Potomac, and on being opened, what do you think was found in him?" "The silver ladle, of course," we replied, quite unsuspectingly. "No," said the Major, "his maw."

Such is Life.

From the local column of the St. Louis Intelligencer the following item is translated:—

"SUCH IS LIFE!"—One day last week, early in the morning, that miserable conveyance, which takes the poor friendless dead to the City Cemetry, at the City's expence, halted in front of a house in a street of the southern part of the city. The driver alighted from the waggon, entered the house, but appeared again soon after, carrying, in company with another alike disinterested looking, man a coffin made of rough boards. The coffin was placed on the waggon, and it moved slowly over the deserted streets towards the cemetery.

"Not one followed the wagon with a sorry look—not one stood at her grave with a feeling heart, when the earth fell upon the coffin; and yet, this coffin contained the corpse of a lady, who once was adored by hundreds—who once was honored, extolled and envied in society—who could command riches, and who, but a few years ago, before she trod the shores of this continent, could expect a happy and contented old age.

This lady was Rosa Neschemi, the daughter of an immensely wealthy Polish Nobleman. In early youth she was taken to the Imperial Court of Austria, where, in her 18th year, she was married to a French Nobleman, who was also very rich. Rosa Neschemi lived many long and happy years, partly upon the possessions of her husband, partly travelling through Germany, Spain, Italy, and England, and gave birth to three sons, who received the best education and upon whom the eyes of the parents rested with great pride.

"But then, the July Revolution at Paris came, Rosa's husband took a considerable and active part in it, and on the 28th he fell from the effect of three shots which he received. His name is still honored with a place on the column in the Place de la Bastille.

Of the sons, the eldest one, an exceedingly gifted young man, was surpassingly successful in Spain, and was, at that time private secretary to King Ferdinand. After the King's death, he removed to a village in the neighborhood of Valencia, where it is believed, he fell a prey to the dagger of an assassin.

"The second son, who had joined himself to the ministers of the church, was an especial favourite of Pope Gregory. He died also soon after that event.

"The third son, yet very young, remained with his mother, who found an asylum in Switzerland, whither she carried the remnants of her ruined fortune. In his sixteenth year he left his mother and came to America. In New Orleans he soon found employment and earned much money. Bad associations, and his own inclination to dissipation, led him to deviate from the proper path, and some five years ago, he grasped at the last and most contemptible means to save his credit, he persuaded his old mother to cross the ocean. She could not refuse the prayer of her only son, and arrived.

She succeeded in bringing with her $600,000, which sum was spent by her son in a very short time. About a year ago he ended his career in New Orleans, being employed as a deputy sheriff, he killed a Creole by stabbing him. He escaped to California, and his old mother to whom New Orleans naturally became a place of extreme hatred, turned her steps toward St. Louis.

One day last week, early in the morning, the miserable city hearse conveyed the remains of Rosa Neschemi to the last unwaptfor resting place? Such is life!

SINGULAR FACT IN DEATH STATISTICS.—It appears that the total number of deaths in the cholera year (1849) for all England and Wales, was 440,839; but in 1850, the number of deaths fell to 368,995, "being not only 71,844 less than in the cholera year, but even less than the number of deaths of the year preceding that of the cholora, by as many as 30,832. * * If we take the deaths of the two years together which preceded the cholera, and strikes the mean, and treat the year of the cholera, and the compensating year that follows, in the same manner, we shall find that the four years present nearly the same average. * * So that in reality, it is found, when the aggregate of the four years is taken, either for the whole of England, or for the metropolis only, that no greater number of people died in those years because of the cholera intervening, than if the cholera had not visited us.—[Dr. Granville, in the Medical Times and Gazette.

BE INDUSTRIOUS.—We do not mean here the industry of the hands alone; but the perseverance in whatever we undertake, that is the sure precursor of ultimate success. Never allow the mind or the body to stagnate; activity is necessary to the health of both. Always have some worthy end in view, in whatever you undertake; remembering that to fail with good intentions, is more honorable than success in a evil cause.

A DREAM INTERPRETED.—A bashful Yokel was paying his addresses to a gay lass of the country, who had long despaired of bringing things to a crisis. Yokel called one day, when she alone was at home. After settling the merits of the weather Miss said, looking slyly into his face, "I dreamed of you last night!"

"Did you! why now!"

"Yes, I dreamed you kissed me!"

"Why now! What did you dream your mother said?"

"Oh I dreamed she wasn't at home!"

A light now dawned on Yokel's intellect, and directly something was heard to crack—perhaps Yokel's whip, and perhaps not, but about a month more, and they were twain. &c.

Agricultural.

Summer and Winter Food of Cows.

The editor of the American Agriculturist has recently visited the farm of S. B. Halliday, near Providence, R. I. His farm contains 130 acres, part of which is used as a market garden. Of course, land cultivated in this way needs thorough manuring, and a large number of cows are kept "constantly manufacturing milk for the city and fertilizers for the farm." The cows are soiled—in other words, fed with green food in the stables during the summer months. The following method is adopted:

Mr. H. feeds his cows, begining in the spring with green rye till the stalks get quite hard and never after this, if necessary by cutting them up short. The rye is continued till clover is ready, which forms the next food. Clover is followed by green millett, which for this purpose, is sown early as possible in the spring. Corn sown in drills at intervals of 10 to 15 days—follows millett, and continues till frost, when millett or oats is again resorted to, and used till the ground freezes up.

The winter food of his cows consists of cut corn stalks, roots, oil meal and shorts. The daily food of each cow is 2 quarts of oil meal, 4 quarts of shorts, half a bushel of turnips and carriots, and as much cut corn stalks as she will eat. He says that from considerable experince and observation, he is satisfied that no root contributes so much to the quantity as the turnips, while carrots do not add much to the quantity, but greatly enriches the quality. He is quite certain that oil-cake is the best milk-yielding food. He says that in feeding turnips, long-continued practice has proved, beyond a doubt, that a little dry hay, or any dry food, given to a cow just before milking, will entirely prevent any turnip flavor from being communicated to the milk.

Turn Your Fence Posts.—It is mentioned as a curious fact that a farmer in Connecticut who recently took up a fence after it had been standing fourteen years, found all those posts solid which had been inverted from the way in which they originally grew, while all those which had been set as they grew were rotted off at the bottom. Heads down therefore, seems a specific against decay.

Saving Grass Seeds.

Many farmers neglect to save their own grass seeds because it needs attention at a time when they are most busy with their grain and hay; but if farmers generally would make it a point to save seed for their own use, they would find their account in it, both in prime cost, and in not being imposed upon by buying foul seed from another man's farm, who had no interest in keeping their land free from weeds.

Orchard Grass.

Orchard Grass is among the first to ripen, and will be ready to cut from the 20th of June to the first of July, according to location and soil. This should be either reaped or cradled and immediately put in compact shocks, to stand a couple of weeks. The stubble may then be mowed and hayed, taking care not to disturb the shocks. When dry, the shocks should be moved very carefully to the barn for storage, as the seed shells out easily.

Kentucky Blue Grass

Kentucky Blue Grass comes in season for harvest about with timothy. The best method of gathering the seed of this grass is by stripping the heads by hand; the process is rather slow, but no other way will bring the seed in good condition, as it is too light and chaffy to be threshed and winnowed. At the price for which it sells in market, even this slow way pays well.

Meadow Fescue.

Meadow Fescue (English Blue Grass) is ripe early in July, and having a tolerable heavy seed, can be cut by the cradle or sickle, and when dry, threshed and winnowed carefully to separate the chaff.

Foul Meadow Grass.

Foul Meadow Grass ripens its seed in the last of July. We consider this as the best grass that can be raised for meadow swails and marsh lands. It is fine, nutritious, and yields a great burden; and, like a good natured wife—will bear a good deal of neglect without spoiling. When in head this grass nearly resembles red top, and is often mistaken for it. The seed is very fine and sells at a high price—as much by the bushel as clover seed, though much lighter.

Timothy Seed.

Timothy Seed ripens in July, and as it is contained in strong heads, is very easily harvested and got out, either by reaping, cradling, or with such a machine as Wagoner's clover harvester, simply taking off the heads. We wish to bespeak the attention of farmers generally to saving the best seeds of these leading grasses.—Ohio Cul.

Letter from Canton.

Canton, China, June 20, 1854.

While the Nebraska bill and the war in Europe are absorbing the attention of your readers, events on this side of the world may possess but little interest. The rebellion is, of course, the main topic here. A short account of its origin and progress may not be out of place, as an introduction to my letter. In 1850, numerous bands of robbers in Canton and Kwang-si Provinces united under Hung-tai-tsiuen, as Emperor, with the title of Tien-teh, who appointed six generals and ministers, with the title of Kings. After several engagements at various places, Yung-ngan-fu, in Kwang-si fell into their hands, on the 27th August, 1851. Here the Emperor had established his court, coined money, &c.

In making their escape from this city, when surrounded by Imperialists, many rebels were killed, and Tien-teh taken captive, sent to Peking, and executed, in June, 1852. After this, the insurgents proceeded in a north-east direction, and about the end of June took Tsiuen-chau-fu, and in July Tsu-chau-hien, in Hunan Province. They then attacked the capital of Hanan, but were repulsed; and proceeding northward, took Yok-chau-fu, near the end of 1852. The capture of this important city, situated at the junction of the outlet of the great lake with the Yang-tsz-kiang, was the commencement of that series of unparalleled successes which attended the descent of the Yang-tsz-kiang for three hundred miles, and ended in the fall of Nanking on the 21st of March, 1853. During the summer and fall of this year, the rebels advanced northward, with various success, until they had several very important cities on the Grand Canal and in the Province of Chili, in which Peking is situated, but were driven back again by the Imperial forces, who regained possession of the cities in Chili Province, and two or three cities on the northern portion of the Grand Canal.

According to latest reliable accounts, the insurgents had possession of three provincial capitals, and of parts of five Provinces on both sides the Yang-tsz-kiang. The territory which they control contains about forty millions of inhabitants, and some of the richest soil of the Empire. They have three armies in the field, one in Shan-tung Province, which has met with great reverses, one in Ngan-hwai, and one in Huuan. Hung-siu-tsiuen seems to be the chief, since the death of Tien-teh, and he is styled Tai-ping-wong. This man is a native of Canton Province, and spent several months in 1846 with Rev. I. J. Roberts, an American Baptist Missionary, stationed in this city. From him was obtained the knowledge of the Bible, which gave origin to the religious element of the insurrection.

Very different views are entertained here, as elsewhere, as to what is to be hoped for mankind from this feature of this wonderful movement. On the one hand, much good is expected to result from the distribution of the Bible among the rebel forces, and from the opposition to idolatry, opium smoking, and other vices. On the other hand, the leaders of the insurrection seem to use Bible truth as a foundation for their own pretended revelations from Heaven, and it is said that neither the cause of humanity nor religion can be advanced by a mixture of error and truth, which teaches men to murder their fellow-beings, and that death on the battle-field is a sure passport to endless bliss. The philanthropist, however, will look upon this and all the commotions which now agitate the world, with the earnest hope that the unseen hand of Him who controls the destinies of nations, may cause to result therefrom relielf both to those who are oppressed by tyrants, and those who are bound down by chains of ignorance and superstition.

In Canton all is quiet, and the Government exercises great vigilance. At several places in the Province, local disturbances, unconnected with the rebellion, have taken place. Near Whampoa, several villages have been at war with each other, because of some old feud between two families, or clans. Many persons have been killed, and one village of three thousand inhabitants destroyed, the families taking refuge in Whampoa. The American steamer Vincennes has come to that place, for the protection of American interests there and in Canton.

It has been rumored that the Russian fleet in the Pacific were about to attack Hong Kong; in consequence of which, the authorities have been fortifying Victoria, enrolling volunteers, &c. Russian ships of war may, however, find enough to do elsewhere.

Pirates are very numerous in the China sea, and frequent accounts are received of their plundering junks and trading boats. Sometimes they attack the larger vessels of foreign nations.

Mr. McLane has gone to Nanking, and we expect to hear the result of his visit by the next steamer from Shanghai.

Our Foreign Policy in St. Domingo.

There seems to be no longer any room to doubt that the administration have determined to recognize the independance and sovereignty of the Spanish end of the island of Hayti, which has been for the last eight or ten years in a state of revolt against the Imperial Government. This step will raise to questions for the consideration of the American people of no ordinary gravity. The first is, have we a sufficient pretext for lending our countenance and sanction to the revolting Dominicans, to the probable prejudice of our relations with Hayti? And the other is, are we prepared to abandon the narrow and intolerant policy which we have hitherto observed towards governments conducted by Africans and their descendants? We have little to apprehend, it is true, from the ill-will of the Haytian Emperor. He might embarrass the commerce which has grown up with his subjects, now eighth in point of importance to us among the nations of the earth; but the loss would fall upon a limited number of merchants, who might not, perhaps, be able to lift the voice of complaint above the big bass drum with which the State always drowns the clamour of individual suffering. One thing, however, is clear: that it is impossible for that island to be occupied by two governments in harmony with each other. The existence of a divided sovereignty there, has always been the curse of its inhabitants ever since it has been known to civilized man. Columbus found the aboriginal tribes quarrelling with each other; his successors in the East always quarrelled with the French, who colonized the West; and when the Europeans were driven out, about half a century ago, the negroes of the two extremities took up the quarrel and have kept it alive ever since, with the exception of the period of the union under Boyer, which, but for European meddlers, would have been permanent. The proclamation of religious toleration to all sects and denominations of Christians, by the Haytians, was taken advantage of by designing people to induce a revolt from that union, which, under one pretence or another, has been sustained up to the present time. This disunion is a calamity to both extremities of the island, and we should be sorry to see the United States do anything to perpetuate it.

As to the other point, our views are well known. We are not aware of any good reason for refusing to recognize any government that has an independent existence, whatever may be the complexion or character of its people, nor for neglecting to avail ourselves of any commercial advantages which may properly be obtained from them by treaty or otherwise. We would as soon negotiate with Hayti, which takes annually, in our own vessels, between two and three millions of dollars worth of our produce, as with Austria, or Italy, or Spain, that take from us no more, if as much. But such has not been the policy of the country. All black governments have been placed under the ban of the nation; and the Government of Liberia, which was established mainly at the expense and under the auspices of the American people, a government which has proved unexpectedly successful, and which enjoys the general sympathy of the nation, has found no prominent politician in the country, not even its most illustrious friend, Mr. Clay, willing to ask for it the courtesies ordinarily extended to civilized nations.

We are not aware that the political sentiment of the country has recently undergone any change favourable to a relaxation of the rule which has hitherto prevailed upon this subject. What, then, is to be done with the proposition, which will undoubtedly be made at the next Congress, for the recognition of St. Domingo? It is pretended we know, by those who are most directly interested in securing an American protectorate for the Dominican government, that the revolters and their rulers are mostly white people; but that is an error too easily exploded to prevail long. We doubt if any unprejudiced witness can be produced who will testify that there are five hundred whites in all Dominica. In the public service there is not a single white man or an individual who would have been recognized as a citizen under the rules laid down by Messrs. Clayton and Webster during their administrations of the State Department. We give to-day the genealogy of the leading members of the government, including the Congress that is expected to ratify the treaty which Mr. and Mrs. Cazneau are negotiating. It will be seen that they are all blacks or mixed blood.

This statement, with the note accompanying it, has been furnished us by one who resided many years in St. Domingo, and has held one of the highest offices under its government. We have no doubt of its substantial accuracy. It is readily susceptible of demonstration, we believe, that the general proportion of whites to coloured people in both extremities of the island is about the same. The fact that the Spaniards have less of the prejudice against intermarriage with blacks than any other European colonists in St. Domingo, has resulted in producing one distinction, which doubtless exists between the population of the East and West. The Haytians are a nation of blacks, with a large infusion of mulattoes, the Dominicans are a nation of mulattoes with a large infusion of blacks. The proportion of whites in both are about the same. And how should it be otherwise? When Toussiant took possession of St. Domingo, in 1800, the Spaniards emigrated in large numbers to neighboring islands and to South America. There have been two very extensive emigrations from there since, while there has never been any considerable emigration to the east part of the island, except of Haytians from the west. If they have white people in St. Domingo, when did they go or how did they get there?

But this is all a pretence. There are motives for desiring our government to lend its countenance to the Dominican revolters which are not disclosed. It is necessary for the accomplishment of what is proposed to pretend that the Dominicans are white, and are claiming our protection against the persecutions of their black neighbors. In due time that pretence will be exploded and the true state of the case exposed. Then what shall we do? Shall we abandon our policy with regard to African governments, or shall we adhere to it? Shall we recognise the Dominican as a government de facto, and with it the Haytian and Liberian; or shall we make a discrimination in favor of the Dominicans; or shall we have nothing to do with any of them? These are questions which the people, who are soon to choose their representatives in the next Congress, may as well turn over in their minds.—Evening Post.

Genealogy of the Political Authorities of St. Domingo.

Pedro Santana, President of the Republic. His father was an old resident of Hincke, and was a mulatto and slave of Don Miguel de La Cayo. In 1801 they went to reside in the Province of Seybo. The Minister Miguel Bartedo; mulatto on his father's side.

The Minister Aba al Fau and his brothers are mulattoes; his mother was natural daugher of Mr. Justamente, by a mulatto woman. He had her educated as a legitimate child.

General Antonio Duverger, one of the most famous of the Dominican generals, is a mulatto, born at Mirbalais, and of Haytian descent.

Messed Marcano, a general of division and member of Congress, is from Margarita (South America.) His mistress is now residing in that place. She endeavored to make him return, but was unsuccessful. He is a mulatto.

General Moreno, black, now in command of the village of Baya Monte Plata.

General Aranjo, black; he commands the peninsula of Samana; his father was a Haytian.

Gen. Romejio del Castillio, mulatto, from both lines. He has a child and seven nephews in Havana who bear the name of Gusman. They have abandoned their legitimate name of Galico.

General Juan Rosa, commandant of Seybo. Mulatto.

General Bernadino, chief of a squadron of cavalry of Seybo. Black. He commenced his services in the capacity of a servant to Santana.

General J. Esteban Aybar, who was sent on a mission to Europe, and who was afterwards minister of war, is a mulatto. His family, on the father's side, endeavoured to prevent the marriage between M. Juan Antonio, his father, with Masico, his mother, on account of colored blood, as in those days they were quite particular upon this point; but as it was found that Masico held a higher rank than J. Antonio, the marriage was assented to.

General Ramon Meya, a mulatto from both lines. His uncle, Jose M. Meya, now alive, is sufficient evidence of the fact.

General Juan Evangelista Baptista, who is in command at Azua, is descendant of an African on his mother's side; her name is Mainena.

Bonaventura Baez, founder of the political existence of the Dominicans, is a descendant of African blood in both lines. His mother is dead; she was a slave to his father. He is now residing at St. Thomas, and his complexion is that of a dark mulatto. He was formerly President of the Republic.

General Pedro Florentine, black.

General Santiago Suaro, commandant of the Southern Frontier, is a colored man.

General Sarzedo, the political chief of the province of Sentiago on the Northern frontier, in 1845, is a mulatto both on the father's and mother's side.

General Mejias, coloured.

General Gomez, coloured.

General Ramon Vido, mulatto. He was minister of war in 1849.

General Pedro Mena, African blood on both father's and mother's side.

General Contrera, African blood, both lines. His father, named Canito, is alive, and resides there.

General Fransica Sanchez, a Sambo; his father is black and his mother a mulattress.

General Jacinto Concha and his brothers are all mixed bloods—white on their father's and mulattoes on their mother's side. She is well known to be the daughter of Fio Jacinto Lopez, whose parents are almost black, and who resided in the village of Seybo. They are well known by all the inhabitants of that place.

General of the Navy, J. Alezandro Acarto, mulatto. His mother was a mulatto and his mother's mother was a negress and a slave of Justo Manti.

General Sandeavar, now commandant of the Place of Llanas Ariebo; mulatto, was born and brought up in that place, where all his relations, who are mulattoes and blacks, reside.

General Francisco Sosa, mulatto by both lines. He resides at Los Llanas. His family are composed of mulattoes and blacks.

Colonel Nicolas Patricino, de Azua. His father, Jose Patricion, was formerly a slave of Don Miguel de la Atalaya. He is of the same house with Santana.

Colonel Bruno Betance, mulatto, son of Marricento Betance, a slave of the family of Betance, which migrated to Porto Rico in 1801, where they now reside.

The Colonel of Police Pattin, mulatto, from both lines.

Colonel Santiago Basora, African slave of Don Jose Basora, which family migrated to Porto Rico in 1822.

Colonel Balantin Sanchez, commandant of the town of St. Juan, is of African origin.

Colonel T. N. Ravelo, mulatto, African blood on mother's side. She is daughter of Fio Jose Losreyes, who is now living.

Colonel Juan Contrera, commandant of Banico, black.

Colonel Martin de Bargas, of African origin.

Colonel Andres Grera, of African origin.

Colonel Serverio Rio, black.

Colonel Ariseto, African blood in both lines.

Colonel Florentino, black,

Colonel Manuel Bautista, black.

Colonel Telefora who resides at Port au Platte, is mulatto in both lines.

Colonel Pepe Gomes, of the family of Gomes of St. Domingo, is a mulatto from his mother's side.

Colonel Juan Ruis, black, son of a master carpenter, Josa Ruis, a black man.

Colonel Torivio Mayon, director of the hospital, is a coloured man.

Colonel Eusevia Pereira, commandant of the Place of St. Christopher, is a mulatto from both lines.

Members of the Congress of Revision, 1854.

Domingo Pichardo and his relations. All mulattoes, decendants of Africa by their grandmothers. The first Pichardo a white man, in the last century, was curate of Santingo. He became the father of a son by one of his servants, a negro woman. Senor Seresera, Auditor of the Court of St. Domingo, had by one of his negro women a daughter. Pichardo educated her in a good education and then married them to each other. Hence came the Pichardos of Santiago, who have made so much noise in the world.

Benigno Roxas. From Stantiago, a mulatto of the same descent with the Pichardos and Seresera, for all these gentlemen derive their appellation from the house in which their fathers were born.

Antonia Cambrez, coloured.

Felez Mercenario, a mulatto on the father's side.

Teleforo Ojio, a mulatto by both father's and mother's side. His family are in Macalbo, mulatto butchers, living in a quarter called El Empedrado.

Felipe Perdemo and Mateo his brother, mulattoes born in the district of Santa Barbara; children of Senor Perdomo and a mulatto lady of the family of Las Lunas.

T. B. Dobelas, a mulatto by both lines. His mother, a coloured woman, was called Mamiere ——

F. M. Castro, alias Del Monte, a mulatto.

T. Espayar, a mulatto, a descendant of the Espayars of Caimao Osbo.

Tejera, a mulatto; his paternal uncle, who was called Senor Rafael a shoemaker by trade, lived in the Calle de las Plateros

T. R. Bernal, a mulatto; son or nephew of Tio Melchior Bernal, who was partly a physican. This latter had a brother, a very dark man. From these Bernals came all those who now figure in St. Domnigo as Cabrals and Bernals—all of them mulattoes.

Note—To prove clearly that the people of the eastern part of Hayti are mulattoes and negroes, nothing is required but to recall to mind the events of its history, beginning with the year 1795, when St. Domingo was ceded to France. At this epoch all the gentry emigrated to Porto Rico and Cuba. All their families embarked in the ships of war which were sent by the King of Spain, and were anchored in the Bay of Ocoa until the last person who wished to embark was received. Again, in 1801, others who had remained embarked. In 1821, when this part of the Island became independent under Don Jose Nunez do Cazeres, all the chiefs and their familes emigrated, and with them many Catalans, being all that were left of the white Europeans.

In 1822, when the President Jean Pierro Boyer, took possession, Don Jose Nunez and his family departed, and every white Creole followed and settled on the Main.

It is not to be doubted that on the four occasions, on which the emigration of the whites from St. Domingo took place, the number must have been considerable. What is very certain, and evident to any impartial person, is, that all those who figure now in that country, figured also until the year 1843.

This could not have been the case, had not been negroes and mullattoes, since then the whites, not being citizens of Hayti, could not obtain offices of any kind, for which reason the negroes and mulatoes of St. Domingo, as well as of the other towns, were placed in all the civil and military posts, taking the pre-eminence and prerogatives which the whites who emigrated had enjoyed.

Anti-Slavery Meeting.

The Rev. S. R. Ward delivered an interesting Anti-Slavery Lecture at the Castle Inn, Woodford, Essex, on Friday the 21st July ult., Stephen Bourne, Esq., late Stipendiary Magistrate in Jamaica and British Guiana, presiding. The meeting was numerously and respectably attended, and much sympathy was excited by the appeals of Mr. Ward. The object of the meeting was to promote the formation of a local Anti-Slavery Society, to co-operate with the Ladies' Free-labour Association at Walthamstow, the members of which are working single-handed, and would be glad of a little assistance from the gentlemen of the immediate neighbourhood.

Mr. Ward gave especial prominence to the fact, that those who consume slave-labour produce are parties thus far to keeping up slavery; and enjoined those who professed anti-slavery sentiments to act consistently, by abstaining, as far as lies in their power, from consuming articles the product of slave-labour. He also showed how, by developing the resources of our East and West-India Colonies, and by promoting the cultivation of cotton there, in Africa, Australia, and elsewhere, and thus augmenting the supply of free-labour staples, slave-holders would eventually be thrust out of the markets of the world by the more successful enterprises of free-labour.

Mr. Chamerovizow, Secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, also addressed the meeting. He pointed out in what manner the system of slavery reacted on the people of this country, as, to wit, in the case of the law relating to coloured seamen, and indicated the course which the American church has observed in abstaining from taking action against slaveholders. He also referred to the various instrumentalities that might be employed, to break down the system, amongst which, he stated that the religious bodies in this country might become the most powerful, by remonstrating with their American co-religionists who either uphold slave-holding or do not speak against it, and by refusing to receive such into church-fellowship. This course, he observed, would awaken a sentiment in the American churches against Slavery, which it was to be regretted does not exist.

Manchester Anti-Slavery Conference.

An Anti-Slavery Conference was held in the Athenæum, Manchester, on Tuesday the 1st August ult., in commemoration of West-India Emancipation, having been convened by the Anti-Slavery and India-Reform League.

The object of the Conference, as set forth in the Circular, was, "not merely to celebrate the overthrow of the foul system of bondage that once disgraced the British colonies, and to remonstrate the improved and improving condition of the emancipated negro; but also to consider the present aspect of the Slavery question in those civilized countries in which the colored race are still held in subjection; and to decide as to the best instrumentalities that can be employed by the British anti-slavery party for the abolition of Slavery and the slave-trade. * * * Among the subjects that will be considered by the Conference, and upon which suitable Resolutions will be proposed, are the following:—

"1. The result of West-India Emancipation.

"2. The present political and religious aspects of the Slavery Question in the United States, with especial reference to the Nebraska Bill, the contemplated seizure of Cuba, and other territory, and the more recent action of the Fugitive Slave-law.

"3. The charges preferred against the American Abolitionists.

"4. The movement for the dissolution of the Union, and other instrumentalities for the overthrow of Slavery, which are employed in America.

"5. British co-operation with American Abolitionists."

Pursuant to notice, the members of the Conference assembled in the Athenæum at ten in the morning. The proceedings commenced at half-past ten. Abraham Watkin, Esq., J. P., was apointed President; Professor Scott, President of Airedale College, Vice-President; the Rev. W. Parker, and Mr. T. W. Chesson, Secretaries. The following gentlemen, among many others, were present: George Thompson, Esq.; Parker Pillsbury, Esq., Boston, Massachusetts; Mr. Wm. Wells Brown; the Revs. S. R. Ward, Canada; Wm. Guest, Leeds; T. P. Ham, Bristol; S. A. Steinthal, Bridgewater; W. H. Bonner, Birkenhead; J. G. Rogers, Ashton-under-Lyne; John Curwen, Plaistow; Francis Bishop, Liverpool; G. B. Bubier, Salford; W. R. Thorburn, Bury; J. H. Hutton, B A., Manchester; Dr. Beard, Raynor, Wesleyan Minister; H. Christopherson, Bowdon; F. Howarth, Bury; W. Whitlegge, Manchester; Dr M'Kerrow, Manchester; Henry King, Esq., Rochdale; John Kingsley, Esq.; Mr. North, a fugitive slave from South Carolina; and Mr. W. P. Powell, a colored gentleman of Liverpool, &c. &c. &c.

After a short introductory speech of the Chairman, letters were read from the following friends of the cause who were unable, for various reasons, to attend the sittings of the Conference: The Earl of Carlisle; the Bishop of Oxford; Miss Harriet Martineau; Dr. Nichol, Glasgow; James Haughton, Esq., Dublin; James Bell, Esq., M.P.; Edward Baines, Esq., Leeds; Rev. Dr. Campbell; Rev. Dr. Urwick; P. R. Arrowsmith, Esq.; Mayor of Bolton; Dr. Dick, Dundee; Wilson Armistead, Esq.; J. S. Buckingham, Esq.; and John Cropper, Esq., Liverpool.

The following letter was also submitted from L. A. Chamerovzow, on behalf of the Committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society:—

"27, New Broad Street, 28th July, 1854

"To the Secretaries of the Anti-Slavery and India-Reform League—

"Gentlemen,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your Circular, informing me that an Anti-Slavery Conference is to be held in Manchester on the 1st August, and inviting me, and any other friend of the cause, to attend.

"In reply, I beg, on behalf of the committee, to convey to you an expression of their sympathy with the objects of the Conference, and of their cordial wishes for its success; but I am to inform you, that, owing to my approaching departure on a continental anti slavery mission, and to some other cause, it will not be convenient to send a deputation to Manchester on the present occasion. I have the honour to be, gentlemen, yours very obediently,

"L. A. Chamerovzow, Secretary."

The Mission to the Colored People Again.

After the most thorough examination of the objects and aims of "the Colonial Church and School Society," as set forth in its Seventeenth Annual Report,—the branch of the Colonial Church and School Society to be especially assigned to the work of evangelizing the "Colored Settlers," and the further and still more special work, if possible, in connection with the same, of training up preachers and teachers among the Colored people, to carry civilization to Africa, as declared in a public meeting, in this city, by those appointed to the work, we are prepared to give an "opinion," for the benefit, entertainment and satisfaction of many of our readers, and probably the dissatisfaction of here and there a "sore head," who cannot bear that anything should be said, or an idea entertained, different from what is "created" for their "use," by those too, whose presence, complexion, and authoritative manner inspire the utmost fear in the timid souls. With the objects of the Church and School Society, in the general, we are well pleased—at least it should, in our humble judgment, have the same hold on the general consideration, as any other missionary organization, apart from its sectarian character, and in the details of its operations among the various classes in these provinces, we see much to commend in the catholic spirit displayed. The labors of Mr. W. Wood, at Nanticoke, spoken of on page 23, of the Report, prove that.—The good Missionary shows that no "branch," colored, for the purpose of benefiting the colored people, is needed. We give, here, two extracts from the page referred to, in confirmation of our position:—

ESCAPED SLAVE.

"In this shantie I also found a once poor slave lately arrived from the Southern States. In making his escape, he had suffered incredible hardships, crossing into Canada during the severity of winter, with but scanty clothing, his feet and hands were badly frozen.

"Called on Walker, a coloured man, with whom I had a very refreshing and edifying conversation. I found him deeply experienced in divine things, he explained his view of Christian perfection, which was simply a completeness in Christ, who was made unto him, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; that, being in Christ, there was to him no condemnation; that the righteousness of Christ covered him, and His blood washed his heart clean, so that he was perfect in Christ, which perfection admitted of progress: as to the sanctifying process within, he still felt his need of a continual washing in the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. I asked him to pray with me, and for me, which he did most earnestly and fervently, and with a flow of language and sentiment such as I have seldom heard."

INFIDELITY.

"A stranger called on me. Sorry to find that he was an infidel, and did not believe that our Saviour was really crucified or died, but only in appearance; so also with John the Baptist, did not believe, that his head was literally cut off, but rather that John's head was raised to honor: and thus he turned the whole of Scripture from its simplicity into a figurative mystery."

We repeat, again, a Mission of the Colonial Church and School Society, of the Church of England, we cannot conscientiously have any objection to, that we would not have against a Baptist, Methodist, or Presbyterian mission, and yet, against this "branch" mission, we entirely object.—First, because the assumptions upon which it is founded are wrong, and not as are the facts, though made by persons who, as their names and lives give assurance, are of the most disinterested benevolence. The "address," to be found on page 20 of the Report, and which we here give in full, though dictated evidently by a spirit of philanthropy, does injustice to the white citizens of these provinces generally, by charging them with a prejudice equal to Yankees of New York and Boston—does injustice to the colored people, by consigning them to a pit of degradation, without exception, so deep, that, if true, the instrumentalities as well as instruments detailed by them for the work of "raising them out," will not, can not, in the nature of the case effect it.

It is further a contradiction to the well-known fact, that apart from such special efforts, colored people have religious opportunities, to the extent at least that the whites have, and which are afforded them by other denominations. There are the Free Church Missions to all, Baptist Missions, Methodist Missions, &c. In the Report, which we are now considering, Mr. W. Wood speaks in this wise of a colored man, showing that he enjoyed religious opportunities previous to the visit of Mr. W:—

COLORED POPULATION.

"Called to see a colored man, living in a shantie, and was surprised to find him an experienced Christian, with an extensive acquaintance with revealed truth, and the Scriptures generally, and possessing an enlarged and cultivated mind. We conversed for some time upon Divine things, during which he related to me his experience: how he was first seriously impressed and how the good work advanced, until he obtained a comfortable and happy assurance of the salvation of his soul; and now, he said his practice always was to make a reckoning with himself every night, and not to sleep until he could say, all was right. After prayer, I departed, feeling how far superior the situation of this man was to that of one surrounded with luxury, but void of his high and heavenly prospects."

It defers to the opinions of Southern planters, as to the effect on the American mind made by the great address of the women of Great Britain against slavery, and as to the efforts to be used for those they would gladly again make their slaves; and proposes a mode of operations from such deceptive, though specious dictation, calculated to draw lines of distinction completely between the white and colored population:—

FREE COLORED POPULATION IN CANADA.

March, 1852,

It was urged, in some instances, on the promoters of the Adaress to the Women of the United States for the Abolition of Slavery, that their movement had not a practical character, and that it was deficient in real effort and self-denial,

The present appeal is open to no such reply. We take the liberty to lay before you the state of the people of color in Her Majesty's Canadian possessions, and entreat you to co-operate in an immediate and extensive plan to raise their moral and social condition.

Their number, we believe, may be estimated at about 25,000, consisting almost entirely of fugitive slaves, and increasing at the rate of, at least, 2,000 every year. They are in the lowest state of ignorance of religion, and even of scenlar knowledge; and, according to accounts that have been received, utterly neglected by all around them; and, though permitted to live in freedom, to a great extent, it is to be feared, are as much the victums of popular prejudice as their brethren in Boston or New York.

Yet all experience in the West Indies, and in the southern States of America, proves them to be a docile, affectionate, and reclaimable race. They are our brethren in the sight of God, and our brethren too as living under the same Government. The obligation to make great exertions in their behalf surely is manifest, and we cannot believe, that there are any to whom we appeal who will not joyfully and fruitfully acknowledge the responsibility.

It is proposed to form a branch of the "Colonial Church and School Society," to be specially assigned to the work of evangelizing the colored settlers. The undertaking will require the establishment of three Schools, with a Master and a Mistress for each, and two European Clerical Agents, who shall itinerate as Missionaries among the people, and preach to them the "word of life."

Funds to the extent of £1,500 or £2,000 in the first year, and from 1,000 to 1,500 in subsequent years, will be adequate to the purpose. It is a small demand for so great a result.

A movement such as this is the necessary and becoming consequence of the movement in favor of negro emancipation. No one will deny that it is a Christian duty; and few who have any knowledge of the history and general position of slavery will question the benefits to arise out of it. We have been credibly informed, on the authority of persons conversant with the views and feelings of the southern planters, that the spectacle of a large body of the negro race, elevated in social and religious condition, and walking like Christian men in the light of the Gospel, would do more to tranquilize their fears, and effect a general, if not an universal, manumission, than any plan yet devised in England or America.

We invite, and earnestly entreat, your co-operation, in full faith that the blessing of God will rest on a work begun in such a spirit and for such an end.

Shaftesbury, Carlisle | Edward Buxton, Arthur Kinnaird.

JAMAICA.

Your Committee have for some time been urged to commence missions in this important but impoverished Island, and have before them applications for aid to establish Schools in the Blue Mountain and Pemberton Valleys, on the northern and Southern coast, and to the support of a much-needed mission, by contributing a small grant towards the maintenance of a Clergyman, in the vicinity of the capital.

The Rev. F. H. Almon conveys his appeal to your Committee in a letter, of which the following is an extract:

"I am induced to ask the aid of your Society in behalf of a mission, established by the Bishop of Jamaica in the western district of Kingston, where spiritual destitution painfully prevails.

"The western part of the town and the suburban villages, contain a population of some thousands. There is no Church or resident Clergyman in the district, no free-school for the children, and habits of profligacy, idleness, and irreligion lamentably abound. To prove that I am drawing a faithful picture of the sad condition in which immortal souls are living without God, and dying without hope, I adduce the following extract from the letter of the Rev. Dr. Stewart, Rector of Kingston:—'Knowing as I do the spiritual destitution and moral degradation, of a large portion of the lower class of the inhabitants, who never enter any place of Divine Worship, and to whom, from the limited staff of the clergy regular and efficient religious instruction cannot be administered, I am ready to remove any difficulty, that may be in the way of your commencing your Mission under certain conditions,' &c."

Mr. Almon, adopting the language of the Society, continues,—

"I cordially believe, that religious error can best be met by a distinct declaration of the total corruption of our nature, justification by grace through faith alone, and the necessity of a vital change of heart in all who show by their conversation in the world, that they have not passed from death unto life."

The Rev. W. Stearn, a faithful and zealous Clergyman at Fonthill, in the Blue Mountain Valley, has received from the Committee the promise of a Schoolmaster.

His statements exhibit the spiritual condition of the great mass of the poor of the island as being most degraded, and they contain so many urgent entreaties for aid, that the Committee felt it to be an imperative duty to render assistance in a case of so distressing a nature. It is hoped also, that a Corresponding Committee will, ere long, be formed, and the peculiar destitution of Jamaica will draw forth liberal contributions from some at least who were once interested in its wealth and former prosperity. He says,—

"Unless something is done for us by the British Government, the civil and religious institutions of the country must be abandoned. But He who rules above has the hearts of all men in His hand, and all events are under His control.

"So little money can now be collected from the people, that many Dissenters have closed their schools and chapels, or placed them in improper hands; and Clergymen of the Church of England, I hear, have serious thoughts of leaving too, some on the plea of sickness, and others on account of the fearful state of the country.

But God's purposes must be fufilled with or without the usual means employed. And if He has a work for them to do, the instruments will doubtless be provided; but the means are ours, and we are bound to use them.

"This, my dear Sir, is a heathen country, with a Christian name, and we must act accordingly.

"I do not speak from hearsay, but from twenty years' experience, when I tell you, that England must find the men, and England must find the means to pay them for many years to come, or, humanly speaking, Jamaica's doom is sealed. Thousands upon thousands, and thousands yet again, have been withdrawn from poor Jamaica to enrich my own dear native country, and withdrawn by men who thinking of themselves alone, left us nothing but the offspring of their vices, and the misery that their sins entailed upon us is now increased so fearfully by our own, that we cannot help ourselves, although that is an object to be aimed at by all.

"Feb., 7, 1853.—I was given to understand by one of the magistrates of the parish, a few days ago, that if better agents were not found within twelve months, our schools would be abandoned.

"The Roman Catholics are carrying everything before them in Kingston; at least, amongst the lower orders. Humanly speaking an effort must be made to check their progress, now or never.

"Caution, prudence, and Christian firmness will be more required than ever now, for I cannot get rid if the presentiment, that the final struggle between light and darkness is close at hand."

From Pemberton Valley, Port Maria, an applicant writes as follows:—

"The two Townships, in behalf of which the application is made, contains a population of 2,000, not more than fifteen or twenty of whom are white people. The Parish Church at Port Maria is seven miles off; the Retreat Church it seven miles in the opposite direction, with very bad roads to both places.

"The number of children is about 200, of whom half might be expected to attend the school at its commencement. There is a house on the property, with 7 acres of land advantageously situated, in almost every respect, for a free residence, and upon which a school-house could readily be put up, as there is plenty of hardwood which would be furnished gratis on the spot. The school-house might then be used for Divine Service.

"The Proprietors of Pemberton Valley propose to give £30 per annum—to give the house as a free residence, together with seven acres of land. What the Proprietors of two neighbouring estates, the House of Assembly, and the Vestry may do, I have not yet ascertained."

DOMINICA.

In reference to Dominica, your Committee are still anxious to render assistance to the labours of the Rev. M. M. Dillon, the Rector of Roseau, and to testify their sympathy with him in the arduous undertaking wherein he has been so greatly blessed. They grieve to learn, that only one Protestant clergyman is found in an island so densely populated,—where, too, the Church of Rome has its Vicar-Apostolic, twelve priests, and numberless inferior emissaries.

They desire also to express their obligations to Mr. Dillon, for aiding the Society at home by advocating its cause on several important occasions, and rendering it essential service.

We further object to this "branch," as affording opportunity to those who might manage or mismanage it, to engraft upon it, features akin to Yankee colonization. In fact, we have been told, as before said, by the Missionary in charge, that it will offer facilities for training up preachers and teachers for Africa; a feature of the plan that never occurred to the pious mind of the Hon. Mrs. Kinnaird; but which the Rev. Mr. Dillon informs us, originated with himself; and which, with the other objects, is to be carried out by co-operation of a Mr Sunmer and other gentlemen in New York. What has the Colonial Church and School Society to do with men in Yankeedom? Are not Englishmen sufficient to carry on the "pious" work of their societies without intermeddling by men in the States, especially work designed for the colored people? We confess to a fear of some bad design, whether seen by the Missionary in this case or not. White men have no schools for training men for Africa as the "great" object, and yet seldom can a school be got up for colored people, but their fatherland must be attended to—they are suddenly and all of them, to become teachers and preachers, and such like. We are Americans, and cannot in common reason be supposed to have other than a common interest in Africa,—we should do something else besides teach, preach, and be servants; and as the schools of the Province, of every grade, are open to us in every locality where the whites are not either stupidly besotted with rum and ignorance, or where Yankee interests have not superceded British, we should be permitted to go without threats or persuasion to those established or to be established, especially that we may have the opportunity of learning how much we are needed away from home. If colored men are to be trained to teach and preach, why not let them decide without suggestions from this one or that, as to the field of future operations? Or why may they not labor in Canada, after having "served their time."

If the teachers are not yet prepared for Africa, it would be vastly better to establish the Normals Schools in Africa at once, and train natives to the work at home, and suffer colored Americans to help make up the future of this continent; but that would not be "advisable." By this new plan, by the time the training is over, the public mind will probably be formed to further African schemes. It occurred to us, that Jamaica and Demarara, &c., being nearer home, might have served as trial fields to the future colored missionaries; but we were told that they are well supplied with teachers, preachers, &c. However, the above extracts from pages 67 and 68, will, we think, satisfy any candid mind that there is nothing so revolting in a true picture of the colored people of Canada, as drawn by men now struggling to elevate the West Indians, and they cannot fail to convince them of the importance of missionary efforts that will have in view the welfare of the country in which they may operate, as well as countries thousands of miles off.

Yellow Fever.

The fever is still raging in Savannah, Georgia, all the hotels and principal business places are closed.

In Charleston, S. C., the number of deaths by the yellow fever, for the week ending Sept. 13th, was 57.

A fugitive slave was seized in a street in Chicago, one day last week, by three men, his cries brought assistance, when the men were arrested.

The men by the last account, were undergoing an examination. They are charged with assaulting, with a deadly weapon. The testimony so far shows that they seized the man without any legal authority; and on his escaping fired a pistol at him. Notice has been given by the prosecution that after this charge is finished, they will be prosecuted for Kidnapping and creating a riot.

The Colored Citizens of Toronto, met in general meeting at the second Wesleyan Church, Richmond St., on Wednesday evening, Sept. 20th, 1854.

Wilson R. Abbott, Esq., was called to the Chair, and Rev. Wm. P. Newman appointed Secretary.

After prayer by Bro. Robinson, the object of the meeting was stated by the chairman, who called upon the Secretary to read from the "Seventeenth Annual Report of the Colonial Church and School Society" which reading showed that the object of Rev. Mr. Dillon's Mission to this country is to establish a separate school, or school's for the colored people.

It was voted, that a Committee of five be appointed, to draft resolutions for another meeting respecting the said Mission.

Rev. Wm. P. Newman, Mr. Adolphus Juda Wilson, R. Abbott, Esq., Rev. Mr. Johnson, were then appointed.

Voted, that W. R. Abbott be a Committee to wait on Mr. Dillon, invite him to attend the next meeting of the colored citizens.

Voted, that we adjourn to meet at the Sayer St. Chapel, on Monday evening of next month, at 7½ o'clock.

W. R. Abbott, Chairman.
Wm. P. Newman, Secretary.

Colportage in Canada West.

Upper Canada Tract Society.
Toronto, September 4th, 1854

Before and at the Twenty-second Anniversary of this Society, held on the 6th of June, the history of its past operations, its present condition, and the relation it sustains to Evangelical Christianity, were carefully considered.

In view of the success which God has vouchsafed to the limited efforts made, and the small amount of agency thus far employed by this society, and of the success of Colportage as employed by the American Tract Society, in this Province; in view of the wants of our population as revealed by Colporteur labour, showing great destitution of Religious Knowledge in our country, the prevalence of Romanism and other erroneous systems of Religion, and great indifference to education and spiritual Religion among nominal Protestants, and the wide-spread diffusion of a corrupt and destructive Literature; and in view of the fact that the progress of our country is far more rapid than the increase of means for its Evangelization, we are convinced that Providence calls upon this society to go forward and enlarge its operations, so as to meet the wants of this Province, believing as we do that Sabbath Observance, the Bible Cause, Sunday Schools, Temperance, and other good objects and religious enterprises will here, will be effectually promoted. The employment of Colporteurs for a term of years, including the 40,000 Germans west of this city. The history of Colportage in the United States warrants these expectations.

We are grateful to the American Tract Society for having begun vigorously to extend the work of Colportage among us, and for their willingness to render us any assistance in their power by transferring to us men now in their employ, and supplying us with such assistance as we need to start this benevolent work. If this much needed enterprise is prosecuted by us, with the facilities now enjoyed, it promises great good to this City, as the head-quarters of its operations. Canada West has the ability, and Toronto a large share of that ability; to sustain it. The Committee can do but little without the warm-hearted and liberal co-operation of our citizens in making a vigorous effort here—such an effort as shall give us the confidence of all disposed to aid such a work, and secure their co-operation.

We are doing what we can by securing the services of a General Agent, and we take much pleasure in commending to your Christian confidence and personal regard, the Rev. Yates Hickey, who has just commenced an effort in Toronto, for this Society, and whose efficient labors as Superintendent of Colportage, in connection with the Rochester Agency for Western New York and Canada, and whose prominent relation to the American Tract Society will add value to his services in behalf of this Institution.

This is a work of faith and prayer and benevolence, and while only devoted Christian men are to be employed in carrying it forward, it is a matter of personal interest to every Canadian, and may be made a means of good to all.

As it is proposed to make Toronto the seat of operations for the Province, special effort and large subscriptions will be expected in this city from Christians and all who want to see Canada blessed by this simple but effective agency. To make the duty of every one more plain, we would further state that, in addition to three Colporteurs employed by this Society, and two by the Kingston Society, the American Tract Society have some twenty who are Canadians, and who may be transferred to us so soon as the funds are raised to warrant this Society in undertaking what all must see is its own appropriate work.

Funds are now needed to purchase publications from the London and American Tract Societies, for the use of Colporteurs, and will be needed from year to year, to pay their salaries, for books and tracts granted to the destitute, and the various and large expenses inseperable from an extended benevolent enterprize.

Since Providence has prepared the way by raising up men and providing to our hand all other needed instrumentality, money is all that is now required to give full success. Shall Toronto allow this opportunity to pass unimproved? Shall the large resources in the hands of many here be unavailable for such an object? We trust that Christians and philanthropists will say, with one voice, "The means shall be furnished."

Documents explaining the work may be had at the Depository, 67, Young Street; and all who wish to volunteer their encouragement can do so by placing their funds at the disposal of the Committee, leaving their donations at the same place. £5 constitutes a member for life, and £50 pay a Colporteur's salary one year. Any person or persons paying this amount may have the Quarterly Report of a Colporteur for their information and encouragement.

CENTRAL BOOOK STORE.

A GOOD BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE. —Now ready—"OUR FOLKS AT HOME."—A new Book for Youth, of superior excellence—its pages afford great amusement, much instruction and useful knowledge to all young readers who delight in the happiness of "Our Folks at Home." Parents who desire to foster in the hearts of their offspring a genuine Love of Home and its enjoyments, will readily appreciate the aim of its author. Illustrated with ten fine wood engravings, from new drawings, richly bound in cloth, gilt, price 75 cents.

"There is scarcely a boy or girl in the country who will not derive pleasure and profit from this very entertaining and very excellent book. We heartily commend it to the notice of parents as a work which must exert an important influence over the minds of the young, in giving thought a right direction, and creating more salutary impressions. All the stories and all the suggestions of the volume are useful and wholesome. The little tares are blended gracefully, while each admits of a separate application, although possessing a distinct interest. The engravings are very good, indeed, and the getting up of the volume is tasteful in the extreme. Every family should own a copy of the work."

THE WEEDER.

"The servant earnestly desireth the shadow."—JOB.

"The morn is [illegible]
At the [illegible]
Ah, [illegible]
O God! [illegible] send that shadow quick,
Which [illegible] speedily.

"For me the [illegible] and burden of the day,
And a [illegible] master who doth show no lenity;
For him [illegible] square-lands stretch far away,
With groves of cool serenity.

"Above his meadows into golden air,
The rounded knoll uplifts its green protuberance,
And ripening harvests wave and toss their hair,
In golden-tressed exuberance.

"There are cool woodlands, in whose dusk arcades
The very noonday seems of twilight emulous;
No heat wins there, but, in the silent glades,
The silent dews hang tremulous.

"There the tall tulip crests the glorious scene,
The stately monarch of those sylvan palaces;
And its strong arms, like priests in ferial green,
Lift up their golden chalices.

"Through the [illegible] leaves [illegible] sunbeams sift,
And pleasant shades are over the sward distributed,
There worms may crawl, there thistle down may drift,
And I—I am prohibited.

"I faint with toil; yet keep my faith to all,
Though none save God regardeth me observantly,
Father!" she cried, "when will that shadow fall,
For which I pine so fervently?"

Then came a shadow; but 'twas icy cold,
As of some swart, dread angel o'er her hovering;
It wreathed around her with voluminous fold,
And wrapped her in its covering.

Chill though it was, she hailed it with a smile;
And, worn by years and grief and long infirmity,
Lay down beneath it, slept a little while,
And wakened in eternity.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING it to be necessary of measures to further or promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Peace, Freedom, and a Reformation, not based [illegible] compromising duty now resting upon us to avert a crisis maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing classes of the [illegible] complexion in church and state, for the purpose of [illegible] ourselves [illegible] of [illegible] power in their associated capacity, as members of this Union, [illegible] to the capacity assigned them by [illegible] and to raise a moral sentiment among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country ages of the most insidious impositions, reflections and designs of many of the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counseling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Laws in British America, unless those of darker hue, become hewers of wood and drawers of water to those of whiter complexion. 3rd. To use all in our power to remove the system of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly as subjects of Great Britain, to check [illegible] [illegible] in America, [illegible] [illegible] and getting rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a means of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, & Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS,
JOHN D. PECK,
AMOS G. BEMAN,
JOHN JONES,
J. D. BONNER,
J. M'CUNE SMITH,
} Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The [illegible] fund shall be thirty thousand [illegible].

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent. every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Frederick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and with out making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and weari-some journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Two Bridges.

A DREAM.

Very lately I saw, in a wonderful dream,
Two bridges thrown over a rapid stream:
In the channel between each rocky shore,
The waters rushed down with a hideous roar.
These bridges were called, by the voice of the nation,
TEETOTAL, the first, and the last, MODERATION,
And both, in my dream, were examined with care,
For of diverse materials, and structures they were;
While I narrowly marked the vast crowds as they passed
Over both of those bridges, the first and the last

The former was built all of stone, in huge blocks.
And had for foundation immoveable rocks;
The road was fine gravel, the pathway was wide,
And a parapet wall was raised up on each side.
No toll-gate was there, for the passage was free,
No work for 'Rebecca' at all could I see,
And safely the passenger passed in high glee.
I heard them all sing, as they passed the wide river,
'Teetotal's the bridge—teetotal for ever!'

But words cannot utter the doleful relation,
Of all that I saw of the bridge Moderation,
Of all that I heard in my marvellous dream,
And of thousands who perished while crossing the stream.

This bridge, though by many declared to be good;
Nay, the best—was constructed entirely of wood;
For, on piles standing upright, the pathway was made,
With planks long and smooth, horizontally laid;
But I saw with surprise, though the stream was so wide,
There was no palisado raised up on each side,
To prevent any passenger, passing that way,
From plunging down headlong, grim death's certain prey.

And much did I wonder to mark in my dream,
That the path crossing over this terrible stream,
Only right in the middle was perfectly level;
For the planks, on each side, downward sloped in a bevel;
And the nearer they verged to the farthermost shore,
Their outermost edges shelved downward the more.

Now, strange to relate, though this dangerous bridge
Had nowhere an inch of parapet ridge,
And the sides were so shelving and slippery too,
Yet multitudes daily this path would pursue,
Notwithstanding they paid a tremendous high toll,
And risked the destruction of body and soul.

It is true, you might cross by the bridge Moderation,
This roaring, wide river, without perturbation,
And only have daily a trifle to pay,
If you kept to the middle and narrow pathway;
And therefore 'twas held in the highest esteem,
As the very best way to pass over the stream.

But, alas! I beheld, and my heart was appalled,
Though the middle pathway was so highly extolled;
So that no one, AT FIRST, from its track would decline,
And every one thought he could keep the right line;
Yet the bridge, as I learned, was so strangely enchanted,
And travellers, by demons, so fearfully haunted,
That although they commenced at a moderate rate,
And paid a small toll at the entrance-gate,
Yet many would quickly and heedlessly stray
To the smooth sloping path, and a higher toll-pay;
For toll-men in numbers were ranged on each side,
Where the giddy were noticed to slip or to slide:
And, though strange it may seem, yet the payment increased,
As the hope of escaping destruction was least,
Till they paid altogether, I happened to hear,
In hard sterling cash, FIFTY MILLIONS a year!

While I stood by this river, both bridges in view,
This bridge Moderation, and Teetotal too,
And marked the crowds passing, I saw with affright,
(For though 'twas a dream, 'twas a terrible sight,)
That while by Teetotal great multitudes crossed
Safely over the river—not one being lost;
From the bridge Moderation—from each shelving side,
That fearfully hung o'er the perilous tide—
Many thousands, while heedless or frantic, were hurdled
To the dreadful abyss, and the nethermost world.

Now, shuddering with horror, I thought in my dream,
That, turning away from this terrible stream,
I saw near the chasm, where this dark river runs,
A gray-headed father addressing his sons.
'Look—look, my dear boys,' with emotion he cried,
'At the bridge Moderation, so long and so wide,
With its slippery planks, shelving down on each side.
But mark, I entreat you, that narrow pathway,
So level and smooth, and so little to pay,
'Tis a dangerous road. My dear children, beware,
For death and destruction lurk secretly there.
If once on that bridge a sixpence you spend,
Your joyful beginning may fearfully end.
Now look at TEETOTAL—that bridge of renown,
For its fame is re-echoed from city to town,
And its friends are now marching with banners unfurled,
Proclaiming its praise to the end of the world.
Then join in their ranks, sign the pledge, my dear boys,
And seize the delight the teetotaller enjoys;
For surely your heart with delight will o'erflow,
If God on your efforts his blessing bestow,
And one fellow-creature be rescued from woe:
At first being rescued from vile degradation,
And afterwards saved with a gospel salvation,
Then trust in Him only, seek His promised aid,
And boldly press onward, by nothing dismayed.'

The father thus spake, and was joyful to find
His sons were determined, and all of one mind,
In shunning instanter, without hesitation,
As deceitful and dangerous, the bridge Moderation:
But, in shouting 'Tee-total forever!' they broke
The spell of my dream, and I quickly awoke.
Resolved not to lose such a lesson,—no, never,—
I joined in the cry of 'TEETOTAL FOREVER!'

WHEN YOU SHOULD TAKE YOUR HAT.—Young man, a word. We want to tell you when you should take your hat and be off And mind what we offer. It is:

When you are asked to take a drink.

When you find out that you are courting an extravagant or slovenly girl.

When you find yourself in doubtful company.

When you discover that your expenses run ahead of your income

When you are abusing the confidence of your friends.

When you think you are a great deal wiser than older and more experienced people than yourself.

BIG THUNDER; Or, the Belvidere Chief.

BY L. A. ALFORD.

Who can look upon the scattered and wasting condition of the western Indians, without commisseration? A strange feeling characterizes the mind of the enquirer, and the question almost involuntarily arises "who did sin," these nations or those that preceded them that they should waste away before the Anglo Saxon, as snow before the morning sun. No nation possessed more sagacity—more real courage than did the red men of the west; nor could any class of warriors be found that so well understood the various routes through the country, as did the Indians.

Their terrific war shouts, midnight mode of attack, and their facilities for surprise, were by no means minor considerations; yet with all these advantages they have wasted away before the Pale faces until scarce a remnant is left.

There have been undoubtedly cruel murders committed by the white people, but no less by the savages. Whole families have from time to time, and we should say hundreds of American families have been wantonly butchered by these western tribes, but still they have increased and advanced, while their enemies have been driven back farther and farther, until now they have reached a point, beyond which there is no more territory.

If an attempt towards civilization has in any case been secured, they have as steadily diminished as those who have fought their way through, to conquer or die, in the field of battle.

We opine, that there must have been the most barbarous and unprovoked wars among themselves far back in their history; and that the blood of thousands of innocents has cried from the ground for vengeance upon them; and the cry has been heard and the extermination of the entire Indian race will be the ultimate result. Our conjectures may all be wrong; but with a few reasons, and we will leave the reader in possession of at least the key to these conjectures.

In almost every section of the western states there are evident traces of Indian battle grounds; and in many of the mounds, the bones of hundreds and thousands of warriors have been exhumed. Upon these mounds, trees of two or three centuries growth are waving their luxuriant foliage, which but too plainly declares the blood stained history of Indian heroes.

Throughout many parts of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin these evident traces of massacres and blood-shed are visible; but perhaps in no part of the western states, do these mounds present a more remarkable, and mournful appearance than about Belvidere.

Here the mighty, of the Indian warriors lived, fought, and died. Here mound rises in the vicinity of mound, and though held less sacred, as the repository of the dead, than the graves of those of our own kindred, yet a kind of sacredness, surrounds these cemeteries which almost forbids the white man in molesting them.

A half a century ago, and Big Thunder, the Belvidere chief, lived in his glory and his pride. All the vast west were his hunting grounds, and Squaw Prairie his home.

The Winebago tribe, extended from the head waters of lake Michigan, to the Mississippi River, and were indeed a formidable tribe; skilful in war, and mighty in battle The long line of ancestors, of which Big Thunder could boast, had lived only to be honored in peace, feared in war, and lamented in death.

He was a descendant of Oshkosh, a celebrated chief who bravely fought, and fell at the battle of Butte Des Mortz; and though Big Thunder was but a child at the time, yet the fire of war burned in his bosom and lit up a blaze against the Sioux, which they could never effectually stifle.

Long previous to any American settlement upon the Rock River, Big Thunder dwelt with his tribe during the rigors of winter along its heavy timbered course, and when the bland months of returning spring began to vivify and refresh the earth with natures verdant green, the chief and his tribe repaired to the beautiful prairie lands, to enjoy cool and refreshing location.

Big Thunder had married a daughter of Red Wing, and for years had been associated with the chiefs of the tribe in all their wars and their victories. Waupun a Sioux chief, had made an assault, upon a detached portion of the tribe under the jurisdiction of the Belvidere chief, and a general massacre had been determined. Big Thunder rallied all his forces and advanced upon one side of Rock River, while Waupun descended on the opposite side, ready for battle. Little could be done, unless by crossing the river, and this each of the warriors performed during the dense darkness of night, and attempted to assault their opponents, just at the break of day; but to the surprize of each, they were at as great a distance from the anticipated massacre as at the previous night.

No sooner had Waupun discovered the mistake, than he became engrossed in the idea of making an assault upon the unprotected village camp of Big Thunder, and if possible put to route the whole tribe. In this he was successful; for before Big Thunder understood the new plot, the tents, cabins, and wigwams, of the venerable Belvidere chief were in ashes, and his squaw and little ones taken, and the warriors had fled.

This was distressing intelligence to Big Thunder, who raved in all the wild and savage gesticulations of his tribe, and tried to invoke the hot displeasure of some imaginary deity upon the base, and heartless chief of the Sioux nation.

Red Wing pacified the Chief, by informing him that the course the marauding party had gone could be easily intercepted, and perhaps the prisoners might be recaptured and restored to their friends. With this, all the warriors agreed, and hastened upon their ponies with all possible speed to the anticipated field of slaughter.

When the last rays of the Sun were lighting up the western horizon, by their lingering tints of vermillion, Big Thunder and his warriors found evident signs of the retreating Sioux, and from certain evidences knew that the party were the captors, led by Waupun.

After a general council of war, it was thought best to proceed at once, and if possible surprise the retreating Sioux before the light of another day.

This kind of warfare has ever been a characteristic of the Indian; and just before day is the hour if any, of their attack—so on this occasion.

After their council had assembled and the facts fully known, it was decided that the ponies should be left in the care of a few of their number, and that their warriors should proceed with their guns, their bows and arrows, and their war clubs, to the scene of anticipated slaughter and blood.

Sometime after midnight, Big Thunder discovered through the sparsely timbered forest, at an immense distance, the fire of the retreating victors.

No sooner did he discover it than he shouted "meno me-go-she-wa-gen-e-to-go," —see there the conquerors war-dance: and sure enough, he was right.

When any of the Indian tribes, make an advance upon a neighbouring tribe, and are successful in capturing any prisoners they usually have a war dance, as soon as they are safe from their opponents, and not unfrequently murder the prisoners outright; and sometimes in a cruel and barbarous manner, and this Big Thunder feared would be the course that would be pursued by the victorious Waupun.

With the greatest possible stillness and speed, Big Thunder advanced upon the victorious Sioux, and as they were regaling themselves in the triumphs of war an almost unearthly shout from Big Thunders warriors affrighted and put to flight their enemies.

Every weapon of death that each possessed was successfully used and a bold encounter ensued, but eventually the banner of victory waved over the Winebago warriors; and the Sioux were routed.

Big Thunder hurried to that part of the camp where the war-dance had been instituted, to ascertain if possible the condition of the prisoners; but alas! Algonah, Big Thunder's squaw, had been sacrificed and slain; and not a prisoner remained to herald the terrible news of their slaughter.

With a mournful tread the warriors bore the lifeless body of the affectionate Algonah to the prairie at Belvidere, where, with much mourning, her remains were deposited.

The prarie was for this reason called Squaw Prairie, which name it still bears

Big Thunder took up his residence here and lived many years after with his tribe, believing, as he often said, that the Winebagos would yet be triumphant, over all their enemies, and drive every white man from their lawful hunting grounds, and their prairie homes. But quite different from this has been their history.

Big Thunder's time to die came, and he summoned his chiefs to his cabin, to give them his last charge.

He ordered that his grave should be made of puncheons, nicely split and dressed, from the trunks of the forest trees, and elevated three or four feet above the surface of the mound. He then ordered, that his head should be made fast, in an upright position with his face towards Squaw prairie. A basket of fruit was to be deposited in his lap, his feet and legs only to be covered with earth, and thus they were to let him remain till the great battle should be fought between the Winebagoes, and the white invaders.

In the midst of this eventful battle, and just as his warriors were gaining the day, Big Thunder would shout from his grave, "Victory! Victory! to the Winebagos."

Big Thunder was buried in his chosen spot, on a beautiful eminence, on Squaw Prairie, in all the pomp, and in the exact manner he had ordained.

Time's wheels rolled rapidly on, the white men, like a flood, filled up the western prairies; the last claim that the tribe of the Belvidere chief held, to western gardens, had been disposed of, and all had gone. The beautiful city of Belvidere rose among the mounds of Squaw Prairie: a splendid Court house now stands within a few feet of his grave.

One after one, the bones of the warrior disappeared—the skull of Big Thunder is now in possession of a gentleman in the City of Detroit; others are in various parts of the United States, the puncheons consisting his grave, are clawed to the ground, and the busy hum of business shows the vanity of the prophecy of the Belvidere Chief.

A BRAVE BRITISH SOLDIER.—The Special Correspondent of the Times, writing from Varna, says:—Captain Burke, of the 88th Regiment, has been pained and annoyed by the publication, in one of your contemporaries, of a letter purporting to have been written by his late gallant and lamented brother. Mr. Burke's body was found after the action in which he lost his life with no less than thirty three wounds upon it. The Russians had taked his sword-belt, but his sword was found hidden in some long grass close to the corpse. The ring finger of both hands was cut off. He was seen by the sapper, who went with him, fighting desperately to the last, though surrounded by a horde of Russians. When he first leaped on shore from the boat six soldiers charged him. Two he shot with his revolver, one he cut down with his sword, the rest turned and fled. While he was encouraging the Turks, who were in the stream, to row quietly to the land, and forming them in a line as they landed, conspicuous as he was in full uniform and by his white cap cover, a number of riflemen advanced from behind a ditch, and took deliberate aim at him. Poor Burke charged them with headlong gallantry. As he got near, he was struck by a ball, which broke his jaw-bone; but he rushed on, shot three men dead at close quarters with his revolver, and cleft two men through helmet and all into the brain with his sword. He was then surrounded, and while engaged in cutting his way with heroic courage through the ranks of the enemy, a sabre cut from a dragoon as he went by nearly severed his head from his body, and he fell dead, covered with bayonet-wounds, sabre gashes, and marked with lance thrusts and bullet holes. The sapper who was with him stood by Mr. Burke till the last, but could not save him. He is now only recovering from his wound and the effect of his exertions."

From Lamertine's History of Turkey.

PICTURE OF ABDUL MEDJID.

"After having crossed the desert hills which separate Constantinople from Flammour, we leaped from our horses at the bottom of a narrow valley on the bank of a stream, at a wooded-road crossing, formed by three or four tracks traced on the wet sand. We were conducted to the left by the shaded path towards an opening, at the bottom of which we perceived a small, square house, with a flat roof, pierced by a single window—a house much resembling that of a poor curate of our villages in the South of France; a staircase of three steps arose from the side of the path to an exterior railing round the house. Beautiful fruit trees planted in the garden, in front of the cottage, threw their shades upon it. Five or six willows, which have given their name to the valley, hung their branches over the roof. Before the steps an imperceptible jet of water, which did not rise above the heads of the jasemines, tumbled with a melancholy sound as it fell back into a basin, surrounded with stones, and which served as a reservoir for watering the vegetable garden in front, to which access was had by five or six steps of descent.

"A Turkish gardener inhabited it in his little cabin, at twenty steps' distance from the kiosk of his Sultan. The gardener and his children went and came at will, spade and water-pot in hand, through the little alleys traversed by the Sultan, as if in their own little property, and a thousand miles from Padisha. They paid no attention to us; it was, nevertheless, the favorite kiosk of the Sultan, the place of leisure and study of the Master of Asia, Africa, and a part of Europe, from Babylon to the Danube, and from Thebes to Belgrade. We were at his door, and we might well have believed ourselves at the door of a poor recluse, living retired from the world, on an acre of paternal soil, in face of a little valley, on the edge of a forest.

"ABDUL MEDJID had not yet arrived. The peasant keeper of the lodge opened to us a wooden gate, directed us to pass, and, conducting us by the garden, brought us before the door of the kiosk. The door was open to admit the fresh air, the breeze or the sound of the murmuring water as it fell into the basin. In passing, we cast a hasty glance into the lodge. It was simply an empty hall, of four walls painted in oil, of a gray color, a pavement in mosaic of stones from the brook, a bench (divan,) covered with white cotton cloth, around the room; a large window, half masked by the enormous trunk of one of the willows; a little basin, murmuring under the drops of a jet of water in the centre of the mosaic floor,—no furniture, no ornaments; the cottage was embellished by its isolation, its murmuring waters and shade. Mussulmans born in the mountains and valleys of Asia, children of shepherds, have brought with them men into their palaces, the remembrance, the images, and the passions of their wild, natural country life; they love it the more for its simplicity, and do not exaggerate it.

"A woman, a horse, a gun, a spring, a tree, and you have the five stages of the Paradise of a child of Othman. * * * * * * On entering the kiosk, I looked for the Sultan. He was standing nearly half hidden by the shade between the window and the wall, at the angle of the room the least lighted."

"The Sultan, Abdul Medjid, is a young man of six or seven and twenty years, but of an appearance a little older than his years. His carriage is elevated, elegant, fine. He carries his head with that gracious ease and nobility which the length of neck gives to the bust of the Alexander the younger. His features regular, his forehead high, eyes blue, brows arched like the Circassian race, nose straight, lips finely formed and half open; chin, that base of character in the human face, firm and well set. The general impression is imposing and attractive; you realize that you are in the presence of a man who prefers to be loved than to be feared. There is timidity and modesty in the look, melancholy in the mouth, and precocious lassitude in the bearing; you see a man who has thought and suffered before his time. But that which outweights all is a grave and meditative sensibility. One would say that the man carries something heavy and holy in his thoughts, as of a nation, and feels the weight and boliness of his burden. No youth, no lightness in his expression. It is the statue of a youthful Pontiff, rather than that of a young Sovereign. His face inspires a certain softening of the heart. You think, in spite of yourself, there is a man devoted to supreme power, who is youthful, handsome, all powerful, who will be great without doubt; but never free, never divested of care, never happy. He will be pitied and loved, because in his greatness he sees visibly his responsibility. It is permitted to every man in his empire to be happy except himself. The throne took him from his cradle. His costume was simple—plain—almost a mourning; a surtout of dark cloth to his knees, neck uncovered, pantaloons of dark cloth in large folds over patent leather boots, a sabre without ornament, with a large hilt. His features alone would have betrayed him to a crowd. I felt moved, attracted, softened, by the melancholy air in majesty.

"While I spoke with him, he turned the hilt of his sabre several times, at the same time that he half supported himself upon it; he blushed and looked down like a maiden in her virtue.

"We followed him to the examination he was about to make of his military youths."

"What a destiny—perhaps the only one in history, said I on leaving with my friends, is that of this young man whom we have just seen—to witness the work of regeneration of a nation.

"How many prayers for him, and in how many languages, are raised at the end of each day, which he thus devotes to his many duties.

"How many there are who invoke the Master of kinds and nations, that he will be pleased to direct the union of Europe to the East—the Mussulman to the Christian world, in that tolerance and unity as they are evidently united in heart. It is not sufficient, said we, that he should be good and great—he must be King; it is not all sufficient to be good, great, sovereign and young—he must be understood, loved, seconded by the age in which he lives. Abdul Medjid is all these. May heaven bless in him the forty millions of people, the continents, the seas, the isles, the mountains, the rivers, which depend upon him."

Leigh Hunt and Thomas Carlyle.

The following characteristic story of these two "intelligent gladiators" is related in "A New Spirit of the Age:"

Leigh Hunt and Carlyle were once present among a small party of equally well known men. It chanced that the conversation rested with these two, both first-rate talkers, and the others sat well pleased to listen. Leigh Hunt had said something about the islands of the Blest, or El Dorado, or the Millennium, and was flowing on in his bright and hopeful way, when Carlyle dropt some heavy tree-trunk across Hunt's pleasant stream, and banked it up with philosophical doubts and objections at every interval of the speaker's joyous progress. But the unmitigated Hunt never ceased his overflowing anticipations, nor the saturnine Carlyle his infinite demurs to those finite flourishings. The listners laughed and applauded by turns; and had now fairly pitted them against each other, as the philosopher of Hopefulness and of the Unhopeful. The contest continued with all that ready wit and philosophy, that mixture of pleasantry and profundity, that extensive knowledge of books and character, with their ready application in argument or illustration, and that perfect ease and good nature, which distinguished each of these men. The opponents were so well matched, that it was quite clear the contest would never come to an end. But the night was far advanced, and the party broke up. They all sallied forth; and leaving the close room, the candles and the argument behind them, suddenly found themselves in presence of a most brilliant star-light night. They all looked up. "Now," thought Hunt, "Carlyle's done for!—he can have no answer to that!" "There!" shouted Hunt, "look up there! look at that glorious harmony, that sings with infinite voices an eternal song of hope in the soul of man." Carlyle looked up. They all remained silent to hear what he would say. They began to think he was silenced at last—he was a mortal man. But out of that silence came a few low-toned words, in a broad Scotch accent. And who, on earth, could have anticipated what the voice said? "Eh! it's a sad sight!"—— Hunt sat down on a stone step. They all laughed—then looked very thoughtful. Had the finite measured itself with infinity, instead of surrendering itself up to the influence? Again they laughed—then bade each other good night, and betook themselves homeward with slow and serious pace. There might be some reason for sadness, too. That brilliant firmament probably contained infinite worlds, each full of struggling and suffering beings—of beings who had to die—for life in the stars implies that those bright worlds will also be full of graves: but all that life, like ours, knowing not whence it came, nor whither it goeth, and the brilliant Universe in its great Movement having, perhaps, no more certain knowlege of itself, nor of its ultimate destination, than hath one of the suffering specks that compose this small spot we inherit.

SINGULAR ANECDOTE OF A THRUSH.—There is much more intellect in birds than people suppose. An instance of this occurred the other day, at a slate quarry, belonging to a friend, from whom I have the narrative. A thrush, not aware of the expansive properties of gunpowder, thought proper to build her nest on a ridge of a quarry, in the very centre of which they were constantly blasting the rock. At first, she was very much discomposed by the fragments flying in all directions, but she still would not quit her chosen locality; she soon observed that a bell rang whenever a train was about to be fired, and that at the notice the workmen retired to safe positions.

In a few days, when she heard the bell, she quitted her exposed situation, and flew down where the workmen sheltered themselves, dropping close to their feet. There she would remain until the explosion had taken place, and then return to her nest. The workmen observed this, narrated it to their employers, and it was also told to visitors who came to visit the quarry. The visitors naturally expressed the wish to witness so curious a specimen of intellect; but as the rocks could not always be blasted when visitors came, the bell was rung instead, and for a few times answered the same purpose. The thrush flew down close to where they stood, but she perceived she was trifled with, and it interfered with the process of incubation; the consequence was, that afterwards when the bell was rung she would peep over the ledge to ascertain if the workmen did retreat, and if they did not, she would remain where she was, probably saying to herself—"No, no, gentlemen, I'm not to be roused off my eggs merely for your amusement."—Cor. London Dispatch.

THE CZAR AS A MILITARY MAN.—People will remember that Nicholas, when at Varna, prudently kept his steamer out of the reach of the Turkish guns. Marshal Diebitch undertook the command on condition that neither the Czar nor his brother should remain in Turkey. Since then Nicholas has yielded to the conviction that he is not able to conduct a war, and so he has contented himself with commanding at reviews, and this he does with delight and fanaticism. He identifies himself with such manœuvres so well, that he takes them for actual engagements. He takes off his helmet once and cries out, "Boys, God for us; into the fire!" Another time he gives his aid-de-camp an order to carry, and forgetting that there was no danger, he says, "Fight your way through; care not for your family, I will provide for them." Obliged to surrender St. Petersburg, he puts in this clause in the capitulation, that "The winter palace and Imporial family shall be preserved; if not, he will fight to the last drop of his blood!!" * * * * At night he gives orders that the alarm shall not be sounded before 8 o'clock in the morning, yet to send him reports every hour. He wraps himself up in his cloak, and slumbers. The General who has to send reports has them all in readiness, and goes to bed, ordering a paper to be taken every hour from his table and carried to the Emperor. Once the Czar killed a great many horses in searching for the enemy, whom he could not meet with. He calls the commander of the detachment, and says to him, "Why did I not see you—were you afraid?" "I have neither cavalry nor artillery. I must keep in the forest," answered the General. The Czar arrested him, and the General who succeeded him, in order to avvoid the same fate, drove the division before the eyes of the Czar, suffered himself to be beaten, but escaped the anger of His Majesty. And such an Emperor is to conquer the world!

CRONSTADT.—The following description of Cronstadt, given in a Berlin journal, although incomplete, may not be uninteresting at the present moment:—"Cronstadt is situated on the island of Kosline, at the eastern corner of the Finland Gulf. The island, about one and a-half English miles long and proportionately narrow, is close to the mouth of the Neva, and may be regarded as the port of St. Petersburg, whence it is distant about eighteen miles (English). The town, which owes its foundation to Peter the Great, contains about 30,000 inhabitants, and is intersected by the Peter and Catherine canals. On the northern side of the island stands the powerful Alexander ramparts, constructed of solid granite blocks and armed with heaviest guns. On the southern flank of this is the harbour, the channel to which is defended by the cititel, erected on a rocky foundation, and on the opposite side by the Kronslot fortress. Properly speaking, there exist three harbours for ships of war within the island, with docks, arsenals, building yards, and soforth. A fourth and smaller barbour for mercantile vessels likewise exists within the defences. The old Menschikoff palace has long been converted into a foundry, arsenal, and school for pilots. The Marine Hospital is arranged for 2,600 patients. In order to diminish dangers that may occur from fire, all wooden constructions have been pulled down, and all superfluous stores removed."

PEELING AND BOILING POTATOES.—The loss of the most nutritious portion of the potatoe is incurred by peeling off the rind and parts directly underneath, as in those the nitrogenized matter (but no starch) chiefly reside, which are dissolved by cold water and coagulated by water while boiling. If potatoes, therefore, are thrown into cold water, and heated, much of their nitrogenized principle will be extracted before the water reaches the point of ebullition; whereas, if it be made to boil before they are introduced, the coagulation will cause the matters to be retained within the tissue of the vegetables lying contiguous to the rind.

The best way to cook potatoes is to steam them; an old iron pot, with a close lid and a little water will do the business.

The Baltic.

The corn magazines had been mostly removed to Tirasopol. The arrival of the allied fleet was expected daily.

A letter from Odessa, of the 30th ult., in a Frankford journal, announces that the inhabitants were afraid of a new bombardment, as for two days previously ships of the line belonging to the enemy were cruising in the vicinity of the port.

The Moniteur de la Flotte throws a doubt upon the announcement that the entire Baltic fleet will be at Cherbourg next month. Without being altogether destitute of foundation, the report is at least premature. No further decision has yet been come to, and the London Government is still hesitating. The squadron is, indeed, recalled, but what it then is to do the Moniteur de la Flotte thinks they will not leave the Baltic till they are actually forced to do so by the frosts, and that, inasmuch as the frosts sometimes set in very late, the steamers may possibly stay yet a long time. So long as an English ship remains in the enemy's waters there will be a French vessel, says the Moniteur de la Flotte, to share the danger.

The Moniteur contains a full account of the destruction of Bomarsund, in a letter dated Ledsund, 5th inst:—"The Governments of England and France, judging from the nature of the reports addressed to them that the presence of the army in this quarter was no longer necessary, came to the resolution of blowing up the fortifications and of evacuating the country. Despatches to that effect arrived at Bomarsund on the 28th August, and measures were instantly taken to carry out the orders received from Paris and London. General Niel, of the Engineers, who so ably directed the siege operations, in concert with Lieut.-Colonel Jourjon, of the same corps, gave the necessary directions to destroy the fortications. On 31st August the great tower of Presto was blown up, and its destruction was complete and instantaneous. On the spot where the menacing lines of this huge construction seemed a few days before to defy our armies, nothing is visible to-day but a shapeless heap of ruins. The other towers were likewise destroyed, but the blowing up the great fortress required more time and labor. During three days no one was allowed to enter it, in order not to interfere with the works of the engineers. On the 2nd of September, a short time before the explosion, I inspected it a second time in company with Lt.-Col. Rochebouet, of the artillery, and some ingineer officers. It was a curious and terrible sight. The great court-yard was silent and deserted. A few soldiers were on duty keeping watch on the powder. Twenty mine chambers were placed in the casemates, divided into equal zones, and a match, 2,000 yards in length, circulated in every direction, extending to the different cavities where powder had been lodged. In passing through the courts and mined casemates, every one took care not to touch the match with their feet, as the slightest shock might have set fire to it. After a minute inspection we retired. The drums beat to arms to warn every one off. At 7 o'clock the engineers lighted the match, and then ran off to a place of safety. The smoke was seen to advance by degrees, and shortly after was heard a terrible explosion, followed by others equally terrific. A black and dense smoke, from the midst of which were showered heaps of stones, darkened the atmosphere, and spread itself over the port and surrounding woods. A vast crowd witnessed this gloomy and magnificent spectacle. The inhabitants, from every part of the island and all the soldiers of the expeditionary corps covered the heights around the fortress. Towards night the explosion was followed by a conflagration which illuminated the entire Bay of Lumpar. For several successive days the smoke was seen to issue from the ruins. All those operations have been completely successful, without the loss of a single man, or without causing any injury to the dwellings or property of the inhabitants. Immediately after the troops were embarked in the greatest order."

The Stockholm papers announce that an allied force has landed at Uriensborg, near Swenborg (Helsingfors), erected batteries, and destroyed a large division of Russian gun-boats, which the enemy thought were safe in the harbor. The town was set on fire.

How to keep gathered Fruit and Flowers always fresh.

A friend has informed us that fruit and flowers may be preserved from decay and fading by immersing them in a solution of gum-arabic in water two or three times, waiting a sufficient time between each immersion to allow the gum to dry. This process covers the surface of the fruit with a thin coating of the gum, which is entirely impervious to the air, and thus prevents the decay of the fruit, or the withering of the flower. Our friend has roses thus preserved, which have all the beauty and fragrance of freshly plucked ones, though they have been separated from the parent stem since June last. To insure success in experiments of this kind, it should be borne in mind that the whole surface must be completely covered; for if the air only gains entrance at a pin hole, the labour will be all lost. In preserving specimens of fruit, particular care should be taken to cover the stem, end and all, with gum. A good way is to wind a thread of silk about the stem, and then sink it slowly in the solution, which should not be so strong as to leave a particle of the gum undissolved. The gum is so perfectly transparent that you can with difficulty detect its presence, except by the touch. Here we have another simple method of fixing the fleeting beauty of nature, and surrounding ourselves ever with objects which do much elevate the mind, refine the taste, and purify the heart.—Scientific American.

Alexander Dumas.

Alexander Dumas has just received from an admirer in Russia the most precious talisman known in Europe—a fragment of a hanged man's rope. This talisman was formerly, according to his own story, the most unlucky thing alive; but no sooner was he in possession of the rope than his uncle died, and left him a large fortune, by which he was enabled to marry a lady with whom he was in love, and who had just given him an heiress, the image of herself. Learning that Dumas was sick, poor, sore of his fourteen hours of labor a day, he determined to cut him off a piece of his rope in endeavour to reinstate him in the good graces of the blind goddess. The way the Russian himself came into possession of the rope was singular. The father of the lady with whom he was in love was governor of a city, and upon his daughter's imploring him to obtain for her a suicide's rope, he summoned the warden of the political prisons, and acquainted him with the young lady's desire. The warden said that there was certainly a great deal of hanging and suicide going on, but it was usually done with an old cravat or a pocket handkerchief, not in a state to be presented to a lady. Besides, the superstition is explicit—the instrument of suspension must be a rope. The Governor told him to pretend to drop a rope in the way of the prisoners, some one of whom would, doubtless, put the occasion to profit. This direction was followed, and the young lady was soon is possession of an elegant new rope, from which had dangled an enemy of the State. She sent it to her lover, who was soon enabled by it to marry her. The piece sent to Dumas is three inches long. He says he hopes it will have an effect upon the quarter's subscription to the Mousquetaire, for if it does not he shall throw it into the fire.—Paris Corr. of N. Y. Times.

The Brazilian Slave-Trade.

It appears, by returns laid before Parliament, from the Slave-trade correspondence with foreign powers, annually printed by Government, from the evidence taken before Mr. Hume's Committee on Slave-trade treaties, in the Session 1853, as well as from trustworthy information derived from unofficial sources,—that the importation of slaves from Africa into the Empire of Brazil, which, previously to the year 1850, ranged from 25,000 to 70,000 annually, has, since that period, entirely ceased; and that there is also reason to believe that a very general change of opinion on the subject of the Slave-trade has taken place among the native Brazilian population. The Legislature of Brazil, in the session of 1850, passed severe laws against parties carrying on traffic in slaves between Africa and Brazil, and at the same time voted a large sum of money for the purpose of establishing a suppression squadron on the coasts of the Empire. It further appears that the Executive Government of Brazil seem to have honestly, zealously, and to the best of its ability, carried out the intentions of the Brazilian Legislature in these enactments, by driving away or prosecuting the most notorious among the importers of slaves, by releasing slaves when found on board slave-ships on the coast, and by taking measures for the encouragement of free immigration from Europe.

Destruction of Greytown.—The Genoa correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser says:—

"The destruction of Greytown by the American Republic is characterized in all circles here as an unmitigated outrage, which is only redeemed from the contempt due to its meanness by its wickedness. The despots of civilized Europe, it is currently said, have too much self-respect for such a cowardly exhibition of vandalism, more like the incendiary licentiousness of bullies and freebooters, that the tempered wrath of superior power. Such is a simple translation of the language which American citizens abroad are mortified to hear in all the highways, cafes and saloons of Europe."

Mat. Minnis, a mulatto, who, for several years, was a newspaper carrier in the Journal office and Democrat office, has written a cool, saucy letter to us, announcing his 'safe arrival in Chatham,' in Canada. He belonged to Mrs. Virden in Louisville, and worked in our office until some three or four weeks ago, when she took him away, and made an engagement, we learn, at the Journal office. She supposed he was there to work, but, on the contrary, we are informed that he loafed about the city for a few days, and then made off to Canada.—Louisville Democrat.

To Correspondents.

A Chatham correspondent wishes us to publish a letter—on which he neglects to pay the postage—relative to a person who has defrauded him, and whom he has got a warrant out against. The proper course, to pursue, in such cases, is to write or send a telegraphic despatch to the Police Office here.

Interest in the 'Freeman' increasing.

It gives us pleasure to be enabled to inform our readers of the increasing interest being manifested in the Freeman. The General Agent is now West, and from accounts received, seems to be quite successful.

The citizens of Brantford lately organized a Provincial Union, and the Ladies held a Tea Meeting, which was quite profitable although at the time, numbers of the inhabitants were attending the Exhibition at London. Too much praise cannot be awarded the Ladies of Brantford, for their zeal in the good cause; and we have reason to hope, that their sisters in other towns will show themselves equally worthy of commendation.

At London, and other places, Unions have been formed, and Tea Meetings, &c., will be held. But we look for a more extended statement, at an early period, which has been delayed by the indisposition of the Agent.

Our friends in the City, too, are awake to the importance of the matter, of which they have lately given evidence, in the shape of a collection and subscription List—which is extending as a voluntary donation to the Freeman.

The sum collected at the Public Meeting held in Sayer-street Chapel, last week, £2 11s., was handed in by W. R. Abbott, Esq., a few days afterward, the receipt of which should have been acknowledged last week. C.

From the National Era.

Slaves Liberated.—The Rev. T. D. Herndon, his wife and two sisters, have liberated forty-eight slaves, who will be sent to Liberia in November. They will be accompanied by eight free colored persons, who are connected to them by marriage, and by seven other slaves similarly connected, who will be liberated by different persons, to accompany those of Mr. Herndon. Mr. Thaddeus Herndon will also send out a family of eight slaves at the same time, if the requisite amount of money is raised for the purpose. Their owners are unable to give them anything besides their freedom and an outfit, and the Colonization Society has undertaken to raise the means of sending them to Liberia.

In order to meet the emergency, the Secretary, Mr. McLain, sent to 426 of his friends a statement of the case, with a call upon them for ten dollars each, by which means he proposed to raise the requisite amount of 4,260 dollars. We learn that more than three hundred have responded handsomely. G.

Why not take the 4,260 dollars, which are so readily forthcoming, and purchase some of the rich land in "this Canada," for the fifty-six persons, instead of spending it in paying their passage across the ocean, to a country where each individual is liable to, at least, six months' sickness, by way of getting inured to the climate, and should he be provided for during that time, will have nothing to begin the world with, but a ruined constitution; thus clearly throwing away 26 years of time, and worse than throwing away nearly four thousand dollars.

Supposing those people to be divided into families of four persons each, the sum first mentioned would pay their passage to Canada, purchase 100 acres of good land, cash down, and build a comfortable log house thereon, for each family, besides furnishing them with six months' provision, to say nothing of the capital stock of health possessed with which to begin life, for its importance to settlers in a new country cannot be estimated.

We wonder that the suggestive and prophetic G., who tells us so learnedly what becomes of us through all the different stages of "ascent" up to the one where we merge into the "Great Anglo-Saxon" mass, and who gives such elaborately-written articles on our "manifest destiny," does not call the attention of the friends who always respond handsomely when a "cargo of blacks" is about to be shipped to Africa, to this great northern field for their benevolent operations.

But we had forgotten that G. thinks that "manifest destiny" points to our final establishment somewhere in or bordering on the tropical regions; and if that will be a "fact," of course we will not suppose him to be so daring as to be found working against destiny.

At last, though, there is one part of the subject upon which we would like to be enlightened; it is this: After having arrived, it is said, at such a state of perfection, that we can and do take a position among the whites—although there are still a few drops of African blood in our veins,—"manifest destiny" ceases at once to impel us towards the tropics; we are immediately invested with the right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" in any part of the earth, and the natural qualifications necessary to maintaining it. Now, why manifest destiny is so arbitrary as to restrict all of the shades from jet black "up" to the one that ranks with the Anglo-Saxon, to one belt around the earth, while the last one, although not white, is allowed to be a participant in all of the rights, in all the earth, is hard for "common minds" to comprehend. We are strongly inclined to fall out with "destiny" entirely, because it seems disposed to be partial.

Why persons who, with their ancesters for several generations, have been born in northern climates, and who are as nearly related to the European, as the African, should be impelled manifestly, towards the warm countries as their proper home, and why the African element, although the lesser, should exert such a controlling influence, until the grade is reached where the last thin layer of white paint causes the scale to preponderate on the other side, at the same time scattering manifest destiny to the winds, are questions which we hope some of the wise ones will answer.

Upon after consideration of what we have said, we have come to the conclusion that there may be more in the "destiny" than had been dreamed of in our "philosophy." It may, indeed, be something of the kind which is impelling the administration at Washington to wish to obtain possession of Cuba, Hayti, and other tropical islands, and to make such world renowned military achievements as that lately witnessed at Greytown, all of which places are said to be "manifestly" part and parcel of the great Republic.

In consideration of these facts, which do indeed seem to give the doctrine of manifest destiny some claim to consideration, we would advise those who, like Henry A. Wise, are so concerned about the purity of Anglo-Saxon blood, so anxious that it shall not become contaminated, to look up the census reports, and otherwise institute a careful inquiry, to ascertain whether their Southern brethren, although ranking with the whites, should not properly be given their true place among the coloured people; for, if not, how can "manifest destiny," which impels towards the tropic, have any effect on them. C.

We differ from our correspondent in regard to the two Conventions, we do not think that they, and especially the one held in Rochester, are exhibitions of the good effects of the law referred to; such assemblies always furnish time for the delivery of stereotyped speeches, and the display of oratorical powers; but as yet there has been no practical benefit derived from them, directly, their indirect effect on the people has been to cause them to lose confidence in the power possessed by those who generally act a conspicuous part in the grave deliberations of such assemblages, to aid in their elevation otherwise than as individuals. Having been so often told that plans for their good would be forthcoming, and having witnessed the adjournment of Convention after Convention, each like its predecessor, leaving no evidence of its having taken place, except strings of wordy resolutions, the good people at last determined to let the Conventions take care of themselves, and each one furnish his own plan, which at last is the true course.

The Cleaveland Convention was held so recently, that sufficient time has scarcely elapsed to warrant us in talking of its effect, but from the fact that a great many of the "wise heads," and "eloquent orators," who figured there, have acted a prominent part in those formerly held, we do not think that it either will leave any mark.

The "Great Rochester Convention" was held, and every body said, "now at least we shall see something practical, for here is the talent of our men concentrated;" at last we shall have possession of something to give us an impetus forward. "The plan, the perfection of practicality, the ultimatum, was produced, and exhibited before their wondering eyes, and continued in existence until a few months since when it suddenly disappeared, having melted into air, "thin air." Correspondence.

Good growing out of Evil—Filmorism.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Mr. Editor.—While conversing with some friends, who have felt the effects of the working of that most attrocious and fiendish act, of the Congress of the U. S. A., known as the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850, or, by way of derision, Filmore's Law of 1850, I have been induced to pen the following, to show what some people think and say of it.

I need not attempt to give an elucidation of this monstrous act, presented to the people in the garb of law, because its intentions and workings are already too well known to the public. It has been argued on one hand, that the fugitive slave law of 1850 has manifestly done a great deal of harm to the Colored people of the free states, to those who were born there, as well as fugitives from slavery who had taken shelter among them, as a shield or safeguard against the baneful missiles of the malicious slaveholders. And again, it has been said, that this same law has truly done, and is yet doing, much good to both the above named classes of colored people in the free states. Being guided by reason, I draw my conclusion from the two extremes.

I shall first call the attention of the public to a few of the most prominent evils resulting directly from this act. Previous to the passage of the fugitive slave law, many slaves becoming tired of their cruel taskmasters at their homes in the south, as Shadrick, Jerry, McQuery, Bibb, and many others have done, choosing rather to suffer the affliction of providing for themselves, as freemen, at the north, than to enjoy the privilege of having a master to provide for them, at the south, a country which is argued to be so congenial and befitting to the colored race, have left their homes, the place of their nativity, and many of them their wives, their sons, and their daughters, whom they so dearly loved as their all, and sought an asylum under the government of the so-called free states. I have said so-called free states, because they are not free states, properly speaking. In Ohio and Pennsylvania the colored people are denied the right of suffrage, as is the case also in a majority of the others, and, until as late as the year 1848, they were denied their oaths in the Court of Common Pleas in the state of Ohio. Shame on such free states as those really are! "The land of the free, and the home of the brave," so say American patriots, and so they would have the world to believe. But "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has been read too much in England, France, Germany, Italy, and other European countries, for them to believe such futile and false reports of vain boasted American freedom. The States of Indiana and Illinois have gone still further in infamy and disgrace to the American flag, to prove that they are not free states, for both of them have respectively passed stringent laws, even forbidding the immigration of colored people into them.

Many slaves, after escaping from southern bondage, had married wives, and purchased homes, and were making a respectable living, at the head of prosperous and loving little families, reposing in deep tranquility, and useful members in society, at the north; when lo! to their utter surprise and dissatisfaction, they read Filmore's law, giving to their masters the power of hunting, recapturing, and returning back into hopeless bondage, as many as they could trail up with their blood-bounds of the south, and with their worse than blood-hounds, the negro hunters of the north.

A multitude of such instances have occurred, some of which are too monstrous for pen to describe. A glance at the public newspapers of the day will tell you some of the horrors of the workings of this most detestable act of the Congress of the United States, and in the middle of the nineteenth century, in a land of boasted freedom and equality, under the brilliant rays of the preaching of the everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ. I learn, with the deepest regret, too, that Mr. Filmore was at one time considered a staunch abolitionist, and a true friend to the colored people of New York; but now, behold him, you colored people of N. Y., and confess that Millard Filmore is not the man that you were looking for, and what is still more painful yet to record, comes from responsible colored men of N. Y., who assure me that it was principally through the aid of colored men, that Mr. Filmore first rose into public life, and they themselves were once his supporters. One more instance stated, and I shall leave this portion of the subject.

Filmore's law, as it is termed by the way of derision, does not only cast its baneful and deleterious influence on the fugitive, but on the free inhabitants, both black and white. Many instances have occurred in which free colored men, who never have been slaves, have been arrested on charge of being fugitives. The case of William Freeman, of Indianopilis, Indiana, is a sufficient evidence to all intelligent, and philanthropic people. But Indiana is not alone in this particular. James Watkins, a young colored man of Cincinnati, Ohio, and an intimate acquaintance of mine, was arrested in September, 1853, on charge of being a fugitive from labour at the south, and it is most clearly known that Mr. Watkins never was a slave. The free white citizens of the north also feel the evil bearings of this tyrannical and oppressive law; because, regardless of what their minds, their consciences, and their religion may be, as respects the colored people, they are in common with the colored people, called upon to aid in the execution of this most unholy and worse than heathenish law, or suffer the penalty thereof—imprisonment, with heavy fine.

Having now briefly noticed some of the many evils, directly issuing from Mr. Filmore's law of 1850, I next solicit your attention to the good that is argued to have grown, and is yet growing out of this evil-intended act. It is a well known fact that previous to the passage of the fugitive slave bill of 1850, the colored people, in general, in the States, were opposed to emigrating to Canada; this fact the colored people of Canada themselves authenticate. I find it a common expression among the colored people of Canada, that Filmore's law has done more good than harm, especially to fugitives, by forcing them out of the free states, where they had been remaining some of them a number of years, in menial occupations, in consequence of prejudice and oppression, into Canada, where they were obliged to engage in honorable and independent pursuits, farming, &c., through which means they have purchased homes, and are becoming wealthy and respectable tillers of the soil, and manufacturers of the products therefrom. The fact is admitted on both sides of the water, by friends and foes, that the passage of this nefarious bill has awakened the spirits and energies of the colored people throughout the entire length and breadth of the States, from Maine to Texas, and from the great northern Lakes to the Mexican Gulf, is heard the cries, the uplifted voices of the Colored people, as the voice of one man, "We must do something for our future elevation, and our lasting welfare;" they are all crying with one accord, "We must make an issue, create an event." It has not only aroused the fugitive up out of the nominally free states into Her Majesty's domains—the land of freedom and equal rights, where no man is known by his color, and where they are now enjoying their inalienable rights—in Canada; but it has aroused the Colored people as a mass throughout the United States; so much so, that not quite three years had elapsed after the passage of Filmore's law, before the colored people called a National Convention, to consider the wrongs imposed upon them by the oppresive laws of the United States; this Convention met in the City of Rochester, N. Y., July the 6th, 1853, then and there to deliberate on the wrongs imposed upon them, and the best means of ameliorating their condition, by uniting themselves together in a great National Council, and forming a National League. This was the first time that the colored people of the United States of America ever assembled themselves together in a National Convention, to consult their common good. These are some of the good things growing out of evil—Filmorism; and it has not stopped there, for not many months had been suffered to pass by the sons of oppression, before another call was issued, signed by Dr. Martin, R. Delaney, Rev. Wm. Webb, Rev. A. R. Green, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and others, for a National Emigration Convention, held in Cleaveland, Ohio, in August, 1854; the time of meeting was agreed to be the 24th day of August. The time arrived, and the convention met, and I am happy to say, as a member (from Ohio) of that memoriable body, that the spirit of (forced) enterprize and emigration was thoroughly evinced: for not only were the free states represented, but glorious to tell, a number of the Slave States had become acquainted with the horrors of the fugitive slave law, and caught the fire of the spirit of emigration, to shun the ghastly missiles thrown from Millard Filmore's act, and the slave power in general so that the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, and Louisiana, four slave holding states, sent delegates as their representatives in the great National Emigration Convention. Hence, it is seen that some good at last is growing out of the most detestable and wicked law that can be recorded in the annals of crime. Another good this law is effecting, after giving fugitives homes in Canada, is this; it is making the body of colored people stronger in Canada, in a free country under the protection of the British flag, where they enjoy the privilege denied them in the states, of uniting themselves as citizens, under one common law of equality, which is the only true basis of elevation and permanent independence known to any race or people. You will perceive that I have not mentioned the colored inhabitants of the U. S., with the title of "Citizens," as some incoherently might deem proper. No, and God forbid that I should be guilty of publishing to the world such a monstrous falsity as that; because they are not citizens in the States, but slaves to the whites, by law or prejudice, and aliens at home, and strangers to the common wealth of their nativity! I have said that the fugitive law had done good, in pushing colored emigration into Canada, and I believe that this fact is not unfounded, for the emigration of colored people from the U. S. into Canada, has increased with such rapidity, since the passage of the fugitive slave act of 1850, that the inhabitants of Canada, by the way of distinction, and in hatred of that law, unrivalled for wickedness in histories of heathen or papal enactments, call the emigrants of this day or since 1850, "Filmore's Emigrants." Much more might be said yet, with propriety, and I sometimes think that too much cannot be said and done explanatory of this shameful act, now disgracing the Statutes of the United States of America, and degrading her in the estimation of every free and enlightened nation on the globe. But of its wickedness entire, and the depth and weight of misery and woe it has caused, God only knows, and eternity will reveal.

Loss of the Steamer "Arctic."

New York, October 11.

The steamer Arctic was lost off Cape Race on the 27th September. She came in collision with an unknown propeller. Only 32 persons known to be saved. Eighteen have arrived here. Capt. Luce, Mrs. E. K. Collins and family are amongst the lost.

The propeller's fate is unknown; Capt. Wall, of the Huron, states however, that on the morning of the 30th, he discovered a singular looking vessel in the distance, which may have been the wreck of the propellor.

Halifax, 11th.—No advices of the missing boats of the Arctic.

The following statement of the loss of the Arctic, by Mr. Balham, the 2nd officer, appeared in an extra on Tuesday. Mr. B. and the other officers and crew saved in the two boats arrived at Broad Cove, and reached here on Tuesday. On Wednesday, 27th, noon, Cape Race, bearing N. W., 65 miles, running in a very thick fog, was struck on the starboard bow, about 60 ft. abaft the cutwater, by an iron steamer, which made three large holes in the ship, 2 below the water, one of which was about 5½ feet in length and 1½ wide, leaving the whole cutwater of the iron steamer clear through the Arctic's side. So dense was the fog, that the vessel could not be seen a minute before the collision. The helm was put hard a starboard, the engine was stopped instantly, and backed at full speed until clear of the other steamer, which occupied a couple of minutes. The iron steamer seemed to be sinking bow first. Captain Luce immediately gave orders to clear away the quarter boats, which was done, and Mr. Gourley left the Arctic in charge of the starboard boat. On lowering the port, the Captain exclaimed, "Hoist up that boat again, Mr. Balham," and beckoned me to go to him; on doing so, he told me to go over the bow to ascertain what damage had been done. I then found the holes above mentioned—upon informing him of the fact, he gave orders to get sail up to try and get them round about, to endeavour to stop the leak; which was promptly done, but to no advantage whatever. So much of the bow and iron was broken off the other steamer projecting that the sails could not be brought close to the vessel's sides. The carpenter was then lowered down over the vessel's side, and pillows and matresses passed down to him to try if possible to force them in; but the leak was found to be so far below the water line that they could not be got in, and every effort to stop the leak proved unavailing. Capt. Luce then ordered the ship's head to be kept N. W. by W. By this time we had lost sight of the chief officers boat and the other steamer, which we supposed had sunk. We had not been on our course more than four or five minutes before she ran over a boat and crew belonging to the other vessel, all of whom perished, with the exception of one who caught hold of the rope hanging over the bow. Directly the boat was seen, orders were given to stop the engine, which the Chief Engineer said could not be done. In about 30 minutes all the lower fires were out, and at least three feet of water in the ship, fore and aft. By this time the confusion among the passengers was very great, but they used all efforts in assisting the deck pumps going, and in lightening the ship, for the purpose of endeavoring to get at the leak from the inside,—which was found to be useless; and numbers of them got into the boats, which were still hanging to the davits. In forty-five minutes after the collision, I came up from the fore-hold and informed the captain that the water was on a level with the lower deck beam, and that it was impossible to get at the leak. I then asked him what he thought would be the fate of the Ship when he stated his belief to me that there was no hope of saving her. He then told me to see to the boats. On going to those in the port side, I found them completely filled with men, women, and children, and no possibility of getting near them; and immediately went to the starboard side and ordered two of the crew to lower the guard boat; and asked the Captain what were his intentions. He replied that "the ship's fate should be his." I then asked him if he would not allow his son to go, as I intended to take a boat, but he returned an answer that he should share his fate. It was soon discovered that there was no hope of saving the Arctic; and the lady, daughter and son of Mr. E. K. Collins were put on board a boat; in the act of lowering which, one of the tackles gave way, and all except one lady, who clung to a sailor holding fast to a boat were precipitated into the sea and lost. I then jumped into a boat and was ordered by the Captain to cut away the tackle and fall astern. I did so—and at the same time about 20 persons I suppose jumped overboard, of whom 17 or 18 were picked up. We fell in with another boat which had been lowered on the other side and lightened her of part of her load—leaving 19 in her and 26 in my own boat. The last sight we had of the ship her guards were level with the water, and the surface of the sea was covered with human beings who had fallen or jumped overboard, to whom it was impossible to render any assistance, and we soon lost sight of all as the fog continued to be very dense. I then asked the boats crew whether they were willing to be governed by me—which was unanimously assented to and I was put in complete command of both boats. We were then 60 miles south of Cape Race. Deeming it my duty to take the nearest course for the safety of all, after pulling for 40 hours, with nothing to guide us but the run of the sea which I took to be heaving from the southwards and in a thick fog which lasted all the time, we reached Broad Cove, some 12 miles north of Cape Race. We then proceeded by land to Renews, which place we reached on Friday last. There obtained and took charge of a small schooner which was hired by the Purser and myself, and proceeded immediately in search of the wreck or the boats. We cruised around in a strong gale of wind from the North East but discovered no trace of the ship or boats. I sent word to Captain Leith of the City of Philadelphia steamer and informed him of the catastrophe, and I am informed he sent off two vessels which he had employed about his own ship. Mr. Allan Goddrick, of Renews, also sent away a vessel on Saturday evening. It is with the greatest regret that I have to report that no trace of the Arctic or the boats could be found, but as there were many vessels in the neighborhood of the disaster, it is not impossible that many lives may have been saved. No doubt, however, is left in my mind as to the total loss of the Arctic.

(Signed) Wm. Balham, 2nd Officer, Arctic.

Additional about the "Arctic."

Halifax, October 11.

We have received Newfoundland dates to the 4th inst. The French screw steamer Vesta arrived at St. Johns, on the 4th, with her fore mast and bow shattered to pieces, she being the vessel that came in collision with the ill-fated Arctic. She had on board 31 of the Artic's crew, which she picked up at the time of the accident. The Vesta lost 13 of her passengers. Three of the Arctic's boats have not been heard of; but being life-boats, it is supposed they may have been picked up by passenger ships. Vessels which were sent in search of the boats returned without finding the slightest trace of them. All the passengers and crew saved, as advised yesterday, left here for Boston yesterday in the Europa.

Boston, 11th.—A gentleman who arrived here to-day from New York, informs us that there was a report at Fall River this morning, that a vessel loaded with railroad iron had arrived at Warren, R. I., with 40 persons picked up from one of the missing boats of the Arctic.

Arrival of the "Union."

New York, Oct 11, 1854.

The steamer Union has arrived, and brings London dates to the 27th September. The Washington arrived out 23rd. Europa same day.

The frigate Sandacond left Southampton for the Baltic on 27th.

The Baltic arrived out on the 27th Sept. "Everything going on favourably for the Allies in the Sebastopol expedition.

The actual landing place was 20 miles south of Eupatoria, only 30 miles from Sebastopol. The allies marched on the latter place on 18th of Sept. A general engagement was expected before Sebastopol on 20th.

The Tartar population of the Crimea sympathize with the expedition. Menschikoff advanced with troops to Burluk on the River Alma—there to give battle to the allies. It is reported that the Russians had re-entered the Drobudscha with 60,000 men, and would try Varna.

The British Government ordered the bombardment of Revel, before the Baltic fleets return home.

The Viceroy of Egypt has given orders to dispatch 70,000 troops, with corresponding artillery, to take part in the war in the East. Austrian General Hess entered Bucharest, 22nd inst. Emperor of Austria telegraphed him to make no impediment in the operations of the Allies.

HALIFAX, October 11.

The Europa arrived at this port with 3 days later dates than the Union.

No tidings of an engagement yet between the allies and Russians in the Crimea.

Public anxiety at Liverpool was at its highest pitch when the Europa sailed. News of an engagement was being looked for at any moment.

The allies have sent a force into the Sea of Azoph to intercept Russian transports.

Appointment of the New Governor.

From the London (England) Official Gazette.

Downing-street, Sept. 19.

"The Queen has been pleased to appoint Sir Edmund Walker Head, Bart., to be Captain General and Governor in Chief of the Provinces of Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and of the Islands of Prince Edward; and Governor General of all the Provinces on the Continent of North America, and of the Island of Prince Edward."

Downing-street, Sept. 19.

"The Queen has been pleased to appoint Sir William Thomas Denison, Knight, Captain in the Corps of Royal Engineers, to be Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the Colonies of New South Wales, Van Diemen's Land, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia.

"Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint Sir Henry Edward Fox Young, Knt, to be Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the colony of Van Diemen's Land."

LABOUR IN CANADA.—The Westmeath Guardian, speaking of the scarcity of harvest labourers, announces that two shillings a day had been refused by reapers, and so high as 2s. 4d. given 1 and adds, "We have no doubt many a fine stalwart fellow now hard wrought on American railways would gladly wish himself once more in our streets to ask and obtain such ample remuneration for his day's work." This journal cannot be aware that labourers in Canada can and do earn from 6s. 3d. to 7s. 6d. a day, and in harvest time they had their board in addition. If 25,000 farm labourers, dress-makers, domestic servants, &c., were to land at Toronto to-morrow, they would find employment for years at from 3s. 9d. to 5s. a day. Canada has good wild lands enough to give one million Immigrants ten acres each! Upon this fact the Government of Canada ought to act!—Old Countryman.

THE TEN THOUSAND JOB.—JUDGMENT RENDERED.—Judgment was given yesterday in the Court of Chancery, on the case of Paterson et al vs. Bowes. Mr. Chancellor Blake and Vice Chancellors Esten and Sprague delivered their opinions at length; with perfect unanimity agreeing in finding for the Plaintiffs, and ordering the Defendant to refund to the City Treasury his profits on the job with interest, and to pay the costs of the suit.—Globe.

FIRE IN COAL.—A fire broke out in the large pile of coal in Messrs. T. & W. Molson's yard, St. Mary's Street, on Sunday, apparently originating in spontaneous combustion. Water was poured on it from hydrants four or five hours, but did not, it seems, effectually reach and quench the fire, and it was found necessary yesterday to commence the removal of the coal, in order to get at the seat of the combustion.—Montreal Herald.

GOLD IN CANADA.—We learn from Three Rivers that the party who left there some time since to "prospect" on the St. Maurice, have returned with the gratifying intelligence that the same stratification prevails as in California and report favourably of the mining capabilities of the District of St. Francis. They brought to Three Rivers a specimen of the St. Maurice gold dust, and the formation of a company for mining purposes is spoken of. So far as a company is concerned, we view with pleasure this news. With means at their disposal, and machinery, and tools suitable for the working of the mines, they may be made to pay; but for individuals to crowd to the gold diggings in the hope to make a fortune nothing can be more foolish. However, we scarcely think there is much danger of this, the people have had some experience—many of our citizens having returned from California considerably poorer than they went. Out of the many gold-seekers who left Canada for California, we have not heard of a single instance of one making a fortune, much less a competency.—Sun.

In Lord Elgin's journey hence to Quebec, he was welcomed by the people and authorities of all towns where the boat touched. Some of the towns were prettily decorated on the occasion, and Brighton was illuminated. As his Excellency landed at the place, tar barrels, &c., were set on fire, as a token of welcome to the Governor General. At Cobourg, Belleville, Brighton, and Kingston, addresses were presented to him. The addresses were highly complimentary, but were of a non-political character, parties of all political shades having subscribed to them. His Excellency's replies were in his usual good taste.

The St. John, N.B. Courier of the 30th ult. says:—"We understand that it is very probable that a short Session of the Legislature will be held immediately, to take into consideration the Reciprocity Treaty. It was supposed that it might have been possible to secure the benefits of the Treaty by the action of the Government; but as it appears by the way Mr. Secretary Guthrie reads the Treaty, that the President cannot issue his proclamation until Legislative assent is given by each of the Provinces affected, it may become necessary that New Brunswick and Nova Scotia should legislate speedily or otherwise to allow our citizens to lose some one or two hundred thousand pounds which they might gain by the new trade."

The Adjourned Meeting of the Colored citizens of Toronto met, according to adjournment, at Sayer Street Chapel, September 25th, 1854.

W. R. Abbott, Chairman, called the Meeting to order, and stated its object. After prayer by Mr. Baker, the Secretary, Rev. W. P. Newman, read the Minutes of the last Meeting; after which, the Business Committee reported the following Preamble and Resolutions:—

"Your Committee, to whom was submitted the business of drafting resolutions for this Meeting, beg leave to report, as follows:

"Whereas, the 'Colonial Church and School Society' have sent out Missionaries and Teachers to this country, for the purpose of 'Evangelizing the Colored Settlers" by the means of Normal Schools, for us, as a distinct class. And, whereas, the said effort is to be made, because of a misconception of our true condition, as Her Majesty's loyal subjects in this country, where no distinction is made on account of color, we deem it a duty to ourselves, and to our white fellow-citizens, to say, that the Report which gave rise to the before-named mission, as published in the 'Seventeenth Annual Report of the Colonial Church and School Society,' is entirely untrue; and especially that part of it that says, that 'They—we the colored people of Canada—are in the LOWEST state of ignorance of RELIGION, and even of secular knowledge; and according to accounts that have been received, utterly neglected by all around them; and, though permitted to live in freedom, to a great extent, it is to be feared are as much the victims of Popular Prejudice as their brethren in BOSTON AND NEW YORK."

"And whereas, the 'Colonial Church and School Society' has been credibly informed, on the authority of persons conversant with the views and feelings of the SOUTHERN PLANTERS that the spectacle of a large body of the NEGRO RACE, elevated in a social and religious condition, and WALKING LIKE CHRISTIAN MEN in the light of the Gospel, would do more to TRANQUILIZE THEIR FEARS, and is effective general, if not an universal manumission. THAN ANY PLAN yet devised in England or America; it seems proper that we should express our opinion, and say that OUR EXPERIENCE TEACHES US, that just the opposite result would be true; for it is a notorious fact, that the more the NEGRO RACE on this continent have "walked like' CHRISTIAN MEN, in the light of the Gospel,' would do more to TRANQUILIZE THEIR FEARS,' and is effective general, if not an universal manumission. THAN ANY PLAN yet devised in England or America;' it seems proper that we should express our opinion, and say that OUR EXPERIENCE TEACHES US, that just the opposite result would be true; for it is a notorious fact, that the more the NEGRO RACE on this continent have 'walked like' CHRISTIAN MEN, in the light of the Gospel,' the LESS have slaveholders' fears been TRANQUILIZED; hence the internal scheme of Colonization, &c., &c.; and it is especially true, that the more the Negro race, who are slaves, and those who are nominally free, in slave States, 'have walked like Christian men,' the more have they been oppressed; and hence the legal regulations, in nearly every slave State, to prevent them FROM 'walking like Christian men in the light of the Gospel,' the use of the Scriptures and other Religious means."

"We recommend the adoption of the following Resolutions, by this Meeting, to wit:

"1. Resolved.—That we assure our friends in England, and especially the 'Colonial Church and School Society,' that we are truly grateful for their sympathy with, and regard for us as an exiled and wronged people; and that we can but hope that their efforts for our good may be directed otherwise than through Normal Schools of which there is no need, in this country, since such schools here, are open to us, in common with all other citizens."

"2. Resolved,—That, should such schools be opened, and efforts made by the 'Colonial Church and School Society,' contrary to our expressed wish and interest, we cannot, consistently, and will not, as colored citizens, give them our support."

"3. Resolved,—That we caution our people throughout the Province to be careful, as to how they give their influence and support to institutions and efforts, whether established and made by friend or foe—white or black—that tend to make distinction on account of color, and to destroy the foundation of our liberties."

Committee:

W. R. NEWMAN, W. R. ABBOTT,
R. M. JOHNSON, A. H. JUDAH,
THOS. SMALLWOOD

The report being received, on motion for its adoption, an animated discussion sprung up between Messrs. Harris, Lewis, Judah, and Smallwood, and the Revs. Messrs. Dillon, Johnson, and Newman. The Preamble and Resolutions were sustained, with much charity towards the Mission referred to, and also with great ability by their advocates.

An amendment was moved by Mr. Geo. Cary, but voted down by a large majority; after which the Preamble and Resolutions were adopted, with much enthusiasm.

"4. Resolved,—That the proceedings of this Meeting be published in the Provincial Freeman, and that other newspapers friendly to our interest, be requested to publish the same."

"5. Resolved,—That 30 copies of the Provincial Freeman, containing the doings of this Meeting, be taken by the Chairman, who shall be a Committee to forward the same to friends in different parts of the country, and that a collection be taken up at our next Meeting to pay for the same."

The business of the meeting being over, the Chairman stated that he held in his hand an amendment to be moved by Mr. Larwill, to the resolutions in reply to the Speech from the Throne, at the opening of the present Session of the Legislature, which he would call on the Secretary to read; and after which, the hoped the Meeting would take some action. The Secretary read as follows:—

"That all the words after "That," in the twelfth paragraph be struck out, and the following words inserted in lieu thereof:—"This House will gladly show a liberal spirit and friendly disposition towards the United States, for their generous conduct in legislating upon the matter; and that in proof of such disposition on their part, the Provincial Legislature will hereafter exact from Negro immigrants a poll tax equal in amount to that now imposed upon other foreigners; and will not incorporate any associations for the special benefit of men of color, as a class, will discourage the promotion of any institution, the object and end whereof would be a junction with the Abolitionists of the Northern States, to bring about a severance of the American Union."

The Committee tendered their most cordial thanks to Angus Morrison, Esq., for a copy of the above amendment, which reading produced no little sensation, indignation, &c. After some severe strictures respecting Larwill and his position, a Committee of seven was appointed, namely, Revs. Messrs. Newman, Johnson, Harper, and Young; and Messrs. Abbott, Smallwood, Cary, to prepare business for another meeting, to be called by the Committee, respecting Larwill's Amendment.

The Meeting then adjourned.

W. R. ABBOTT, Chairman.
W. P. NEWMAN, Secretary.

A DELECTABLE AND ROSEATE COMPOUND IS

ATKINSON'S

UNRIVALLED PARISIAN

TOOTH PASTE,

A UNIQUE PREPARATION,

Quickly Cleansing the TEETH, arresting decay, producing a delightful odor to the Breath, and ruby color to the Gums and Lips,

WITHOUT ACID,

BY BRYANT.

Ay, thou art welcome, heaven's delicious breath!
When woods begin to wear the crimson leaf,
And suns grow weak, and the weak suns grow brief,
And the year smiles as it draws near its death.
Wind of the sunny south! oh still delay
In the gay woods and in the golden air,
Like to a good old age, released from care,
Journeying in long serenity away.
In such a bright late quiet, would that I Might wear out life like thee, 'mid bowers and brooks,
And, dearer yet, the sunshine of kind looks,
And music of kind voices, ever nigh;
And when my last sand twinkled in the glass
Pass silently from men, as thou dost pass.

Observations

ON THE MAKING, CURING, AND CASKING OF BUTTER.

We have been favored by the Hon. Adam Fergusson with a printed copy of the following directions for making and preserving Butter, as the result of numerous enquiries into the practices adopted in Ireland, and of the experience of several extensive curers in the county of Aberdeen, Scotland. Although printed several years ago, the observations will not be found devoid of interest at the present time, and in many respects applicable to this, or as it should be, very important department of Canadian farming. Such as possess good soils for pasturage, will find it greatly to their advantage to pay stricter attention to the breeding and rearing of cattle and the improvement of their dairy products.

1st. The milk-house or dairy should have no internal communication with any other building. It must be kept free from smoke, well aired, and clean; and no potatoes, fish, onions, cheese, or anything likely to impart a strong or bad smell, should be kept therein. In short, nothing but the dairy utensils, which must be kept sweet and clean.

2nd. The milk, when brought in from the cows, should be strained through a fine hair sieve or strainer, and, when cool, put into sweet well-seasoned oaken cogs, keelers, or milk-pans—the latter to be preferred. A tin skimmer, with holes in it, is the best for taking off the cream, which should always be churned while the cream is fresh.

3rd. The churns, whether plunge or barrel, should be made of the best well-seasoned white oak; and, as cleanliness is of the first importance, great attention should be paid to the washing, drying, and airing, of the churns, immediately after use, otherwise they are sure to contract a sour and unwholesome smell, which must injure the quality of the Butter.

4th. The Butter, immediately after being churned, should be thrown into fresh spring water, where it should remain for one hour at least, that it may grow firm; and, at the end of the third or fourth washing, some fine salt should be put into the water, which will rise the color of the Butter, and purge away any milk that may remain among it. Before salting, it is very essential that no milk or water be left, otherwise a strong smell and unpleasant taste will be the certain consequence.

5th. The Butter thus prepared should be immediately salted. The proportions of salt may be from one and one-fourth to one and one-half ounce of Scotch salt for the pound of Butter; or, of the best stoved rock or bay salt, one ounce for the pound But when Butter is not intended to be kept through the winter and spring, or for any long period, the quantities of salt above recommended may be somewhat reduced, the Curer exercising his own judgment in doing so.

N. B.—In Ireland, the use of salt and saltpetre, is recommended, in proportions of one ounce of stoved rock or bay salt, and one-fifth of an ounce of saltpetre to the Aberdeen pound.

6th. It is a very injurious practice to keep a making of Butter uncured to the next churning, for the purpose of mixing the two together. This mode invariably injures the flavor of the whole, and renders it of too soft a quality ever afterwards to get firm. This applies to Curers who are the producers of the Butter; but as the greatest quantity of the Butter in this country is collected and cured by merchants, they are particularly cautioned against the too common practice of throwing the fresh Butter together, and retaining it in that state for days, until they have collected what they consider a sufficient quantity to commence curing: the Butter treated in that manner is invariably found inferior to what is salted shortly after churning. Should, however, there not be a sufficient quantity collected in one day to fill a package when cured, the quality of the Butter may in a great measure be preserved, by giving it a partial salting, and covering it over with a clean linen cloth, dipped in pickle, and placing it in a cool situation. Country dealers who are in the habit of sending carts through the districts where they reside, to collect the Butter, should endeavor to arrange it so between themselves and the makers of the Butter, that is churned upon the day that it is called for.

7th. When the Butter is cured, it should be tramped firm into the firkin with a round wooded tramp-stick, of sufficient weight and thickness. The firkin should be filled up to the crose, and then covered over with a little of the purest salt,—sufficient room being merely left for the head of the cask, which must be well secured, to exclude air, and to prevent the pickle from getting out.

RECIPES, &c.

A lump of wet saleratus applied to the sting of a wasp or bee, will stop the pain in one moment, and prevent it from swelling.

How to Make Good Tea.—If men can be induced to build rain-water cisterns by recommending rain-water for tea, then some good may arise from tea-drinking. I have no doubt that rain-water is far more healthy, and when properly filtrated, is as pure as the running spring. Then why is it not more used? In numerous places, a supply of water could be had from the roofs of farm buildings, at one half the expense that it is obtained at from deep wells. I hope every tea-drinker in the country will become perfectly convinced that good tea can only be made from rain-water, and then cisterns will become fashionable.

Weight of Eggs.—The average weight of a newly laid egg is about 3¼ oz.; the white generally weighs 1¾ oz.; the yolk 1⅛ oz.; and the shell and skin ¾ oz.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at east two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

Frederick Douglass,
John D. Peck
Amos G. Beman,
John Jones,
J. D. Bonner,
J. McCune Smith,
} Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "The American Industrial School."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. Ward, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony,—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B Gribble, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. Thomas James, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number:

PRESIDENT.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

Constitution of the National Council.

For the purpose of improving the character, developing the intelligence, maintaining the rights and organizing a Union of the Colored People of the Free States. the National Convention does hereby ordain and institute the

"NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE COLORED PEOPLE."

Art. 1. This Council shall consist of two members from each State, represented in this Convention, and two other members from each State to be elected as follows: On the 15th day of November next, and biennially thereafter, there shall be held in each State, a Poll, at which each colored inhabitant may vote who pays ten cents as poll-tax, and each State shall elect, at such election, such delegates to State Legislatures, twenty in number from each State, at large. The election to be held at such places and under such conditions as the public meetings in such localities may determine. The members of the National Council in each State, shall receive, canvass, and declare the result of such vote. The State Council, thus elected, shall meet on the first Monday in January, 1854, and elect additional members to the National Council, in proportion of one to five thousand of the colored population of such State; and the members of council thus elected, to take office on the sixth day of July next, and all to hold office during two years from that date; at the end of which time another general election by State council shall take place of members to constitute their successors in office, in the same numbers as above. The State council of each State shall have full power over the internal concerns of said State.

Art. 2. The members of the first council shall be elected by this convention, which shall designate out of the number, a President, a Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, corresponding Secretary, and committee of five on Manual Labor—a committee of five on Protective Unions—of five on Business Relations—of five on Publications.

Art. 3. The committee on Manual Labor School shall procure funds and organize said School in accordance with the plans adopted by this National Convention, with such modifications as experience or necessity may dictate to them. The committee shall immediately incorporate itself as an academy under "The General Committee of the State of——," and shall constitute the Board of Trustees of the Manual Labor School, with full power to select a location in the State designated by the National council, to erect buildings, appoint or dismiss instructers in the literary or mechanical branches. There shall be a farm attached to the School.

Art. 4. The committee on Protective Unions shall institute a Protective Union for the purchase and sale of articles of domestic consumption, and shall unite and aid in the formation of branches anxiliary to their own.

Art. 5. The committee on Business Relations, shall establish an office, in which they shall keep a registry of colored mechanics, artizans and business men throughout the Union. They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and boys seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital, skill, or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. They shall receive for sale or exhibition, products of the skill and labor of colored people.

Art. 6. The committee on Publication shall collect all facts, statistics and statements, all laws and historical records and biographies of the colored people, and all books by colored authors. They shall have for the safe keeping of these documents, a Library, with a Reading Room and Museum. The committee shall also publish replies to any assaults, worthy of note, made upon the character or condition of the colored People.

Art. 7. Each committee shall have absolute control over its special department; shall make its own by-laws, and in case of any vacancy occurring, shall fill up the same forthwith subject to the confirmation of the council. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and financial, and shall submit a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 9. In all cases of the meetings of the National Council, or the committees, the traveling expenses (if any) of the members shall be paid out of the respective funds.

Art. 10. The council shall immediately establish a bureau in the place of its meeting: and the same rooms shall, as far as possible, be used by the several committees for their various purposes. The council shall have a clerk, at a moderate salary, who will keep a record of their transactions, and prepare a condensed report of the committees for publication; and, also, a registry of the friends of the cause.

Art. 11. The expenses of the council shal be defrayed by the fees of membership of subsocieties or councils, to be organised throughout the States. The membership fee shall be one cent per week,

Art. 12. A member of the council shall be member of only one of the committees thereof.

Art. All. 13 officers holding funds, shall give security in double the amount likely to be in their hands. This security to be given to the three first officers of the council.

Art. 14. The council shall have power to make such Bye-Laws as are necessary for their proper government

The following resolutions, having a direct bearing upon the plan of organization were adopted by the Convention and are therefore appended to the Council's Constitution.]

Resolved That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committees.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a prémium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That any State applying for admission into this Union, shall be admitted on such terms, as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and separate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

Article I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not base: on complectional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants to come and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British form of Government. 3rd. As Americans, unless those of darker hue become "cyphers of worse than Hindoo caste of water" to those (with a complexion) who do not. To use in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 4th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 5th. As a means of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

Art. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording, and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

Art. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

Art. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

Art. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

Art. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

Art. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

Art. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

Art. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

Art. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

Poetry.

Cold Water.

BY HORACE S. RUMSEY.

Oh wine let bacchanalians sing,
Which maddens, stupefies the brain,
Which doth unnumbered horrors bring,
Piercing the heart with sorest pain;
But the pearly dew
We offer you
Contains no hidden, deadly bane.

Of water pure, as it bubbles up,
Or sparkles in the laughing rill,
Drain o'er and o'er the refreshing cup;
It giveth strength to nerve and will;
'Tis happy makes
Him who partakes,
Who spurns the liquid of the still.

Ho! quaff ye of the mountain stream,
Or from the fountain gushing free;
Then heavenly sweet will be each dream,
Your days shall all glide joyously;
The rosy blush
The cheek shall flush;
Crowned with ripe years your lives shall be.

Cold water, we thy praises sing,
Thou blessed gift of worth untold,
The cooling draught from well or spring,
Best beverage for young and old!
Where'er is seen
Thy silver sheen,
Hygeia's friend may we behold.

Oh! when will man thy virtues learn,
Forsake the maddening damning bowl,
The venomed draught for ever spurn,
Which kills the body and the soul?
When we shall gain
The Law of Maine,
The waves of sorrow back shall roll.

Ho! brothers, rouse ye, every one!
Let us one solid phalanx form,
And with our ballot, Paxhain gun,
King Alcohol's strong castle storm.
Its fiery wall
Shall riven fall,
If true the army of Reform.

Literature.

A Rainy Day in Town.

Some cynical person has remarked that people are given to talk most about what they least understand—an observation, by the way, which although it has passed into a maxim pretty generally current, is, like most of the dicta of your sarcastic philosophers, true only in a limited sense. It is strikingly true, however, with regard to John Bull and his numerous family whenever their talk is about the weather. John, from his insular position, is more exposed to the 'skiey influences,' as fine writers call the changes of the weather, than any of his neighbors; and being a personage whose business, and whose pleasures too, lie very much out of doors, he would be glad to know, were it possible, how to manage his movements so as to escape the foul and enjoy the fair. Hence it is that the weather, and its probable state at some not very distant or closely impending period, is a universal topic with honest John. It is a question in which he has a personal interest, and one often of greater moment than any other which a mere casual acquaintance could discuss with him. A Frenchman or a German, an Italian or a Spaniard, may, it is true, be equally interested in the weather—but then he is seldom, if ever, in the same uncertainty respecting it. With a wind from any point but the west or south-west, your continental friend does not fear getting drenched to the skin; but John knows from awkward experience, that he has no cause for solid reliance upon any wind that blows; and that rain may come to him, and does come to him at times, from all points of the compass. So he is ever on his guard against it, and prophesies concerning its advent and departure—not very often, it must be confessed, with the happiest result—thus shewing that though he talks so much about it, he understands it very little indeed. But he is not content with talking only—if he were, he wouldn't be John Bull. He arms himself against foul weather, as he would against any other enemy; and has contrived no end of munitions and fortifications against the assaults which the clouds are for ever preparing or discharging upon his devoted head. If, on the one hand, he is annoyed by water, he is on the other, defiant in 'waterproof.' Run your eye down the columns of his morning paper, and see what a prodigious store of bulwarks he has prepared against the storm. Read the list of gallant defenders, with the immortal Macintosh at their head, who have levied contributions from the resources of universal nature for the purpose of keeping the hostile moisture on the safe side of John's waistcoat—from coats of four ounces, 'warranted to keep out twelve hours' rain,' to coats of twice as many capes, which would laugh at a monsoon—and from idrotobolic hats, which keep his bald pate dry, and ventilate it at the same time, to gutta-percha soles that don't know, and won't be prevailed upon, under any circumstances, to know, what it is to be damp. Think of voluminous folds of vulcanised caout-chouc and gutta-perchified cloth—of rugs and railway wrappers—of paletots, bequemes, bear-skins, pea-coats, Chesterfields, Codringtons, Whitney Overs, Derby coats, Melton, Mowbrays, Wellington sacs and wrap-rascals—to say nothing of the millions of umbrellas, of which everybody has one to use and two to lend: think of all these, and a thousand more of the same sort, and say if John Bull be not tolerably well provided against yonder black cloud.

Come, we are not going to be afraid of a rainy day, at anyrate, though we do prefer the sunshine; and it is well we are not, for it is coming down in torrents just now, and we must be off to the office to our daily task, let it come as it may. Jonas, our volatile neighbour in the 'two-pair back,' has just declared, in our hearing, to his wife, that this is a 'delectable swizzle,' and no mistake. We know what that man means, well enough. But Jonas's wife has tied a comforter round his chin, and he is off, and we must follow close at his heels, 'swizzle' as it will, or else lose a character for punctuality, which will never do. The street-door slams us out. Wheew! but it is a soaker! What a clatter the big drops make upon the strained silk!—we could spare such hydraulic music. The sky is one dull sheet of lead; the nearest houses appear as if veiled in a gauze dress, and the further ones are behind a wet blanket, and won't appear at all. All London is just now under the douche, and undergoing a course of dydropathic treatment. Much good may it do thee, thou dear old wilderness of brick: thy alimentary canal has long been out of order. Drink, old Babylon! Drink, and forget thy filthiness, and show thy countless offspring a clean face when the morrow's sun lights up thy forest of tall towers. In the meantime, though, this is but a sorry joke. Slippety, sloppety, squash! Concern that loose paving-stone! and an ovation to the man of genius who invented gaiters, by which we are spared an involuntarily 'futz.' What is that? 'Clickety, clackety, skrsh!' Pattens, by all that is poetical! 'O the days when we were young!' as the poet says, when pattens were the genteel thing—when comfortable dowagers went waddling abroad exalted on iron rings, and with their heads buried in calashes shaped like a gentleman's cab, only not quite so big. Ah, those were the days! What a rush of tender recollections comes with the clatter of that single pair of pattens! It seem an age since we last heard that once familiar sound; and it seems, too, as though we had entered a new world since that sound was of everyday occurrence. But we must not indulge in these pensive recollections. Swizh!—p-r-r-r-r-r-p! whirr!—no indeed!—if this isn't enough to swill all sentiment out of a fellow. 'Halloo! Conductor, stop that bus!

'Full inside, sir, plenty of room outside, sir!'

'Not a doubt of it; but I'm outside already!'

No admission for gentlemen in distress. Never mind—we shall be sure to find an omnibus in the City Road that will take us in. Really, this is the very sort of a day to turn into a night; and were it not for the despotism of Business, that genius of modern activities, who rules us, as he rules all his subjects, with an iron sceptre, we should be tempted to follow the example of an eccentric artist of the last century, and by turning back to our home once more, and by simply closing the window-shutters, lighting candles, and poking up the fire, transform this drenching morning into a cheerful evening. But that won't do either, lest we fall into a practice that will entail upon us rainy days of a still less endurable complexion. Sweeper Jack, yonder, is of the same way of thinking: he has scraped his crossing as clean as he can with his worn-out broom-stump; but his function is no sinecure this morning, as new puddles are forming every minute in the track which his daily sweepings have hollowed out. He cannot afford to lose his morning coppers; and though he is wet through to the skin, and has been for this hour past, he will not quit his post till his last regular patron has gone by on his way to the city. He holds out a hand, sodden, like a washerwoman's, for his customary half-penny, and deposits it in one of his Bluchers, lying high and dry under the shelter of a doorway—a piece of practical economy that, because he finds it cheaper to subject the soles of his bare feet to the mud and slush of the season, than it would be to submit the soles of leather to the same destructive ordeal. Sweeper Jack is not much worse off on such a day as this than the whole tribe of peripatetic traders whom the sky serves for a roof every day in the year, and who prefer the risk of drowning abroad to the certainty of starving at home. 'Eels! live eels!' cries one; and we can fancy them swimming at their ease in the broad basket in which they are borne aloft. The soles, haddocks, and cod are travelling once more in their own element, and the salesmen are particularly lively, knowing, by experience, that a drenching day, when economical housewives don't care to plunge over the way or round the corner to the butcher's, is not unfavorable to their trade. Ten to one that we find a cod's head and shoulders on the table when we return to dinner at five. Charley Coster's cart looks remarkably fresh and green this morning; but that poor 'moke' of his is evidently depressed in spirits, and, after the manner of his kind, lowers his head and bends back his ears in silent deprecation of the extra weight of moisture he has to drag through the miry streets. Yonder is a potato-steamer, which the prudent proprietor has moored snugly under a covered archway: his little tin funnel is fizzing away amongst a group of boys and lads driven there for shelter from the storm. He has got his steam up early to-day—foul weather acting invariably as an impetus to his peculiar commerce: a hot buttered potato for a half-penny, with salt a discretion, as the French say, is too good a bargain to go far a-begging on such a morning as this. Another wandering son of commerce, who profits especially when the clouds are dropping fatness, is that umbrella hawker, who stands there at the corner, roofed in under a monster-dome of gingham, from which he utters ever and anon in a cavernous voice: 'A good um'rella for sixpence! Sixpence for a good um'rella! A silk un for a shilling!' You will not see him driving business in that fashion when the sky is without a cloud; you might as well look for a rainbow. He gets his living by rainy days; and if he could regulate the calendar in his own way, 'twere but little hay that would be made while the sun shone, and Vauxhall and Cremorne Gardens might shut up shop. But of all the gainers by the liberality of Jupiter Pluvius, the cabmen are the most active and the most exemplary. Now is the very carnival of cabs; and every driver assumes an air of increased importance, and sways his whip with authority, as though he were chief monarch of a wet world, which in some sort he is. But there is not a single cab on the stand. The stand itself is washed away—all the disjecta from the nose-bags, every wisp of hay and straw of fodder, is floated off the stones; the very waterman has disappeared, and taken for the nonce to burnishing pewter-pots in the back-slums of the Pig and Whistle—his tubs alone are the only vestiges which are left to proclaim the fact, that four-and-twenty vehicles, all of a row, have their home and resting-place on that deserted spot. Caby is abroad surring up the mud in every highway and byway of universal London; and Cabby's horse, under the impetus of unlimited whipcord, is straining every nerve to compensate for the idleness of yesterday, and to devour as many miles, measured by sixpences, as will satisfy, if that be possible, the expectations of his owner.

But now we emerge upon the City Road, and hear the welcome syllables, 'Room for one,' from the conductor of a favorite omnibus. With a foot on the step we look in upon a not very inviting spectacle: ten stout gentlemen, each with a dripping umbrella, and one stouter dame, two single Niobes rolled into one, with a weeping umbrella and a plethoric bundle to boot—all packed together almost as tight as Turkey figs in a drum, in a locomotive vapour-bath reeking and steaming at every pore. It is impossible to pass up the centre, and so we are jammed into the corner next to the conductor, who, enveloped in oil-skin, considerably bars the pelting drops from our face by exposing to them his own broad back. We commence a conversation by observing, as a sort of leading remark, that such a drencher as this is a capital day for omnibuses. 'Why, you must be making quite a fortune to-day.'

'Hexcuse me, sir,' says he, 'but that ere's a wery vulgar herror. People thinks, because they finds the buses full when they wants to go to town of a wet day, that the wet weather is best for the trade. 'Tain't no sich thing. We goes to town this mornin', for instance, full; but we shall come back empty well-nigh, and shan't do nothing to speak of afore gentlemen has done their business and comes back in the evening. Buses that runs along the business-lines does tolerable well perhaps; but I'm bound to say, that them as goes north and south don't do half a average trade sich a day as this. No, sir—fine weather is best for buses, if I know anything about it. People walks out in fine weather to enjoy theirselves, and gits tired, and rides home; or they rides out for pleasure, and to call upon their friends, or they rides a-shopping, and brings home their bargains; but when sich weather as this shuts people within doors, of course they can't ride in buses.'

There was no denying the force of the conductor's logic, backed as it was by a long experience—and we sat corrected.

Here our vis-a-vis, the stout dame with the bundle, stops the omnibus, and stumbling hastily into the muddy road, drops some halfpence into the conductor's hand.

'What's this, marm?'

'Why, the fare—threepence to be sure.'

'Threepence ain't the fare, and this ain't threepence. D'ye call that a penny? 'tis only a half-penny as ha' been run over.'

'O dear me! are you sure it's not a penny? it's big enough. I thought your fare threepence.'

Conductor opens the door and shews the printed table of fares. 'You see, marm, its fourpence. I want three half-pence more.'

'O dear, I wonder if I've got any more.'

Niobe lays her bundle on the step, and dives into her pocket. First dive, fishes up an enormous pincushion, red on one side and green on the other; dive the second, a pocket handkerchief and a ball of worsted; dive the third, a nutmeg-grater, a nutmeg half consumed, a piece of ginger, and an end of wax-candle, which shews signs of being on terms of the closest intimacy with a skein of thread; dive the fourth, half of a crumpled newspaper and lump of gingerbread.

'Come, be alive, marm,' says the conductor; 'we can't be waiting here all day.'

'O dear me, how it does rain! Don't be in a hurry, my good man—I feel the money now,' and, sure enough, dive the fifth produces, together with a handful of ends of string, reels of coloured cotton, and a tin snuff-box, a couple of penny-pieces. The fare is paid—bang goes the door, and on we roll towards the Bank.

The city wears rather a blank appearance. It is busy, as it always is, with the working-bees of commerce, but the drones are absent, and of pleasure-takers there are none to be seen. Greatcoated figures flit hurriedly backwards and forwards beneath their hoisted umbrellas; and the indispensable business of the day is done in spite of the unceasing tempest that pours from morn to night. But retail trade is almost at a stand-still. That immense standing-army whose lives are passed in the service of the ladies, experience, it may well be, a welcome intermission of their labours. The shop-walker may rest his weary shanks, and the shop-talker may give his tongue a holiday. Drapers' assistants have no goods to drape, and may assist one another in the laborious occupation of doing nothing. Now and then the shopkeeper walks to his front door, and, with one hand in his pocket, while he rubs his smooth-shaven chin with the other, casts an appealing look upwards to the leaden sky. He sees no symptoms of a pause in the pattering storm; so he retires, and buries himself in his back-parlour, where, with his nose every now and then between the leaves of his bad-debt book, he falls to making out fresh bills for stale and long-forgotten accounts. We mourn for our old friends the book-stalls, which lie all day long under a pall—a pall of dilapidated floor-cloth, which no man stops to lift and look beneath. The search after knowledge may be carried on under some difficulties, but not under such a sousing shower-bath as this. It has actually washed away the apple-woman from the herbstones, which are known to be as waterproof as Macintosh himself; and it has driven the orange-girls off the pavement to the shelter of covered courts and theatrical piazzas.

But if the rain has dispersed a whole host of professionals, it has at least brought some new ones upon the scene. Here comes a characteristic establishment, vamped up for special use on a rainy day. It is nothing less than an ostensible father of a family, with six impromptu children, all born to him this identical morning—children whose father was humbug, and whose mother was a promising ten hours' rain He, unfortunate man, informs you as plainly as the cleverest pantomime can tell the tale, that he is an unsuccessful tradesman who has seen better days, and that these six forlorn infants, all clad in neat white pinafores, but paddling with naked feet on the cold wet stones, are the motherless children of his dear departed wife, who has left him in sickness and poverty to be the sole guardian of their tender years. As an evidence that he has brought them up in the right way, they are singing, as lustily as they can bawl, a pious hymn to a sacred tune, to which he himself groans a deplorable bass in a deplorable voice—holding out his hand the while as a modest appeal in behalf of his innocent orphans. If you are prudent, you will not be in a hurry to tax your sympathies. You may feel quite at your ease, and rest assured that this unhappy family, which shews so pathetically amidst the driving storm, owes its very existence to this dismal day, and to nothing else. Had the sun shone brightly this morning, each of these motherless infants had remained in charge of its own maternal parent, or passed the day in raking the mud of Westminster; and the demure, sorrow-stricken father himself, had been off chalking the pavement, shamming the cripple, doing the deplorable 'fake,' or cadging in some ingenious way on his own private account, among the gullible population of some other district. We know the rascal well enough; but he contrives to sneak on the safe side of the law, and laughs at exposure. If you want to help him to a debauch of gin, bestow your charity, but not otherwise.

Such a day as this is a dead loss to a multitude of out-of-door professionals, not a few of whom will have to put up with short-commons, as the result of such an inhospitable sky. It is not very pleasant to think what becomes of a host which numbers so many thousands of needy individuals at such an untoward time, when they cannot be abroad, and when it would be of no use if they could, because their friends and patrons the public are snug at home. Where are the poor music-grinders? Where that solid phalanx of Italian piano-players? Where those gangs of supple acrobats and street-jugglers? Where that battalion of 'needy knife-grinders?' Where the travelling-tinkers, swinging their sooty incense beneath our noses? Where the hawkers of fruits, of nuts, and sweet stuff? Where the bands of children with their bunches of lavender? Where those merry little tender German tinder-merchants? Where the street-stationer, with his creamy note-paper? Where the violet-girls, with their sweet-smelling posies? And where that vast and indiscriminate crowd that hangs perpetually upon the skirts of business or of pleasure and, like Lazarus from the rich man's table, supply their daily necessities from the abundance and the superfluities of their more fortunate brethren? In what cheerless homes, what wretched slums and corners, what dark and unwholesome dens, do they lurk in hunger, cold, and bodily discomfort, while the relentless rain shuts them out from the chance of earning an honest penny? Truly, a rainy day in London has its dismal aspect within doors as well as without.

The animal creation, which always sympathises in the pains and pleasures of us humans, shew their aversion to rainy weather, when it is excessive, in a manner not to be mistaken. We cannot pretend to decide whether the horse pulls a long face at a rain-storm, his face being never of the shortest; but his eye is sadder than usual when he is soaked with a shower. Donkey shows his dislike to heavy rain by invariably getting out of it when he can, and by his unwillingness to face the driving blast when upon duty. Dog is, in wet London streets, invariably dragule-tailed and down-cast, and out of heart. His post is too often, on these occasions, outside his master's door, on the step of which he may be seen sitting, his muddy tail between his legs, and his woebegone face confronting the public, upon whom he turns an appealing, lack-lustre eye, telling how much he would prefer sleeping curled up by the kitchen-fire to standing sentry in company with the scraper. Puss shews her sense of cleanliness and comfort by keeping within doors; though our old 'Stalker' is an exception to the general rule, preferring to sit on the outside of the window-sill, where, erecting every hair in his black coat till they bristle up 'like quills upon the fretful porcupine,' he gathers a vast amount of electricity and moisture besides, and is always the cleaner and the livelier for the process, which he doubtless knows to be good for his constitution.

The London populace had an idea that the weather is always favourable to her Majesty, it having very rarely happened that the sun has refused to shine when the Queen has chosen to shew herself to her subjects. The clouds are not however, always loyal. Such a day as we have been describing kept the royal party from visiting Powers-court on the last eve of September, when a storm of rain, which even Irishman acknowledged to be a drencher, deluged the county Wicklow, and dissipated the popular delusion on the subject of 'Queen's days.' Time was (when we were not so thoughtful as we are now) when we entertained a notion that it would have been an agreeable and convenient arrangement of such moist phenomena, if all the rain, hail, and snow, of Mother Earth stands in continual need, had been predestinated to fall after sunset, and the hours of daylight had been left to the uninterrupted pursuits and enjoyments of mankind. We are grown wiser now, and see that it is better ordered. In that case, we should have lost for ever the moral effect of a rainy day; and the stock of undeniable blessings to our mental and spiritual nature which spring out of little crosses and disappointments, would have been diminished so much in amount, through the lack of a little gentle moral discipline, that, bad as the world seems now, it would have been infinitely worse, and perhaps hardly bearable for living in. Therefore, with your leave, good reader, we will be reconciled to the wet weather; and when it rains, let it rain, without grumbling, merely donning our gaiters, indueing our waterproof soles, buttoning up our coats, hoisting our umbrellas, and setting about our business cheerfully and industriously, which, as everybody knows who knows anything, is the best way of providing against a rainy day.

African Literature.

From the New York Evening Post.

The present number of Putnam's Magazine opens with a valuable contribution to American history in the 'Life of the Swedish Count Stedingk,' an accomplished and brave ally in our revolutionary struggle. The publication of articles like this, and Cooper's history of 'Old Ironsides,' materially increases the reputation of Putnam among others than the usual run of magazine readers. Another contribution of a similar character, though more generally entertaining, is the one entitled, 'African Proverbial Philosophy.' It contains an account of the geography and natural history of Yoruba, an out-of-the-way country in the west of Africa, in addition to a philological discussion of its language and literature, such as it has. It so happens that the literature of Yoruba consists solely of proverbs. 'Yet,' says the writer in Putnam, 'nothing tests the natural quickness and keenness of a nation more than its proverbs; and tried by this test, the Yorubas are triumphant.' A curious collection of Yoruba aphorisms, with parallels from the shrewd sayings of civilized nations, is included in the essay—as follows:—

1. PRACTICAL PROVERBS.

He runs away from the sword, and hides himself in the scabbard. Out of the frying-pan into the fire.

The stirrup is the father of the saddle. C'est le premier pas qui coute.

He who has no cross-bow but his eye-brow, will never kill anything. Barking dogs never bite.

If your stomach is not strong, do not eat cock-roaches. Moderation.

If one cannot build a house, he builds a shed. Half a loaf, &c.

One lock does not know the wards of another.

The bald-headed person does not care for a razor.

The thread is quite accustomed to follow the path of the needle.

The sword shows no respect for its maker. Bad actions return to plague the inventor.

The sole of the foot is exposed to all the filth of the road. Evil communications, &c.

The pot-lid is always badly off: the pot gets the sweet, the lid gets the steam.

Without powder, a gun is only a rod.

When the man on stilts falls, another gets the bamboo (stilt)—i. e., Pride shall have a fall.

The pestle and the mortar have no quarrel between them—i. e., they are only instruments of another.

The covetous man, not content with gathering the fruit of the tree, took an axe and cut it down. The goose with the golden egg.

I almost killed a bird, said the fowler. Almost never made a stew, was the reply. Almost takes away half.

It is only the water which is spilt; the calebash is not broken: that all is not lost.

He chokes me like ekuru. Said of a tedious person. Ekuru is a very dry cake;—the remainder biscuit.

He who waits for chance will have to wait a year.

God made different creatures differently. The original has a jingle to it, like many men many minds.

Want of consideration and forethought made six brothers pawn themselves for six dollars

A one-sided story is always right. Ear, hear the other side, before you decide.

He who marries a beauty marries trouble.

Though a man may miss other things, he never misses his mouth.

We wake, and find marks on the palm of our hands, but we know not who made them, we wake, and find an old debt, and cannot remember how we incurred it.

If the poor man's rafter does not reach the roof in the morning it will reach it in the evening. This refers to a traditional poor man who advised splicing two rafters in raising a house: and whose advice was at first despised, and finally followed.—See Eccl. ix. 5.

The bill-hook cut the forest, but with no profit to itself; the bill-hook cleared the road with no profit to itself; then it was broken, a ring was put on its handle, and it was still kept at work. Sic vos non vobis.

3. PROVERBS DRAWN FROM NATURE.

The dawn comes twice to no man.

To-day is the elder brother of to-morrow, and a copious dew is the elder brother of the rain.

One day's rain makes up for many day's drought. It never rains but it pours.

When the rain beat upon the parrot, the woodcock rejoiced, thinking that his red tail was spoiled, but the rain only increased its beauty.

The sprout of the iroko tree must be plucked while it is yet tender. As the twig is bent, &c.

The parasite vine claims a relationship with every tree.

To be trodden upon here, to be trodden upon there, is the fate of the palm-nut in the road.

Unless the tree falls, one will never get at the branches.

No one should ask the fish what happens in the plain, nor the rat of what happens in the water.

It was the death of the fish which introduced it to the palace.

The rat said, I am less angry with the man who killed me, than with him who dashed me on the ground afterwards. Adding insult to injury.

The ajao is neither rat nor bird. Said of persons who are 'neither one thing nor the other'—'neither fish, flesh, nor good red-herring.'

When the hawk hovers the poultry look uneasy.

It is easy to cut up a dead elephant.

If you abuse the etin, you give the axe the headache. i. e., Persons feel slights cast upon their relatives;—these being two birds of the same genus.

Conquer the agable, you must conquer the arobi. Two insects always found together.

The veranda in the house of a tortoise will not accommodate a guest. The veranda being the projecting part of the shell. Said of inhospitable persons.

When the fox dies, no fowl mourns; for the fox rears no chickens.

When the fish is killed, his tail is inserted in his own mouth. Applied to one who suffers for his own misdeeds.

When the fire burns in the fields, the flakes fly to the town.

The crow was going to Ibara; a breeze sprung up behind. This will help me famously, said the crow.

He is a fool who cannot lift an ant and yet tries to lift an elephant. Strain at a gnat, &c.

3. PROVERBS SHOWING A FEELING FOR NATURAL BEAUTY.

Behind and before, the butterfly praises God; yet, when touched, it crumbles like a cinder.

Heaven and earth are two large calabashes, which, when shut together, can never be opened.

There is no market in which the dove with the prominent breast has not traded,—alluding to the shape of the cowries used as money.

Twinkling, twinkling, twinkling stars: like so many chickens behind the moon.

The mock-bird says—I sing 200 songs in the morning, 200 at noon, and 200 in the afternoon; and yet I sing many frolicsome notes for my own amusement.

The proverbs abound in evidences of observation of animal peculiarities. We also find striking descriptive phrases, such as Se-orum, the setting sun, when it appears like a globe. Enkawen, the flickering appearance of a rarefied atmosphere under sunshine, supposed to proceed from an underground fire made by the tortoise to kill the trees by burning the roots.

4. COMMERCIAL PROVERBS.

The trader never confesses that he has sold all, his goods, but, when asked, will only say, Trade is a little better.—Proverbs xx. 14.

The palm of the hand never deceives one. A bird in the hand, &c.

Men think the poor man is not as wise as the rich, for they say if he were wise, why is he poor? Can Wall street devise a more ingenious defence?

He is as persuasive as a seller of cakes. Sam Slick can say nothing more to the point.

The borrower, who does not pay, gets no more money lent him.

He runs into debt, who cuts up a pigeon to sell by retail.

A man walks freely before his defamer, when he knows that the latter has not twenty cowries in his pocket. Quite a new modification of the 'vacuus cantabit' philosophy!

A gift is a gift and a purchase is a purchase, but no one will thank you for 'I sold it very cheap.'

Aje—god of money—often passed by the first caravan that arrives, and loads the last with blessings. The race is not to the swift, &c.

Inordinate gain makes a hole in the pocket. He earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. —Haggai i. 6.

5. PROVERBS OF COMPASSION.

The wicked man would not treat his own child as he treats those of others.

A slave is not a block of wood—bit., child of a tree.—When a slave dies, his mother hears nothing of it; yet the slave, too, was once a child in his mother's house.

Birth does not differ from birth; as the freeman was born, so was the slave.

The aro—a sort of cripple—is the porter at the gate of the gods. They also serve, who only stand and wait.

6. MORAL AND RELIGIOUS PROVERBS.

All mankind are related to one another.

He who does not love his neighbor acts maliciously.

Anger does nobody good: patience is the best of dispositions. Anger draws arrows from the quiver; patience draws kola-nuts from the bag.

A cutting word is as tough as a bow-string: a cutting word cannot be healed, though a wound may.

The okum—a reptile—has 200 hands and 200 feet, and yet acts gently.

Covetousness is the mother of unsatisfied desire.

Consideration is the first-born, calculation the next, wisdom the third.

A bribe blinds the judge's eyes, for bribes never speak the truth.

He who has committed a secret action, supposes himself the subject of all conversation.

He who despises another despises himself. Contempt should never be shown to a fellow-man.

Wherever a man goes to dwell, his character goes with him.

He is to be feared who sends you on a message, not he to whom you are sent.

Leave the battle to God, and rest your head upon your hand.

TEMPER.—Bad temper is oftener the result of unhappy circumstances than of an unhappy organization; it frequently, however has a physical cause, and a peevish child often needs dieting more than correcting. Some children are more prone to show temper than others, sometimes on account of qualities which are valuable in themselves. For instance, a child of active temperament, sensitive feeling, and eager purpose, is more likely to meet with constant jars and rubs than a dull, passive child, and if he is of an open nature, his inward irritation is immediately shown in bursts of passion. If you repress these ebullitions by scolding and punishment, you only increase the evil, by changing passion into sulkiness. A cheerful good-tempered tone of your own, a sympathy with his trouble, whenever the trouble has arisen from no ill conduct on his part, are the best antidotes; but it would be better still to prevent beforehand, as much as possible, all sources of annoyance. Never fear spoiling children by making them too happy. Happiness is the atmosphere in which all good affections grow, the wholesome warmth necessary to make the heart-blood circulate healthily and freely; unhappiness the chilling pressure which produces here an inflammation, there an excrescence, and, worst of all, "the mind's green and yellow sickness—ill temper.—Education of the Feelings, by Charles Bray.

Liberia.

We see by a late number of the New York "Colonization Journal" that there have been numerous deaths recently among the ruling men of the Republic. Among them we find the names of the following: Hon. Hillory Teage, Dr. James Brown, W. W. Davis, of the House of Representatives, Chief Justice Benedict, and last but not least, the celebrated Zion Harris, formerly of Tennessee.

It would seem from such announcements that even after years of acclimation, the emigrants do not attain to advanced life in their new homes, but that the "confessedly unhealthy" climate is fatal sooner or later to the American negro.

That the enervating atmosphere and vertical sun of Africa do not promote high civilization or give great promise of the future of Liberia may be gathered from the despondent reflections of the writer who sketches the history of the departed in the Liberia "Herald." He remarks:

"The AGED are warned of approaching dissolution, and are admonished to work earnestly and faithfully while they are permitted to work—to do all they can toward the establishments, perpetuity and success of the institutions of Liberia, while time is allotted to them—ere the shades of darkness gather around them, when no man can work; ere death approach with his withering influence and paralyze their energies.

"The YOUNG are also most loudly and solemnly called upon to consider the duties and responsibilities that must soon devolve upon them as citizens of this Republic. Oh, that they would be admonished! How painful is the reflection that there are but comparatively few of the young of Liberia who seem to give the future of their country a moment's thought. They seem to live and act as though the present upholders of the Goverment were to live forever, notwithstanding the many solemn evidence they have to the contrary. O, young men and young women of Liberia, arise from your lethargy, shake off your puerile notions and practices! It is high time to bestir yourselves, to be men and women! Let the brave achivements and noble deeds of fathers rouse you to effort. Let the future glory that awaits your country kindle within you an honorable ambition andurge you onward.—Olive Branch.

The Territorial Negotiations with St. Domingo.

WHAT THE ENGLISH SAY OF IT IN JAMAICA.

The United States may desire to purchase a slice of the dominican territories, and to establish themselves on the eastern portion of St Domingo. That they "have formally demanded the cession," and will attempt to enforce such a demand by means of vessels which had arrived at Santa Domingo, we can hardly believe, notwithstanding the late affair of Greytown. It would seem absurd to expect that any such attempt at forcible possession could succeed, or be winked at by France and England, and we therefore incline to the belief that negotiations is intended to be resorted to by the Commodore of the squadron which has visited Santo Domingo. The account goes on to say that messengers had been despatched to Port au Prince by the French and British consuls, conveying information of what was going on to the Emperor.

If, as some think, the Dominican government has entered into an arrangement with the American Government, for the cession of the port and territory in question, and the vessels which have arrived at Santo Domingo have been sent to take possession of the same in consequence of such cession, then the prospect is that Hayti and Santo Domingo will be embroiled in a war. Hayti will not certainly permit the Dominicans to alienate any portion of the territory which she claims to be entitled to, and to establish upon the soil of Santo Domingo those who may become very troublesome neighbours, and a veritable thorn in her side. She may, for certain purposes, have consented to the continuance of a republic, such as now exists, and been dissuaded from engaging or continuing in what might be considered an intestine war. France and England may have been anxious to prevent the Haytians and Dominicans from quarrelling and fighting about the mode of government which should prevail, or who should rule over the entire island.

When, however, the question comes to be, whether the government of the United States shall possess itself of a portion of the island, and so lay the foundation for disturbances with the present possessors, which may lead to future injustice and wrong, and, perhaps to an assumption of its sovereignty, we can conceive that they will be ready to assist the Haytian government in preventing the Dominicans from ceding territory to which Hayti has a claim. France, particularly, is very unlikely to permit any arrangement between the Dominicans and the United States, which shall at any future period open the door to the possession of her ancient colony by America, and we may look for a very determined protest from her and Great Britain against this new mode.—The principle of non-intervention by which our own country is governed may prevent any measures being taken beyond this, and, perhaps, the prevention, by force, if necessary, of American aid to the Dominicans in any struggle which may take place between them and the Haytians, in consequence of the attempted cession of Samana.

The question between the two governments, which at present exist in Santo Domingo, will be purely one of right or title to the property or territory proposed to be ceded to the Americans. The Dominicans claim that territory as theirs, and as in their possession. The Haytians also claim it, and maintain that the possession of the Dominicans is an usurped one. They have never abandoned their right, and, finding that the property is about to change hands, and to be transferred to a third party, they put in their claim, and will assert it by force. The Haytians have another and very forcible reason for endeavouring to prevent the transfer of the territory in question. It is, that by such transfer, strangers are introduced into the country whose presence is certain to prove dangerous to the liberties of the people.

Admitting that the Dominicans have the possession of the territory in dispute, and that the Haytians are willing, for the sake of preserving peace, to permit them to retain that possession, they clearly can have no right to transfer it to a third party, and introduce into the country those who are likely to become the enemies of the Haytians. And if they attempt to do so, the latter will be justified in using force, in the endeavour to prevent conduct which is certain to prove highly injurious to them, as a people. We shall, no doubt, soon have more certain information from Hayti respecting the visit of the United States frigate Columbia to Santo Domingo, and of the proceedings consequent thereon.

A PARSON'S OPINION.—Parson Brownlow, who ministers to, and enlightens the people of Knoxville, Tennessee, in the capacity both of preacher and editor, says in his paper, the Knoxville Whig,

"The true hearted citizens of East Tennessee, and property holders, ought to enter into a league, and whip, black, and ride on a rail, irrespective of age, calling, or family associations, every preacher, citizen or traveller, who dares to utter one word in opposition to slavery, or who is found in possession of an abolition document. These are our sentiments, and we are willing and ready to help others to carry them out."

Return of William Wells Brown.

In reference to the American Anti-Slavery Society, the Syracuse Chronicle says—

Mr. W. W. Brown (not Box Brown as is generally supposed) has just returned from England, where he has been a resident for the last five years. He went out a fugitive slave; but his freedom was purchased by some friends abroad, and he returns his own master. After he had given a history of the progress of feeling in favor of freedom in Europe, he was asked what was the state of public prejudice abroad on the subject of color. The question brought out a long historical statement, the effect of which was to show that the prejudice which exists here against the black race is not on account of their color, as is generally supposed, but on account of their degradation, as a class, arising from the fact that they are an enslaved race. In other words, slavery degrades, not only those who are enslaved, but the whole race; and, color being the distinguishing badge of the race, the prejudice lies against all who have the mark, not because of their color, but because their color shows that they belong to a degraded race.

Mr. Brown stated that he had two daughters who were very desirous to be well educated. In this country he had tried, in vain, to get them in a good school. He was everywhere told that they could be received only in the schools for colored children, which were not of a character to answer their wants. When he was abroad, and found that he could not safely return on account of the passage of the Fugitive Slave Law, he sent for his family, and, to his surprise, found that the feeling against color did not exist in England. His daughters were admitted without question to the best schools of England, and were readily employed as teachers, in which business they were now engaged. One of these, who desired to perfect herself in the languages, went to Paris, and was admitted without question to the best schools of that city; and both were now leading teachers, by the side of native born Saxons, with white children of the middle classes for their pupils.

We might add to this statement a fact which we have from a lawyer residing on the island of Jamaica, that the better class of blacks in that island send their sons to Oxford to be educated in the most celebrated University of the world, and that they are received as the sons of other gentlemen are received, and after completing the college course, study the professions and take their places in the courts and in the colonial legislature with other educated and intelligent gentlemen. This friend said that if he was called on to point out some of the most courtly, scholastic, refined, intelligent and eloquent men with whom he was acquainted he should be obliged to name two or three black men that he met daily in the courts of the island that had long been his place of residence.

ARREST OF A FUGITIVE SLAVE.—A few days since, the Cincinnati Gazette published a statement that two slaves, a father and son, claimed by Henry Sumptall, of Jefferson County, Ky., had made their escape from their master. That paper further relates that the fugitives were pursued to that city, and were apprehended near Cumminville. The pursuers chased them to College Hill, where George, the boy was captured. Harvey, the father, took to the woods, and escaped, and it was supposed that he had fled to Canada, by the Underground Railroad. But it seems he did not venture to take passage by this line, but concealed himself in a house in Newtown, about ten miles from the city. On Wednesday, one of his colored pretended friends gave information to the officers, who suddenly visited the house on Wednesday evening, and arrested him, and brought him to this city, and lodged him in the county jail. He was examined before the United States Commissioner, Pendery, yesterday afternoon, and was remanded back to his owners. His arrest has produced much excitement among the colored people of our city.

From the Worcester Spy.

A Canadian Doughface.

"So it seems the dough-faces do not all vegetate between Mason and Dixon's and the Canadian line. They have at least one genuine specimen of these 'dirty dogs' in the Parliament of Canada. We do not know whether the species is peculiar to our Anglo-Saxon race or not. It is certain that it produces creatures of the kind with great facility, if the same cause is brought into operation, namely, commercial interests. Our dough-faces stand like dumb dogs before the Southern slaveholders, because they are afraid they would not purchase pork, corn, brogans, and calico, from the North, for their negroes, if they (the dough-faces) were to be manly and independent in their politics. And this Mr. Larwell, M.P., overflowing with gratitude to our government, for receiving the privilege of selling their pine logs and ponies to us, proposes to eat Southern dirt, by taxing fugitive slaves as they enter Victoria's dominions. Mr. Larwill has evidently studied the philosophy of United States politics; he knows that we are governed by an oligarchy of slaveholders; and, acting in the light of that knowledge, he insults the spirit of freedom, as it prevails at the North, and bows to the spirit of slavery which prevails at the South, because he is well aware that it constitutes the spirit and power of our government. We hope the fugitive slaves of Kent district will soon be strong enough, politically, to reward Mr. Larwill for his obsequious scoundrelism."

A Lackey to Larwill.

To our unbounded merveille (it looks genteel to sport a French word now and then) the member for our Provincial Kent has found one approbator amongst the editorial staff of Canada. The boss of the Montreal Commercial Advertiser, with a zeal and fancy, worthy of a more generous cause, endorseth the negrophobia of neighbour Larwill, and lustily shouteth to TRIUMPHE, as that gritty gent coucheth his grey goose quill against luckless Sambo Squash!

After the following pestilent fashion does Larwill's literary lackey prate:—

"It is the honest, industrious, hard-working, God-fearing old-countrymen that we would have chartered associations formed to purchase land for, and give it at rates and upon terms which they would be able to repay—not the lazy, vicious, uneducated, and commonly criminal negro. More than eleven thousand of them are said to have settled in the Upper Province within the last few years, and we dare say Mr. Larwill has ample reasons for making the amendment he is to propose. The Ethiopian cannot change his skin, nor the leopard his spots, and just as impossible is it for a runaway negro in nine cases out of ten to settle down and become a useful if not intellegent member of society. This the records of crime abundantly attest."

Upon this string of hard vocables we have one or two observations to make.

PRIMO. Because it is right and orthodox to aid white visaged emigrants in acquiring land, is it consequently sinful to extend a cognate assistance to bipeds of a darker complexion? Charity, we all admit, begins at home. Is the Advertiser prepared to affirm that it should end there?

SECUNDO. Does our confrere seriously believe that the "lazy" and the "vicious" will make strenuous exertions to reach the elevated platform of freedom?

TERTIO. Granting that "the Ethiopian cannot change his skin," does it follow that he must have a soul to match that skin?

QUARTO. Whatever "the records of crime abundantly attest" in other lands, we point blank affirm that in Canada the "runaway negro" generally settles down and becomes an intelligent member of society. Some black sheep unquestionably may be found in the ranks of our colored subjects, but considering their antecedents, these exceptions are wonderfully few and far between.

Trusting that the Commercial Advertiser will be speedily brought to a sense of sin in having borne false witness against his swart neighbours, and that he will make a suitable palinode, we heartily bid him farewell!—Hamilton Gazette.

Correction does much, but encouragment does more. Encouragment after censure is as the sun after a shower.

Subscriptions.

Now is the time to send in your subscriptions, friends. Those that subscribed for six months will, we are confident, not need a second appeal, and our yearly subscribers will, we hope, never fail to speak a good word in behalf of the Freeman whenever it is in their power. The crops have been abundant, in spite of the drought, wages have been, and are still good, and last, though not least, the Reciprocity Treaty will give a fresh impetus to all kinds of business, so that no one need hesitate on the score of hard times; for everybody does, and will live in spite of the times, and no man ever yet found himself any poorer at the end of the year from having taken a good newspaper. Then send in the names, friends.

To every one who gets us four cash yearly subscribers, we will send one copy for the same period. Or all persons getting us five cash subscriptions are entitled to the amount for one.

YANKEES IN CANADA.—The Provincial Parliament have passed an act granting to aliens the right to purchase and convey lands in the Queen's Provinces to the extent of four hundred acres each. The Government has put large tracts of land into market at $1 to $1 25 per acre. No reservations respecting minerals have been made, and the Yankees, are prospecting on the North shore of Lake Superior for copper and iron, and some rich openings have been discovered.—Free West (Chicago,) Sept. 21.

We have frequently called the attention of the colored people in the States, to the fact that there are thousands of acres of good land to be procured here, cheap, and now we see a Western Editor directing the attention of his Yankee brethren to the same subject. We would ask our colored friends in the States if it does not show that there are great advantages to be obtained by becoming land holders in Canada, apart from personal liberty, when Yankees from the "Great West" come over here to "prospect." Golden opportunities are now before them, which will not occur again, while they are quietly waiting for better times, in a country were land is high, and every thing else in proportion, and which is of the most importance, they are not acknowledged as citizens. Kansas and Nebrasca, it is said, hold out great inducements. Just the same as did California which is now all but in name, a slave state. By reference to the "Sale of Crown Lands," in our advertising columns, it will be perceived that a mistake has been made in the article above noticed, both as regards the number of acres and the price. Not more than 200 acres to actual settlers is one of the conditions of purchase, and the price generally not less than $1 50 per acre.

Correspondence.

LONDON, C. W.

DEAR "C.,"—I take a spare moment to pay my respects to the "Freeman"—the first I have been able to use for some weeks, owing to constant travel, work, fatigue, &c. I have gained this point, after making Niagara, St. Catherines, Port Robinson, and Brantford, visits of longer or shorter duration, though with results highly satisfactory. The good people of the places mentioned are resolved on supporting the paper—nothing can exceed the interest shown by the women in its success—a hopeful sign, when one calls to remembrance the apathy of our females generally and especially in the great City of Toronto, until very recently. If there is any one thing that tends to intensify one's contempt for the muslin multitude, it is the nothingness the delicate creatures display when invited to aid in a work for the general good. You would be surprised at the pains they take to impress you with their "feebleness." They "would" probably do something, but would not for the world "join with others." Why? you ask. "Would have to associate with the circle. Goodness!" Must not think of helping without getting Mr. ——'s consent. Cant get the 'sense of it;'—he knows about it" —for he borrows neighbor ——'s paper; knows the enterprise will be well supported though—heard somebody say so." Young ladies who have no Mr. ——'s to think for them, really do not know, —they never read the newspapers; but it would be delightful to go to a tea-meeting: think they might make up some articles;—wonder if there will pe play allowed at the donation! What a set! I am constrained to say, however, that many worthy persons have been induced to take hold, and the object will not suffer because of the trifling character of many who are appealed to. The people of Brantford organized a Branch of the Union, held a tea-meeting, and gave the proceeds promptly to the paper. At this place, a grand affair will come off soon, of which your readers will hear in time. I would say just here, of the gathering at Brantford, that it was the first they ever held—was made entirely in three days, and that owing to the impossibility of getting a large place at that time, was on a small scale; but a fine affair will come off in the winter,—so say the citizens, when London Fairs, &c., shall have been over with. Too much credit cannot be given to the citizens, and especially the female members of the Union—of whom I must again speak—for their efforts. I went to Brantford with no favorable opinion of the character of the people, but I assure you I have been agreeably disappointed, for there appears to be the best understanding among the citizens, without regard to complexional differences. To be sure, here and there, an "enterprising American," with more brass than brains, is shown one; invariably some one who, having unfortunately emerged from below the under "crust," has not, from his very nature, been able to part company from his degrading instincts,—he does not like to see his colored brethren from the States; but I assure you, he does not have an influence in Brantford that any one need be disturbed about.

Brantford is beautifully located, and it and the surrounding country hold out stronger inducements to settlers than Kansas or Nebraska. I would say much about the country through which I have passed, but especially the fine section threaded by the Welland Canal; but must defer it until more leisure. However, the many lumber mills, fine farms, tasteful houses, &c., testify for the inhabitants much industry, taste, and enterprise. Speaking of saw mills, now that lumber is greatly needed, at Chatham, and by farmers and others through Kent, would it not pay some enterprising capitalist who might be disposed to the business, to buy up lumber from those mills, at their present rates, $9, $10, and $12 per thousand, and sell again further west, now that the article is so much needed, and at such high rates? The advantage of carriage by canal and railroad is great, and 25 per cent. might be safely realized, after deducting costs, though disposed of at a less rate than at present in Chatham. At Princeton, on the Great Western railway line, building material is to be had at a great reduction of the Chatham prices.

By this time, you have concluded to advise one to pay attention to subjects better understood, and to something within "her" sphere. So I think.

M. A. S.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

MR. EDITOR,—For some time past, I have been intending to ask permission for a small space in your paper, for the purpose of making a few inquiries, impressed as I am that you are in a position to furnish the desired information.

I am a subscriber to, and a reader of, your excellent paper, and have been since its first issue.

The regularity which has attended the publication of the Provincial Freeman since its first appearance, it having appeared, I believe, regularly each week since its establishment, should of itself prove a sufficient guarantee to induce the friends of the enterprise to rally around yours, as the only organ now published in Canada, devoted exclusively to the advocacy of the rights of the black population. Its usefulness as a source of information, is felt and acknowledged by not a few with whom I have, during its existence, had intercourse; and it does seem to me that, under proper and efficient management, the Freeman is destined to bring about a very healthy tone of public sentiment in favor of the class of persons whose cause it has espoused and so nobly vindicated. We, in this section of the Province, have noticed with peculiar interest the manner in which you have dealt with the renegade Larwill and his amendment to the speech from the throne. Our only surprise is that he met with such extreme leniency from the men upon whom he dared to heap such gross contumely.

His same Larwill, some few years ago, at a public meeting in the west, suggested a similar proposition to the consideration of Parliament, then assembled at Toronto; and now that he holds a seat in the House of Assembly, he doubtless thinks that he can offer his insults to a certain class of Her Majesty's loyal subjects with impunity; but we can tell him that he will find himself wofully mistaken. It is gratifying to us to know that public sentiment is too far in advance of him, to be influenced by men entertaining sentiments so low and debasing, and, at the same time, so unprincipled, and which are wholly at war with every principle of humanity.

But I find that I am digressing. I stated that I wished to make a few enquiries through your valuable journal; they are simply these: Can any information be furnished respecting the whereabouts of "Alpha" or "Cannuck," and others of your valuable correspondents, who have been silent so long? By the way, speaking of "Cannuck," I read with pleasure his communication respecting the Rev. S. R. Ward, the noble champion and defender of human rights. I was highly delighted with it, and consoled myself with the pleasing idea, that I would be greatly entertained with his frequent communications; but I regret to say, that I, with others, have been seriously disappointed; for we have seen nothing in your paper over that signature since. If "Cannuck" is among your subscribers, and this should meet his eye, as it doubtless will, he will at once learn the anxiety which we have, and the pleasure which we take, in this quarter, in perusing communications which emanate from his pen. "Cannuck" will excuse this freedom taken by an entire stranger, when he is informed that none but the purest of motives have thus prompted me to make the inquiry respecting him.

Hoping to be favored with something from his pen, at his earliest convenience,

I remain yours,

The Great War News.

FURTHER BY THE BALTIC.

We received two despatches yesterday from New York, with further details by the Baltic, and we now publish all that has arrived relating to the contest in the Crimea. The accounts are confused, because they are telegraphic reports from New York of the telegraph reports in England. We have given elsewhere the result of the whole as we read the intelligence received.

FALL OF SEBASTOPOL.

Eight hours after Europa sailed, came official news of a great battle on Alma River, in the Crimea. Allies stormed Russian entrenchment after four hours' fighting. Anglo-French lost 2,800 killed and wounded. Russians lost 6,000!

Private despatches supply rest of news, viz.:—

That the Russians under Menschikoff rallied on River Ratskai on 23rd, and again gave battle to Allies—were again defeated, and driven to entrenchments behind Sebastopol, which was beseiged by sea and land.

Fort Constantine blew up. Other Forts stormed.

Russian fleet taken. Ships sunk.

Russians lost 18,000 killed and wounded. 22,000 prisoners.

Garrison capitulated and were made prisoners of war.

Shattered remains barracaded.

Inner harbor refused to surrender.

The following is a full account of the same incidents:—

The entrenched camp of Russian land forces on the heights of the Alma contained 50,000 men and numerous artillery and cavalry, and was carried at the point of the bayonet after four hours hard fighting. No General Officer of the British was wounded.

Marshal St. Arnaud and Lord Raglan commanded in person. General Thomas (French) thought to be fatally wounded, and Gen. Canrobert wounded in the shoulder.

The second engagement on the plains of Kalantai lasted several hours and was very sanguinary, which ended in the total defeat of the Russians, who were pursued to their entrenchments before Sebastopol.

On the 25th, Fort Constantine was invested by sea and land, and, after an obstinate defence, was carried by storm.

The Allies then bombarded the city and fleet. Ten Russian ships of the fleet were sunk. The others forts were cleared, one after another.

One hundred guns silenced, and 22,000 prisoners taken.

The loss of the Russians in dead and disabled is estimated at no less than 18,000 in Sebastopol alone.

Mensch.koff threatened to fire the town and blow up the rest of the ships, if the allies would not grant him honorable capitulation. The Allied Generals demanded his unconditional surrender and in the name of humanity gave him six hours for consideration.

The last despatch says Menschikoff surrendered and the British and French flags waved over Sebastopol!

Despatches state that the garrisons of Sebastopol were offered free withdrawal, but surrendered as prisoners of war.

MISCELLANEOUS.

It is again ascertained that there are 50,000 Russians in the Dobrudscha and Gen. Luders is constantly receiving reinforcements. Omar Pacha was only waiting St. Arnaud's orders to attack Bessarabia. All the arrangements in the Turkish army indicate the intention of a winter campaign.

The Russians are concentrating in the neighborhood of Ismail.

Details of Sebastopol news were not expected till the 6th.

The Turks were hastening through Bulgaria by forced marches to the sea coast.

The Austrian Ambassador at Paris called on M. Drouyn De L' Huys to express his satisfaction at the success of the Allied Army.

The Paris correspondent of the Independence Belge says it is rumoured that a joint note has been sent by England and France to the Cabinet of Washington, requiring an explanation of the engagement entered into between the United States and Russia, especially of the nature and conditions of an acquisition said to have been made by the United States of Russian possessions in North America.

From the London Times.

Still Further by the "Baltic."

The Battle of Kalantai Plains.

From the small number of guns or prisoners taken by the allies at the Alma on the 21st, we infer that their success amounted to not more than driving the Russians from their position on the heights. At all events, Prince Menschikoff had managed again to bring his forces into order, and on the 22nd Sept. gave battle to the advanced forces on the Plains of Kalantai, on the River Rutcha, after a sanguinary engagement which lasted four hours. The Russian party in Vienna did not think that the Russian armies have met with signal adverses in the Crimea.

Accounts from Odessa say that several battles have taken place in which the artillery of the fleets shared. Prince Menschikoff has fallen back from Alma towards the heights of the Kalla, where he was joined by Gen. Chunitoff with 6,000 foot. On the 23rd there was a battle in which the Russian loss was very considerable. One General and two Colonels were killed. General Chunitoff was wounded. The publication of these despatches was to pave the way for announcing the fall of Sebastopol.

It was stated on the authority of German journals of Frankford that the English Cabinet had brought forward an overture to revise the protocol of London, relative to the Danish succession, and that this new element will form an important part in the negotiations for peace.

The St. Petersburgh Journal publishes a decree forbidding the exportation of corn to Austria.

From the London Times, Oct. 2nd.

The great and glorious news which was confidently anticipated when we last addressed our readers has not only justified but surpassed our expectations, and the day which had been set apart by the Crown and the nation for acknowledging the abundant natural gifts of Providence, has caught from the distant theatre of war the first shout of victory.

Despatches of the 23rd Sept. were received on Saturday by the Government from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, by way of Belgrade, stating that the entrenched camp of the Russians, containing 50,000 men, with numerous artillery and cavalry, on the heights of the Alma, was attacked by the allied troops at 1 p.m., on the 20th, and carried by the bayonet in an hour and a half, with a loss of about 1,400 British troops killed and wounded, and an equal loss on the side of the French, the Russian army driven into full retreat.

In the course of yesterday a further despatch was received by the Duke of Newcastle, direct from Lord Raglan, confirming this intelligence, and stating that the heights above the Alma had been carried after a desperate battle, by the valor of the allied forces.

Lord Raglan estimates the main body of the enemy at from 45 to 50,000 infantry, and adds that 2 line Officers and 2 Generals were taken on this occasion by the English army. Thus far our intelligence is positive, and the battle of the Alma may be ranked with the most brilliant achievements of the two valiant armies which met and fought for the first time, side by side, on the field of battle; but this exploit, gallant and momentous as undoubtedly it is, seems to be already surpassed by the magnitude of its immediate consequences.

Despatches of a less certain and official character, but nevertheless of high probability, have been received by way of Vienna and Bucharest, stating that the fortress of Sebastopol itself surrendered on the 25th to the Allied Army, together with the vast stores of war it contained.

News by the Baltic.

THE LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

Official despatches have been received from Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, Lord Raglan, and Marshal St. Arnaud, confirming the account of the defeat of the Russians at the Alma. The English lost considerably, but no general officer wounded. French loss, 1,400.

As all other news dwindles into insignificance, when compared with such glorious achievements, we give place to extended accounts.

THE NEWS OF THE VICTORY.

When the news reached Constantinople it was ordered that the city should be illuminated for ten successive days. Marseilles was illuminated when the news was brought to that port. On reaching Boulogne, the dispatch was conveyed at once to the Emperor, who was engaged in reviewing the troops. He hastily perused the cypher, then turned to his generals and said quietly "Sebastopol est prise!" The announcement was received with cheers and was briefly communicated by the Emperor to his army. He said:—"This news was probable. I have now the happiness to announce to you myself, and at the moment I speak, I have little doubt that the flags of the allied armies are floating on the walls of Sebastopol."

At Liverpool, Manchester, and other cities the news was welcomed by the ringing of church-bells and by the display of flags.—At London, the Lord Mayor and the civic authorities shortly before 10 o'clock, on the evening of Saturday, Sept. 30, proceeded to the Royal Exchange to proclaim the victory of Alma.

THE DANUBE.

The Turks are hastening through Bulgaria by forced marches on the sea coast.

SEBASTOPOL.

From our scanty materials we find it impossible to make anything like a connected account of the attack on Sebastopol. The dispatches published in the English papers abound in repetitions and contradictions.

A dispatch from Omar Pasha to the Turkish minister at Vienna is reported to state that "Sebastopol is taken with all its material and fleet. The garrison were offered free withdrawal, but they preferred remaining prisoners of war. They surrendered on the 25th."

Vienna, October 1—The garrison of Sebastopol, to which a free retreat, after laying down their arms, was offered, preferred to remain as prisoners of war.

We have no trustworthy intelligence of what part the fleet played in the conflict—One account says that ten Russian ships of war were burned and sunk. Another says that the fleet surrendered and took no part in the fight. Yet another states that Fort Constantine blew up, or was blown up by shells from the English ships. And a statement is made which may have some foundation in truth, to the effect that the Russians were totally disheartened by their repeated defeats, and did not make the protracted resistance they might have done.—Their fearful loss (18,000), however, indicates a sufficiently brave defence.

Kiel, Monday—Admiral Perseval-Deschenes is leaving our harbour with the French fleet to join Admiral Napier in the Baltic. Admiral Napier was before Revel on the 23rd. It is not probable that the allied fleets in the Baltic will undertake any attack this season.

Warsaw, Sept. 27.—It is confidently asserted that the Emperor Nicholas will come here early next month.

Vienna, Sunday—Additional.—Both Cracow and Olmutz have been made storeplaces for ammunition and arms, and every thing tends to show that Austria is preparing for a war with Russia, should the Frankfort Diet join with Prussia. Austria is resolved to enforce the four guarantees in common with the Western Powers, without either Prussia or the minor States.

THE LANDING IN THE CRIMEA —ARRIVAL OF THE INVADING ARMY.

On Sept. 13, the formidable squadron of the allies came in sight of the spot selected for the landing of the main body of their army. All the ships were drawn up in lines and extended a front of nine miles. All eye and telescopes were turned toward the beach, but not a hostile uniform was visible. The signal to commence disembarkation was to be a gun from the Agamemnon, and every ship and boat's crew knew precisely the place they would have to occupy.

LANDING OF THE FRENCH.

A little after 7, a French boat, containing 15 or 16 men, pulled quietly to the beach, and landed her crew, who advanced a short distance and commenced digging a hole. Presently the anxious spectators from the ships saw a flag-staff raised, and the tricolor run up! Immediately the French Admiral fired a gun,—boats dashed out from every one of the French ships, and in two minutes they had landed 6,000 men! The French were thus the first to take possession of the Crimea. The instant the French had landed a regiment, a company was pushed on to reconnoitre, and skirmishers or pickets were sent on in front. As each regiment followed in column, its predecessors deployed—extended front—and advanced in light marching order, en Tirailleur, spreading out like a fan, over the plains. It was interesting to observe their progress, and to note the rapid manner in which they appropriated the soil. In one hour after their first detachment had landed, 9,000 troops, of all arms, were on shore, and their advanced posts were scarcely discernable between three and four miles from the beach. The French had in all 24,000 men.

LANDING OF THE BRITISH—NARROW ESCAPE OF SIR GEORGE BROWN.

At 9 o'clock in the morning one black ball was run up to the mast head of the Agmemnon, and a gun fired. The signal meant; attend to the following orders: Division of boats assemble round ships to disembark infantry and artillery." No enemy had hitherto appeared in sight; but now the figure of a mounted Russian officer, followed by a few Cossacks, was distinctly seen on the heights. The Russian was within 1,000 yards, and through a glass his every motion could be watched. A letter says:—

The Russian rode slowly along by the edge of the cliff, apparently noting the number and disposition of the fleet, and taking notes with great calmness in a memorandum book. He wore a dark green frock coat, with a little silver lace, a cap of the same color, a sash round his waist, and long leather boots. His horse, a fine bay charger, was a strange contrast to the shaggy, rough little steeds of his followers. There they were, 'the Cossacks,' at last! stout, compact-looking fellows, with sheep-skin caps, uncouth clothing of indiscriminate cut, high saddles, and little fiery ponies, which carried them with wonderful ease and strength. Each Cossack carried a thick lance of some 15 feet in length and a heavy-looking sabre. At times they took rapid turns by the edge of the cliff in front of us—now to the left—now to the rear of their officer, and occasionally they dipped out of sight, over the hill, altogether. Then they came back, flourishing their lances, and pointing to the accumulating masses of French on their right, not more than half a mile from them on the shore, or scampering over the hill to report progress as to the lines of English boats advancing to the beach. Their officer behaved very well. He remained for an hour within range of a minie rifle, and when the Highflyer stood in close to shore, while he was coolly making a sketch in his portfolio of our appearance, we all expected that they were going to drop a shell over himself and his little party. We were glad his expectations were not realized, if it were only on the chance of the sketch being tolerably good, so that the Czar might really see what our armada was like.

The Russian continued his sketching. Suddenly a Cossack crouched down and pointed with his lance to the ascent of the cliff. The officer turned and looked in the direction. We looked too, and lo! a cocked hat rose above the horizon. Another figure, with a similar head-dress, came also in view. The first was Sir George Brown, on foot; the second was made out to be Quartermaster-General Airey. The scene was exciting. It was evident the Russian and the Cossacks saw Sir George, but that he did not see them. A picket of fusiliers and riflemen followed the General at a considerable interval. The Russian got on his horse, the Cossacks followed his example, and one of them cantered to the left to see that the French were not cutting off their retreat, while the others stooped down over their saddle bows and rode stealthily, with lowered lances towards the Englishmen.

Sir George was in danger, but he did not know it. Neither did the Russians see the picket advancing toward the brow of the hill. Sir George was busy scanning the country, and pointing out the various spots to the Quarter-master-General. Suddenly they turn and slowly descend the hill; the gold sash disappears; the cocked hat is eclipsed; Cossacks and officers dismount and steal along by the side of their horses. They, too, are hid from sight for a short time, and on the brow of the cliffs appears a string of native carts. In about five minutes two or three puffs of smoke rose over the cliff, and presently the faint cracks of a rifle are audible to the men in the nearest ships. In a few minutes more the Cossacks are visible, flying like the wind on the road to Sebastopol, and crossing close to the left of the French line of skirmishers.

When we landed we heard that Sir George Brown had a narrow escape from being taken prisoner. It appeared he had been the first to land and pushed on without sending videttes, although he fortunately took the precaution to bring a few soldiers with him. The Cossacks, who had been dodging among the rocks, made a dash at him when within a hundred yards. The general had to run, and was only saved by a volley from the fusileers, which brought the pursuers to a stand.

The rest of the disembarkation was effected without any incident worthy of notice. Each officer carried in his haversack 4½ pounds of salt meat and 4½ pounds of biscuit as his rations for three days. Besides this he carried his great-coat strapped around his body, a wooden keg for water, a small ration of spirits, a change or two of linen, a forage cap, and in most instances a Colt's revolver. Each private man carried the same as the officers, and in addition a portion of the mess cooking apparatus, firelock and bayonet, cartouch-box, and 50 rounds of ball cartridge. Both officers and men were in capital spirits.

THE VERY LATEST—THE FALL OF SEBASTOPOL.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 4—8 o'clock a. m.

VIENNA, Oct. 3.—Several private despatches received here to-day, confirm the intelligence received from various quarters relative to the fall of Sebastopol. No official confirmation, however, has reached us, but an official despatch from St. Petersburg, dated the 1st inst., stating that advices from Prince Menschikoff of the 26th, make no mention of disastrous events, causes some anxiety here.

VIENNA, Tuesday, Oct. 3.—Prince Menschikoff's despatch to St. Petersburgh is doubtless dated the 20th, not the 26th, for his last despatch was eleven days en route.

The local papers publish the following: Five hours after the bombardment, Fort Constantine blew up. Ten thousand Russians were buried in its ruins. Prince Menschikoff fled to Fort Alexander, where 18,000 Russians surrendered. The allied fleets simultaneously destroyed the out harbor forts and vanquished the Russian fleet. Prince Menschikoff is reported to have unconditionally surrendered on the 26th.

Constantinople advices of the 7th enable me to give you some further account of Schamyl's movements. Between the 26th of August and the 1st of September the Circassian chief entered the northern part of Georgia with 18,000 men, and advanced in the Kour. The centre, which he commanded in person, was at Achalgori on the 28th of August; the right wing, under the Emir Hassan Emin, was at Gori, on the Kour, at the same date; and the left wing, under Emir Chupli Emin, was at Mycht, a little to the north of Tiflis. The Russians were taken completely by surprise, and retreated after a very feeble resistance into the mountains. Schamyl carried off a great quantity of booty and made some prisoners of high rank. An important result of the razzia was, that the Russians were immediately obliged to relinquish all idea of conquest in Turkish Armenia. The Turkish Minister who has left Persia is said "to have received leave of absence," but at such a moment this is not probable. Ferhad Pasha (Stein) has been definitely appointed Quartermaster-General in Anasolia, instead of Kourchid Pasha (Guyon.)

Provincial Parliament.

In Parliament there is nothing of importance transpiring. Below is a synopsis of proceedings.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

QUEBEC, October 16.

Mr. DORION, of Montreal introduced a Bill to amend the law in relation to Tavern Licenses, and more effectually to suppress intemperance.

Mr. BUREAU introduced a Bill to avoid doubts in respect to the charter of the Montreal and New York RailroadCompany.

Mr. DORION of Montreal introduced a Bill to incorporate the British American Friendly Society of Canada.

SIR A. McNAB said, in answer to Mr. Farrie, that the government had not yet made any arrangement with reference to the establishment of Deaf and Dumb Institutions, but they had the subject under consideration.

On motion of Mr. Larwill an address was ordered relative to the affairs of the Elgin Association.

Mr. BOWES introduced a bill to confer on the city of Toronto the possession of the Island opposite to it.

Mr. CAYLEY said, in answer to Mr. Holton, that the government did not intend for the present to alter the system of depositing money in the Bank of Upper Canada, but they did not pledge themselves not to make any alterations.

QUEBEC, Oct. 17.

The following Bills were read a second time: Whitby Incorporation Bill; Public Officers Seizures Bill; Quebec Friendly Society Bill; Canada Ocean Steam Navigation Company's Bill; and Mason College Bill was passed through Committee.

To-night Mr. Attorney-General McDonald introduced the Clegry Reserves bill, and it was ordered to be read the second time on Tuesday next. He explained that the bill creates two funds—one for Lower and the other for Upper Canada—all the assets of the Clergy Reserves accrued or to accrue, are transferred to them. The stipends now paid to the Clergy are secured to them during their lives, and sums now paid to Catholic and Methodist churches, are to be secured to them for such a term of years as the House may determine. Government at its option may commute the stipends by agreement with the Church bodies, not with the incumbents. When the principal amounts to a sum sufficient to pay commutations and secure a revenue adequate to defraying stipends not commuted, the balance is to be divided from year to year among the municipalities, according to population.

On motion of Sir Allan McNab, the House adjourned over till to-morrow, to mark its sense of the great victory gained by the allies over the Russians. The motion was carried amid loud cheers, clapping of hands, and shouts of "hurrah."

The Great Canadian Counterfeit Gang.

A month or two since we announced the arrest, in Canada, of a gang of seven persons engaged in the manufacture of counterfeit bank plates and dies on the most extensive scale. For a long period this gang has been quite successful in circulating their counterfeits upon the banks of the United States, and in some instances men have grown grey headed and wealthy in the business. We learn from a gentleman from Montreal that the gang arrested are to have their trial there on the 15th of the month. Among the number is True F. Young, who several years since was in custody in this city on a similar charge; there is also one of the Boney family; an old man of 60, named Heard, possessed of considerable wealth whose daughters signed the bills; also three men, named Bowers, Wilson and Gleason—the latter being an excellent engraver. The spoil obtained from them is probably the most extensive ever secured to the United States. There was no less than forty-seven bank plates, nearly all for counterfeits on banks in the United States. At the time of the arrest of these counterfeiters, an attempt was made by the officer and his posse to arrest a man by the name of Phelps charged with a number of daring bank forgeries. Phelps got the alarm and stationed himself in an upper room, to which there was but a narrow passageway. He was armed with two double barrelled guns, two revolvers, a bowie knife and a slung shot, and kept the officer at bay for six hours, when he was finally arrested; but on the way to prison, in the custody of three men he made his escape, and has not since been seen. Sheriff Clark arrested at Portland a day or two since, a man named Dunn, who had been sentenced to fourteen years imprisonment for counterfeiting, but who managed to break jail and escape. He was taken back to his old quarters at Sherbrooke, Canada. It is to be hoped that by the breaking up of this great band, who, with others, for the last twenty or thirty years, from the Canada side, have flooded the United States with enormous quantities of counterfeit money, a blow has been given which will finally put an end to the business. —Boston Traveller, Oct. 4.

NORMAL AND MODEL SCHOOLS.—The examination of the Normal and Model Schools, closing the last Session, came off during the last week, resulting, as they always do in higher appreciation of the benefits of the institution; the efficacy of the course of study, and the zeal and energy of the teachers. At the public examination on Thursday, gentlemen from the Sister Provinces were present, and expressed the great satisfaction it afforded them to see the result of the sessions study. The Governor General's Prize, a munificent donation, was awarded to Miss Robin on, the amiable and accomplished daughter of Rev. J. H. Robinson, of this city. The Model School examination was attended by a large number of delighted citizens. The sickness in the city during the last session, caused the operations of the school to be suspended for a considerable time, but notwithstanding that, the children answered promptly nearly every question put to them, exhibiting as the fruits of the labours of the past session, an amount of knowledge rarely possessed by persons so young.

NEW COUNTERFEITS.—The Cleveland Plain Dealer, of Tuesday, says:—"Ones, on the Niagara District Bank, Canada, have made their appearance in our city this morning:—fac-similes of genuine notes, coarser, a shade darker, and engraved signatures.

FORCE OF SAP.—Braddjick, a British physiologist, cut off the stem of a grape, five years old, and covered the wound with a piece of bladder, secured by cement and twine. The bladder, although at first drawn very close to the top of the shoot, soon began to stretch, and to raise a ball over the wound, feeling as hard as a cricket ball. In about 48 hours afterwards the force of the sap burst the bladder.

Trustees and Directors

Elected to serve during the present year:—

W. J. MACDONELL,—PRESIDENT,
P. J. O'NEILL,—VICE-PRESIDENT,
MESSRS. S. G. LYNN, P. FOY, & DR. HAYES,
BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

Children Going to Rest.

BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

The day is gone. The sun hath said
Farewell, with silent tongue,
And laid him on his western bed,
With golden curtains hung
But, ere we little children creep
All tired with play to pleasant sleep,
We'll take our leave with kisses bright,
And bid the baby dear—Good night

Good night, ye blessed stars that keep
Your watch around our rest—
And birds that fold the way to sleep,
Within your quiet nest.
Good night, green trees, beneath whose shade
Our pretty wild-flower wreaths are made—
And singing brook and blossom bright,
And every lovely thing—Good night.

Mother! we turn to thee the last
Sweet words we still would say;
See! your kind hand in ours is fast—
Please come and hear us pray.
Yes, see us on our pillow laid,
And then, at midnight's darkest shade,
The whisners of our dreams shall be
Of angel visitants and thee.

Miscellaneous.

Making Faces at a Witness.

One of the "smartest" lawyers in one of the New England States has an unfortunate infirmity of the muscles of his countenance, and the convulsive movements or twitches of his ponderous eyebrows, nose, and the parts adjacent thereto, are almost frightful to persons unacquainted with the gentleman, and with this peculiarity of his physiognomy It happened on one occasion, during a trial in which Squire H. was engaged, that a buxom matron was placed in a witness stand. The good lady was one of the class who are not afraid to look about them, and withal, understand the use of their tongues. Squire H. was observing her attentively while the junior counsel conducted the examination. The lady proceeded, with great volubility, in her narrative of what somebody did and said in the house, in reference to something in dispute between the parties litigant.

At length she caught the eye of Squire H., and, reddened with anger, she stopped, but at the suggestion of the examining attorney proceeded. But she soon observed the legal gentleman's visage turned towards her again, and the eternal grimace of the unconscious lawyer upset her temper.

She stopped, looked furiously at Squire H., gave her head a toss, fanned herself violently a minute, and then proceeded with her testimony.

Again, on looking round at Squire H., she caught him at it, and her anger rose almost to the boiling point. She shook her fan at him, and looked as if "she would eat him up." His honor the judge at length requested her to go on with her narative. The indignant witness drew herself up as stiff as a whalebone, and snapped out—

"Please yer honor, I can't, as long as that ugly man sits there a making faces at me."

The gravity of the bench, bar, jury-box, and spectators' gallery, was all upset in a promiscuous heap, and everybody but Squire H. thought it a capital joke—on the face of it.

AN EXPERIMENT IN FATTENING TURKEYS.—A "Poultry Raiser" gives the following:—Much has been published of late in our agricultural journals in relation to the alimentary properties of charcoal. It has been repeatedly asserted, that domestic fowls may be fattened on it without any other food, and that too in a shorter time than on the most nutritive grains. I have recently made an experiment and must say the result surprised me, as I had always been rather skeptical. Four turkeys were confined in a pen, and fed on meal, boiled potatoes and oats. Four others of the same brood, were also, at the same time confined in another pen, and fed daily on the same articles, but with one pint of very finely pulverized charcoal mixed with their mixed meal and potatoes. They had also a plentiful supply of broken charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed on the same day, and there was a difference of one and a half pounds each in favor of the fowls which had been supplied with the charcoal, they being much the fattest, and the meat greatly superior in point of tenderness and flavor.

VALUE OF BIRDS.—Many years ago the coffee plants in the island of Madagascar were attacked by a garkle, a well-known bird on the African coast. The garkle is an insect feeder, but, having used up the supply, it betook itself in pure necessity to coffee. An edict was speedily issued and carried into effect for the annihilation of garkles, and every bird on the island was destroyed. All went on very well for a year or two; when, lo and behold! the insect and their larvæ, having the field to themselves, began to make sad havoc on the coffee. What was to be done? There was no alternative but that of bringing back the garkle which was in due season imported.

RECIPES, &c.

TO CLEAN HEAD AND CLOTHES BRUSHES.—Put a table-spoonful of pearlash into a pint of boiling water. Having fastened a bit of sponge to the end of a stick, dip it into the solution, and wash the brush with it, carefully going in among the bristles. Next pour over it some clean hot water, and let it lie a little while. Then drain it, wipe it with a cloth, and dry it before the fire.

HOW TO PETRIFY WOOD.—Take equal qualities of rock alum, white vinegar, calx and pebble-powder. Mix all together, and when the effervescence subsides, throw in the wood or other porous substance, and let it soak for four or five days, when the petrefaction will be complete.

TEST FOR SOUND EGGS.—The larger end of a newly laid egg feels cold when placed against the tongue. A newly laid egg, also, appears semi-transparent when placed between the eye and a strong light, and has a small and preceptible division of the skin from the shell, which division is filled with air or gas. If an egg shakes it is sure to be stale.

Cedar chests are best to keep flannels, for cloth moths are never found in them. Red cedar chips are good to keep in drawers, wardrobes, closets, trunks, &c, to keep out moths.

Satisfaction can nowhere be placed but in a just sense of our own integrity, without regard to the opinions of others.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case, will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDRICK DOUGLASS, JOHN D. PECK, AMOS G. BEMAN, JOHN JONES, J. D. BONNER, J. MCCUNE SMITH, } Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the co

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois; the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Alioned American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which, renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now, trimuphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number;

Constitution of the National Council.

For the purpose of improving the character, developing the intelligence, maintaining the rights and organizing a Union of the Colored People of the Free States, the National Convention does hereby ordain and institute the

"NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE COLORED PEOPLE."

Art. 1. This Council shall consist of two members from each State, represented in this Convention, to be elected by this Convention, and two other members from each State to be elected as follows: On the 15th day of November next, and biennially thereafter, there shall be held in each State, a Poll, at which each colored inhabitant may vote who pays ten cents as poll-tax, and each State shall elect, at such election, such delegates to State Legislatures, twenty in number from each State, at large. The election to be held at such places and under such conditions as the public meetings in such localities may determine. The members of the National Council in each State, shall receive, canvass, and declare the result of such vote. The State Council, thus elected, shall meet on the first Monday in January, 1854, and elect additional members to the National Council, in proportion of one to five thousand of the colored population of such State; and the members of council thus elected, to take office on the sixth day of July next, and all to hold office during two years from that date; at the end of which time another general election by State council shall take place of members to constitute their successors in office, in the same numbers as above. The State council of each State shall have full power over the internal concerns of said State.

Art. 2. The members of the first council shall be elected by this convention, which shall designate out of the number, a President, a Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, corresponding Secretary, and committee of five on Manual Labor—a committee of five on Protective Unions—of five on Business Relations—of five on Publications.

Art. 3. The committee on Manual Labor School shall procure funds and organize said School in accordance with the plans adopted by this National Convention, with such modifications as experience or necessity may dictate to them. The committee shall immediately incorporate itself as an academy under "The General Committee of the State of——," and shall constitute the Board of Trustees of the Manual Labor School, with full power to select a location in the State designated by the National council, to erect buildings, appoint or dismiss instructers in the literary or mechanical branches. There shall be a farm attached to the School.

Art. 4. The committee on Protective Unions shall institute a Protective Union for the purchase and sale of articles of domestic consumption, and shall unite and aid in the formation of branches anxiliary to their own.

Art. 5. The committee on Business Relations, shall establish an office, in which they shall keep a registry of colored mechanics, artizans and business men throughout the Union. They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and boys seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital, skill, or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. They shall receive for sale or exhibition, products of the skill and labor of colored people.

Art. 6. The committee on Publication shall collect all facts, statistics and statements, all laws and historical records and biographies of the colored people, and all books by colored authors. They shall have for the safe keeping of these documents, a Library, with a Reading Room and Museum. The committee shall also publish replies to any assaults, worthy of note, made upon the character or condition of the colored People.

Art. 7. Each committee shall have absolute control over its special department; shall make its own by-laws, and in case of any vacancy occurring, shall fill up the same forthwith subject to the confirmation of the council. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and financial, and shall submit a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 9. In all cases of the meetings of the National Council, or the committees, the traveling expenses (if any) of the members shall be paid out of the respective funds.

Art. 10. The council shall immediately establish a bureau in the place of its meeting: and the same rooms shall, as far as possible, be used by the several committees for their various purposes. The council shall have a clerk, at a moderate salary, who will keep a record of their transactions, and prepare a condensed report of the committees for publication; and, also, a registry of the friends of the cause.

Art. 11. The expenses of the council shall be defrayed by the fees of membership of subsocieties or councils, to be organised throughout the States. The membership fee shall be one cent per week.

Art. 12. A member of the council shall be member of only one of the committees thereof.

Art. All. 13 officers holding funds, shall give security in double the amount likely to be in their hands. This security to be given to the three first officers of the council.

Art. 14. The council shall have power to make such Bye-Laws as are necessary for their proper government

The following resolutions, having a direct bearing upon the plan of organization were adopted by the Convention and are therefore appended to the Council's Constitution.]

Resolved That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committees.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a premium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That any State applying for admission into this Union, shall be admitted on such terms, as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and separate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom; and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart, if we plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of a whiter complexion. 3rd. To aid in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly as it is the case of Great Britain, to close its progress in America by all legitimate means, and 5th To encourage rising generations in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to adhere to sound principles, and to use our ability to promote its circulation in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. curr'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being

Poetry.

This World is Full of Beauty.

There lives a voice within me, a guest angel of my heart,
And its sweet lispings win me, till the tears a trembling start;
Up evermore it springeth, like some magic melody,
And evermore it singeth this sweet song of songs to me:
This world is full of beauty, as other worlds above;
And, if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

Night's starry tendernesses dower with glory evermore,
Morn's budding, bright, melodious hour comes sweetly as of yore;
But there be million hearts accurst, where no sweet sunbursts shine,
And there be million hearts athirst for Love's immortal wine:
This world is full of beauty, as other worlds above;
And, if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

If faith, and hope, and kindness pass'd, as coin, 'twixt heart and heart,
How, thro' the eye's tear-blindness, should the sudden soul upstart!
The dreary, dim, and desolate, should wear a sunny bloom,
And Love should spring from buried Hate, like flowers o'er Winter's tomb:
This world is full of beauty, as other worlds above;
And, if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

With truth, our utter'd language, Angels might talk with men,
And God-illumined earth should see the Golden Age again:
The burden'd heart shall soar in mirth like Mi ns young prophet-lark,
An. Mi ry s last tear wept on earth, quench H ls last cunning spark:
For this world is full of beauty, as other worlds above;
And, if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

Lo! plenty ripens round us, yet awakes the cry for bread,
The millions still are toiling, crush'd, and clad in rags, unfed;
While sunny hills and valleys richly blush with fruit and grain,
But the paupers in the palace rob their toiling fellow-men:
This world is full of beauty, as other worlds above;
And if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

Dear God! what hosts are trampled 'mid this killing crush for gold!
What noble hearts are sapp'd of love! what spirits lose life's hold!
Yet a merry world it might be, opulent for all, and aye,
With its lands that ask for labour, and its wealth that wastes away:
This world is full of beauty, as other worlds above;
And if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

The leaf-tongues of the forest, and the flow'r-lips of the sky,—
The happy birds that hymn their raptures in the ear of God—
The summer wind that bringeth music over land and sea,
Have each a voice that singeth this sweet song of songs to me:
This world is full of beauty, as other worlds above;
And, if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

Things as they are in America.

CANADA-WEST TO MICHIGAN.

Six-and-thirty years ago, when machinery had dealt a death-blow to the profession of the handloom-weaver, one of the many victims of that disastrous improvement was a sturdy little man, whom I remember to have seen driving his shuttle in a humble workshop in a small town on the banks of the Tweed. Instead of repining, or continuing the vain attempt to wring a subsistence out of his exploded craft, this capital specimen of an indomitable Scot sold his loom, paid his debts, and with wife and children sailed for America. Arriving in pretty nearly a penniless condition, he made his way, as I had heard, to the London district of Canada, where he settled and was still living.

While I remained in London, I made inquiries respecting the present position of this exiled victim of the power-loom, and was glad to learn that it was highly respectable. Curious to see what actual progress he had made, I paid a visit to his residence, which was situated six or seven miles distant. Although vastly improved in worldly circumstances, I found him living in the same log-hut, which he had reared on his arrival in the country, upwards of thirty years ago. His settlement, which was situated down one of the concessions or cross roads leading from the main thoroughfare, was bounded by rail-fences, in which a rude gateway admitted me to an orchard fronting the house, near which were barns, and other buildings, wholly of wood. My appearance created quite a sensation in the establishment, and there was a rush to the door to receive and give me a hearty welcome. In a minute, I was in the interior, seated before a huge fire of blazing fagots on the hearth, over which hung several pots sending a savoury steam up the chimney. The patriarch of the household, eighty years of age, but as full of spirit as ever, sat in an arm-chair on one side, while the mother of the family seated herself opposite. A daughter acted as a maiden-of-all-work, and hung about listening to enquiries respecting the country whence the family had emigrated long before she was born. As if signalled by an electric-telegraph several tall and stout sons made their appearance from their respective dwellings in the neighbourhood. The old man's story, which he dealt out along with jocular reminiscences of "auld langsyne," had in it nothing singular, but was nevertheless valuable, as offering an example of what any earnest-minded and self-denying man may do in the western world.

'When I came to the spot,' said he, 'there was not a house for miles around—London was not built. The country was all forest. I helped to make the concession-road which you came by, for which service government gave me a grant of some land. It was dreadful hard work at first, and as the children were young, I had to do everything myself. Before I procured a horse, I had to carry grain on my back for miles to be ground. But having good health, I never complained. It won't do to sit down and cry. Push ahead, and keep on never minding, is here the great doctrine. As the family grew up, I could take things easier, and now can look about me at some improvements. I have a capital, farm of one hundred acres, cleared, and under crop. It is intended for my younger son, when I am gone. My three elder sons have each a good farm of the same size. We are now a kind of clan, with plenty of everything—horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, and poultry.'

'And no want of apples,' said I, glancing upwards at the numerous festoons of dried fruit which hung from the ceiling.

'O yes, that orchard at the door is of my own planting, and it is very productive. No want of puddings, I can tell you, for we also make our own sugar; and, in fact, we scarcely need to buy anything. Very different from the days when I was on the loom, and the good-wife had to contrive how to make both ends meet.'

'And had you remained in that situation,' I observed, 'these sons of yours would probably have been daylabourers at twelve shillings a week. That is the wages now going in your old neighbourhood.'

'You hear that, lads,' said the old man. 'You see how thankful you should be for your mercies. It was a blessed thing I came away.'

'I suppose your sons are doing very well with their farms; they are probably good ploughmen?'

'No doubt of it; and one of them, who has a turn for mechanics, has made a machine for peeling apples.'

'That must be curious; I should like to see it.'

Immediately, there was brought from a recess an ingenious piece of mechanism, not unlike an old-fashioned spinning-wheel. An apple having been stuck on the point of the spindle, and a curved knife being held to it, it was stripped of its skin by a few turns of the wheel; and another machine with equal speed, took from it the core. I was much amused with these devices for peeling fruit on a great scale, but afterwards found that such apple-machines were common all over the States. It was finally explained to me, that the object of these operations was to prepare apples for winter use. Being cut in pieces, strung together on threads, and hung up in a warm kitchen, the apples will keep sound all winter; and though a little shrivelled and dried in appearance, they make as good puddings as if they had been freshly peeled. So far as I am aware, this method of preserving apples for culinary purposes is not known or practiced in England.

It must be owned, that the general aspect of affairs in and about the emigrants dwelling was not of that refined character which one might reasonably have looked for after so many years of laborious and successful industry. But if things were somewhat Robinson Crusoeish, the circumstances is explained by original habits, though chiefly by the spare capital having been expended in extending the family possessions. In short, it would have been easy for the aged proprietor to have built a fine mansion for himself; but he preferred, he said, seeing his family settled comfortably; although be doubtless carried his principles in this respect a little too far.

There was much lamentation at the shortness of my stay; and when I departed, the whole household stood around the door to see me drive off, which it required some dexterity to accomplish without doing damage to several families of black pigs—genuine Hampshire brocks, as I took them to be—which were strolling about in the diligent pursuit of apples and other windfalls.

I made some other visits in the neighborhood of London, and should have been glad to have made more had time permitted; but a sudden snap of extremely cold weather and a slight fall of snow, admonished me that it was time to hasten southwards. Accordingly, I made up my mind to do so, on reaching Detroit in Michigan, for which I now prepared to set out in a conveyance similar to the one that had brought me to the place. My design was to proceed from London to Chatham, a town on the lower part of the Thames, whence there are steamers to Detroit; but some information respecting the badness of the roads deterred me from the attempt, and I ultimately adopted the route to Sarnia, a small port on the St. Clair river, near the foot of Lake Huron. After all, I imagine I gained nothing by this arrangement, so far as comfort in travelling is concerned. The distance was sixty miles, which were promised to be performed in twelve hours, but were not, in reality, done in less than sixteen. Already I had obtained some knowledge of the Canadian roads, and now completed this branch of my education. In one or two places I have spoken of toll-bars, and from this it may, perhaps, be supposed that the roads are generally macadamised, and tolerably good. They are so in the neighbourhood of large towns, but as soon as tolls disappear, the traveller begins to observe a strange falling off in the quality of the thoroughfares. Any attempt at laying down broken stones to form a hard basis seems not to be thought of; the natural surface, be it sand or clay, is left to take its chance; and vehicles go ploughing along, as if struggling across a rough and newly-ploughed field. After rains, the case is dismal: the wheels sink to nearly the axles; and in spite of inconceivable toil, the poor horses are unable to make more than two or three miles an hour. Where the ground is swampy, and there would be a risk of sinking utterly out of sight, trees are laid across the path; and over these corduroyed parts of the road, the carriage goes securely, but bumpingly, in a very unpleasant way. The best thoroughfares of all, are the plank-roads; which I had never heard of till I reached Canada. These are stretches of road covered with a flooring of thick deals laid on joisting; the deals being smooth, as from the saw, and the whole laid so evenly, that carriages are drawn over them in beautiful style. These plank-roads are usually joint stock undertakings, or belong to municipalities, and are established by act of the provincial parliament, with power to erect turnpike-gates and exact tolls. The appearance of these toll-bars is hailed with inexpressible delight by the traveller, for he knows that on reaching them there is an end, for ten or twelve miles at least, of the jolts and jumbles with which he has for some time been afflicted. With such practical experience of Canadian roads, one can easily understand the longing for snow in winter, when the sleighs are driven along with the velocity of the wind; for then only is extended intercourse conducted with anything like pleasure. Railways, of course, will now change all this, and render travelling as easy in Canada as it is in England; at the same time opening up and developing the resources of the country to an extent that could not otherwise have been anticipated.

With this short explanation, the reader will imagine he sees a two-horse vehicle, open in front, in which are seated two travellers wrapped in woollen plaids, their knees shrouded in a thick buffalo-skin, and thick shawls wrapped around their necks; before them is the driver, a young man in a rough jacket, with coarse boots drawn with studied slovenliness over his trousers, so that these voluminous garments stick out all round in a singularly free-and-easy way. The air is cold; a thin coating of snow has fallen, and partially conceals the treacherous ruts; the sides of the roads are in places fenced with zigzag rails; but in others there is no fence at all, and the thoroughfare is bounded on both sides for miles by thick tangled forests, composed of beech, maple, oak, and other hardwood trees now greatly stripped of their leaves, and amidst which the pines and other evergreens tower in dark masses, affording an agreeable relief to the eye Leaving the town of London in early morning, the wagon thus goes on its way: at first smartly and encouragingly; then more moderately, with sundry admonitory jerks; and lastly, it stumbles on in a very alarming manner, the horses now getting into a trot, then lapsing to a walk, and always meandering from side to side, to seek out good bits wherever they can be found. Canadian horses, however have immense spirit; and as you may rest assured they will get through some way or other, there is nothing to fear. We had at anyrate a whole day before us, and the novelty of the scene was so exhilarating, that if no fresh fall of snow occurred, there was little cause for disquietude.

During this protracted day's ride, I had an opportunity of seeing a tract of country of comparatively recent settlement. There were no towns and few villages on the road. At intervals of one or two miles, in the midst of clearings, we passed solitary houses, which as usual were of wood, sometimes neatly constructed and painted, and sometimes only log-huts, of recent erection. Occasionally, there were inns, adjoining which might be seen a blacksmith's and carpenter's shop. The greater part of the land seemed to be of good quality, and well adapted for cultivation. At one of the inns where we stopped, we learned that much of the district had been settled a number of years ago by half-pay officers, who, after clearing portions of their properties, and otherwise exhausting their means, got disheartened, and left the place. Those who could not sell their farms, let them to new and more hardy settlers, and these continued in possession till they had realised enough of money to become purchasers; and as such they were doing well—so true is it, that none but those who will work with their own hands, and for a time dismiss all delicacy of living, can expect to thrive as settlers in this new country. On the road we overtook one of this toiling class. He told us, he had been a rural labourer in the south of England, on the property of Lord ———, where his wages were 8s. per week. On coming to Canada, he first hired himself to a farmer, and having saved a little, rented one of the abandoned clearings, which last year he had been able to buy, and now, as he said, he was in comfortable circumstances. His latest acquisition was a cow, which he highly appreciated for the sake of milk for his family. I was much pleased with the manly way in which this industrious person mentioned these particulars. In England, he would probably have talked in an embarrassed, 'if you please,' fashion. Transferred to a country where he was called on to act an independant part, he spoke without timidity, but also without rudeness; and if not what is ordinarily called a gentleman, he at least behaved like one.

Towards evening, the roads were terrible. A thaw having come on and softened the mud, the horses slipped at every step, and at length one of them fell: when again set on its legs, the poor creature was found to have lost a shoe—a misfortune that caused some detention at the next blacksmith's forge, and left us in the dark still fifteen miles from Sarnia. There was only one spark of hope At a certain distance, we had the promise of coming to a plank-road. Yet the plank-road seemed to recede as we advanced. Sometimes we were told it was four miles off; then it would be as far as five miles; and in despair of reaching it at all, we had arranged to stop for the night at the first inn we came to, when suddenly a joyful sound struck our ear: the horses had got their feet on the planks. In a minute, we were bowling along at the rate of ten miles an hour, and reached our destination without any further misadventure. As we drove up to the door of the hotel, a few twinkling stars afforded just sufficient light to show the broad surface of the river St. Clair, the western boundary of Canada.

Sarnia, as seen next morning, is a thriving little town situated on the St. Clair, about a mile below the point where it issues from Lake Huron, and carrying on some trade in shipping. The view across the river, which is half a mile wide, shews us the coast of Michigan, low and lined with trees, with a neat white-painted town, having a steam-vessel moored at the quay. In this steamer, which crossed to Sarnia for passengers, we descended the St. Clair, the voyage occupied five hours to Detroit. In the course of the trip, the vessel touched frequently at places on both sides of the river.

The sail down the St. Clair was very charming. On the Canadian shore, there was pointed out a long series of small clearings with cottages, forming a settlement of Indians, protected by the British government; and Melville Island, in the lower part of the river, is devoted exclusively to the same object. These Indians, partially civilized, were spoken of as not making any marked progress; and a clergyman, who is charged with their supervision and instruction, stated to me that they were lessening in numbers, and would ultimately be extinct as a race. I believe this opinion corresponds with the general experience concerning the Indian tribes, when brought within the operation of ordinary social arrangements.

On the Michigan side, several pretty little towns were touched at, which shewed marks of growing traffic. Abjoining Lake St. Clair, the banks on both shores become exceedingly low, with long marshy spots on which nothing is seen but small hillocks of mud and rushes, forming the dwellings of musk-rats. At two o'clock in the afternoon, the vessel came in sight of Detroit, a large and handsomely built city, situated on a gentle slope rising from the right bank of the river; and I stepped ashore in the United States.

In quitting the British possessions in America, a few words may be permitted. Imperfect as had been my means of observation, I think I am entitled to say, that in almost all quarters there prevails a very decided spirit of improvement—a steady progress towards a great and prosperous condition. The advance is very remarkable in Western Canada, which cannot, in point of general appearance, be distinguished from the neighbouring parts of the states of New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio; and it is my belief, that, aided by the various railways already opened or in course of construction, this portion of British America will not be a whit behind any of the more northern parts of the Union.

The Violets of Literature.

First among these sweet flowers of our literary spring-time, let the literature for children be named. What a moral the mere name conveys! The idea of books for children, written to suit their capacity and suit their natures, is a familiar idea to us; but less than a century since, it was a novelty, charming from its mouves, but uncertain of acceptance. Poetry sang its songs for them; and every mother that had heard of Watts, caught his sweet strains, and breathed them gently forth with the sacred words of "Our Father who art in heaven." Then came short and humble stories—rose leaves with dewdrops. And then, books, and finally magazines and papers—all for the children. How complete is the provision now! No literature is so full and perfect Its aim, indeed, is not wide, or its means vast; but taking its scope and purpose, we can find nothing better or fuller done. Sometimes there are injudicious tales—frightful things—that come back in cradle dreams and work up the black midnight into horrid phantoms; but bad books there are none.

But not alone for children is literature discharging its offices. Manifold is its work and multiplied its instruments. Here are the insane with their literature—the blind with their printing press. Victims of misfortune but sacred to Providence, they engage the sympathies of benevolent minds, and mercy reaches them through human hands. The sentiment of spirit, immortal spirit, is uppermost in every kind movement, and while paysical nature in their cases is cared for, the higher and nobler self is yet more tenderly regarded. What a comfort for their weary hours! What joy in this long, deep, silent sorrow! Earth can do but little for them, but how watchful is Heaven? The most beautiful things of earth are always connected with those of Heaven in some way or other. Had we no sky where would be the dew—the gorgeous cloud—the token-rainbow? It requires a firmament, with stars and sun, to give us these; and so if we had no Christanity, the afflicted children of life would languish on in bitter loneliness and share only the companionship of grief.

A few ascending steps in the scale of intellectual beneficence, and we see the poor brought within reach of literature. Not the parish visitor or the womanly angel of tenderness alone visits their lowly roofs. Wisdom and consolation go forth, hand in hand, to seek them, and with words of chosen love they are cheered in the midst of toil and privation. They are taught to rise—to gain strength by reconciliation with Providence; and a divine panapoly is furnished with which the battle of the world may be fought bravely and well. And thus it appears that there is a principle of extension in all goodness. None can confine it within narrow boundaries. Spread abroad it must by the laws of its own nature exalting, purifying, and blessing all.—N. Y. Times.

THE SOURCE OF THE GANGES.—The glacier, thickly studded with enormous loose rocks and earth, is about a mile in width, and extends upwards of many miles towards an immense mountain covered with perpetual snow down to its base, and its glittering summit piercing the very skies, rising 21,000 feet above the level of the sea. The chasm in the glacier, through which the sacred stream rushes forth into the light of day, is named the Cow's Mouth, and is held in the deepest reverence by all Hindoos; and the regions of eternal frost in its vicinity are the scenes of many of their most sacred mysteries. The Ganges enters the world no puny stream, but bursts forth from its icy womb a river thirty or forty yards in breadth, of great depth, and very rapid. Extensive as my travels since this day have been through these beautiful mountains, and amidst all the splendid scenery I have looked on, I can recal none so strikingly magnificent as the glacier of the Ganges.—Markham's Shooting in the Himalayas.

Seasonable Advice to Farmers.

During the past harvest it has been a very general remark that wheat sowed early, escaped most of the evils which befell, and in a great measure destroyed, that which was sown late. It has also been remarked that the Mediterranean wheat in a great measure escaped the ravages of insects. In view of these facts, we deem the following advice of the Ohio Cultivator seasonable and appropriate, and we commend it to the consideration of our farmers:

SOW YOUR WHEAT EARLY.—In view of the experience of late years with the weevil and Hessian fly, our farmers should be admonished of the importance of getting in their winter wheat early. It generally happens that the ravages of insects, as well as other plagues, have their day, and then for a time disappear. The surest protection against the wheat midge seems to be in a hardy variety of grain and an early ripening of the crop. For this purpose no variety of wheat has succeeded so well as the Mediterranean, both against the midge and fly—the latter on account of its strong stalk, by which it is kept from falling even when pierced by the little trooper. With early sowing and warm land the white blue stem may still maintain its popularity, but when it comes to a choice between dark wheat or none, the farmer will shrewdly prefer the Mediterranean, even though it sells for sixpence less on the bushel.

Culture of Cranberry.

The culture of this fruit is beginning to demand some attention in Maine, but the best method of doing it among us is yet a problem to be solved by many experiments and much observation. We have two facts to start upon. The first is this: The cranberry is indigenous in, that is to say a native of, our low lands, growing naturally in many places from Kittery to Calais, and from Haryswell to Madawnsca. The second fact is this: On whatever soil it may be placed, a good supply of water is necessary to its growth and productiveness.

There are two other facts that should be remembered in regard to the culture of this fruit, namely, it has two enemies which often destroy the crop. One of them is a worm which attacks it about flowering time, and eats it so badly as to prevent any fruits from forming. The other is frost. Later spring frosts often kill the flowers and prevent fruit from forming, and early fall frosts injure fruit that has escaped the other enemies.

One more fact should be remembered, namely, in Massachusetts, it has been found that flowing the land from the time of gathering, say the middle of October till May, and if the worm comes, flow again, prevent his operation, and also the effect of late spring frosts, and occasional flowing in the fall when early frosts are expected, will prevent the injury which such frosts do the fruit.

We do not mean that the water should be laid on so as to put the vines under water "forty fathom," as a sailor would say, but sufficiently to keep the vines out of the way of the fly that lays the egg from which the worm comes. Mr. Leland, of Sherborn, Mass., as reported in the transactions of the Massachusetts Agricultural Societies for 1853, says: "To destroy the worms the vines were kept under water from spring to the first of July." This destroyed all the worms. When the water was taken off the vines grew vigorously, for the (succeeding) year, and a handsome crop was the result.

Mr. Flint, of North Reading, says: Flow from October to May, or until vegetation starts, then lower it down to the top of the vines, and keep it on them thus until the spring frosts are over, then let the vines fairly out of the water till the vines are grown, say the middle of August, then draw it off for ripening and milking.

Cranberries are raised on moist upland, sandy loams, but wet boggy land where you can lay the water on and off at your pleasure, is the best chance for them.—Maine Farmer.

From Miner's American Bee-keeper's Manual.

Fall Management.

The months of October and November are the season when the state of the apiary will require particular attention. The hives should be examined, and those not containing honey enough for its occupants to sustain them during the winter, must be fed. An ordinary swarm or family of bees, will consume from 15 to 20 pounds of honey, from October to May. If the winter be very mild, more than this quantity will be required; but not in an ordinary season. The apiarian should be able from practice, to know at once on raising the hives, whether the above quantity exists in them or not. Hives that have been occupied several years, will be as heavy without any honey, as others that have been used but one season, with from five to ten pounds; therefore, an allowance must be made for the weight of old combs, and bee-bread.

FEEDING BEES.

When it is ascertained what families are short of honey, measures should at once be taken to supply them, since the cost of feeding a family, is not one-tenth of its value. The month of October, should be selected for this purpose. If but one or two families out of ten or twelve, require feeding, it is best to feed those alone; but if there be a general scarcity or lightness of the hives, I recommend feeding the whole in the apiary, at the same time. I am aware that feeding bees is generally looked upon as one of the greatest difficulties attending their management; and rather than attempt it, many bee-keepers suffer their bees to perish. The difficulty is just as great as it is to carry a pail of feed to the pig-pen, and no greater. Do not understand me, by this comparison, that bees will take honey from a trough, as a pig would take meal and water. It only requires a little difference in tendering it to them, however.

Here is a feeder, with a cover to float on the surface of the honey, when put into it. The box may be as large as one chooses to make it. For an apiary of from two to twelve hives, it should be about 18 inches long, six inches in diameter, and four in depth. The float is made by slitting it with a fine saw, as many times as possible, to within an inch of the end; and the board is half an inch thick. The other end is secured by a clamp or bracket nailed across it. Open the interstices with a knife, by trimming off the edges of the channels made by the saw; then put a couple of little knobs or nails at each end, in the centre, to serve to raise and lower it; and the feeder is completed.

If honey be fed, it should be such as comes from the W. I. Islands, which is sold at about 62½ cents per gallon, of 12 pounds; or by the cask at 50 cents. If it be thick and candied, it should be heated to the boiling point, and a little water added to thin it. The only thing except honey, that can properly be fed to bees, is syrup made of sugar. This answers every purpose of honey, and may be made to cost from four to five cents per pound only. Sugar that sells for 5 cents per pound, mixed with sufficient water to make the syrup of the consistence of honey, will reduce the cost of a pound of it to about four and a half cents; and from five to ten pounds, will generally be sufficient for the most destitute family; which, at most, will not cost over 45 cents. Thus it may be seen, that for this trifling sum, and perhaps often for half the amount, a family of bees may be kept from famine. The method of preparing syrup from sugar, is to heat it over a fire, until it begins to boil, when it should be taken off, and let it stand half an hour for the scum to settle, and harden, in order to skim it off with facility; and when cool, turn it into the feeder, and put on the float, and set it before your bees. At first, they will hardly notice it, but a few drops should be placed about the feeder, to call their attention to it, and when they once get a fair scent of it, a gallon will be taken away in a few hours, and stored in the cells. This way of feeding, is when the whole colony are fed, rather than select here and there a family. Mild weather in October should be selected for this purpose, and all the food should be furnished that they may require during the winter; and a family will carry enough honey, or syrup into the hive in a single day, if not disturbed by other families, to suffice for several months. If it be desired to feed a single family, it must be done secretly, that other families may not be attracted; and for this purpose a small feeder is necessary. Take a small tin pan, six inches long, four wide, and one or two deep. Make a very light, wooden float, and perforate it full of holes, with a pointed iron heated red-hot. Fill the feeder with honey, or syrup, and place it in the chamber of the hive, scattering a little around, to attract the bees to it; at the same time rapping on the hive to cause the bees to ascend; or place it below, and shut them in until it is emptied. Families may be fed at any time during the winter when the sun shines, by having a temporary, or permanent glass door to the chamber, or super of the hive, that will admit the sun's rays pretty freely upon the division board, upon which the small feeder filled with honey should be placed. I once fed a very small family in this way, that had not a drop of honey in the fall. It was no trouble. Every day that the sun shone, the bees were up in the super in great numbers, even in the coldest weather; and in the following spring they increased rapidly in numbers, and soon filled the hive.

Some people are in the habit of merely mixing a little water with the sugar, and not heating it at all, and in this condition feed it to the bees. This is downright ruin to them. In a few days the water evaporates, and the sugar hardens in the cells, so that it is of no more use to the bees than so much flint stone, to say nothing of its destroying every cell that it hardens in for any further use. I recommend honey to be fed in the fall, if convenient, and syrup in the spring.

CHEAP LIGHT.—With respect to the electric light, the problem appears to be solved in Paris. We mentioned, a short time since, that it was in use to illuminate the works of Napoleon Docks, which were carried on by night as well as by day; and the apparatus was so complete that, for four months, the light has been steadily burning. Economy not its least recommendation, for the cost night has not been more than 38*l.*, while 800 men were employed, gives 4½ centimes, less than a halfpenny per man.—Chamber's Journal for August.

From the Liberator.

Letter from Parker Pillsbury.

GLASGOW, Sept. 7th, 1854.

MY DEAR FRIEND GARRISON:

My letters are too far apart to entitle me to the distinction of 'a correspondent;' and, indeed, were they more numerous, I fear they were not of a character to make the case much better.

I have not travelled a great deal of late, and so have not gathered up much in the way of material for letters. There is one subject, however, on which I feel a painful necessity to speak; and that is, upon the character of many who come from our country to Great Britain, in the name of anti-slavery, and, professedly, upon anti-slavery work. And the first thing for me to say is, that the anti-slavery cause has no worse foes, none more dangerous, than are many of these, especially when they come, as most of them do, in the character of ministers. Here in Scotland, much that passes current for anti-slavery is only hatred of Garrisonism, (as anti-slavery is called.) and the giving of contributions to these clerical pretenders, to aid fugitives in Canada, Vigilance Committees in New York, and to the 'Chaplin Fund'—if any body knows what that is at the present time. Now, that the two former of these objects are really worthy, if presented and advocated in good faith, no one will deny. But that so many men, clergymen, colored and white, or that any men, need come to this country for funds for these objects, is not so clear—probably is not true at all. That the fugitives in Canada may in many cases be extremely destitute, is likely. But I saw more of poverty and wretchedness, physical, mental and moral, in the single city of Manchester, than can be found among all the fugitives in Canada together. And there, too, I saw most excellent women, working their fingers off, almost, to aid the fugitives, who yet are refusing to help the anti-slavery cause at all, because such men as Pennington and others of the pro-slavery American church, have represented that movement as downright infidelity. I have several times had men bring me the words of this Pennington and others, sometimes written down, sometimes printed in books, affirming and declaring this stale slander; and giving this as their only reason for aiding Vigilance Committees and Canada fugitives, instead of helping the anti-slavery cause; and it seems to me time that this state of things should be revealed and rebuked.

At the very time when Dr. Pennington was in the New York Presbytery, advocating and voting for a resolution to stifle discussion on slavery, his own brother and his brother's two young sons were being pursued by kidnappers; were seized by them, and, without trial, were dragged off to slavery!! And he still continues in that body. Why should he not? The body is worthy of him; he is worthy of such a body.

But he comes to Great Britain as an Abolitionist. He hears Garrison and the anti-slavery cause defamed and reviled, by clergymen and others. He not only listens in silence, he not only does not rebuke the calumny, but he even joins, I am told in the slander. He gives it fresh currency. His color and clerical connection help him. The pompus D.D. at the end of his name adds weight to his false witness. He prevents or perverts the gifts that would be cheerfully laid on the altar of humanity, by representing things to be anti-slavery which are not, and runs away with the sympathies of a generous people, who really wish well to the cause of the slave. And he goes home to sit, not silently, but approvingly, in the bosom and brotherhood of one of the most thoroughly pro-slavery bodies this world of wickedness can furnish; a brother, in full communion, with a band and body that hold kidnapping no crime!—that would even kidnap his own brother before his face!—a body whose Doctors of Divinity not only own and drive, but actually breed and sell slaves, as do farmers colts and calves; a body, one of whose proudest Doctors of Divinity has just boastingly declared, glorying in his shame, 'that every Presbyterian holds slaves in the South who is able, and every one holds as many as is possible or profitable'!!—a body, the members of which are selling the heathen they have made at home, by keeping them in ignorance, by statute law, of the Bible, and every book, and giving the money to send Bibles and missionaries to India and Madagascar—thus doing what the crucifiers of the Son of God did not dare to do, even in all their desperation of depravity; for though they could buy him of the betraying Judas for crucifixion, they did not dare put the price of him, when it was returned by the repenting Judas, into the treasury of the Lord, 'because it was the price of blood.' American Presbyterianism has no such scruples. Into such a connection goes Dr. Pennington in his own country, and coolly sits, speaks and acts, in all matters of church jurisprudence; and prays and preaches, baptizes and administers sacraments, and does all other spiritual and worship-performing requirements, to the full and complete satisfaction of his slave-breeding, cradle-robbing and kidnapping brethren of the Presbyterian faith. And this is a man to represent the anti-slavery cause of America in foreign lands;—and this the man to brand and blast with false and foul charges of Infidelity, and even worse impeachments, the only body of men and women in the world who are earnestly and honestly labouring, night and day, through evil, if not good report, to overthrow a slave system the most dreadful that ever saw the sun; and this, not only to free the slaves, but to rescue the fair name of Christianity from being made the sport and scoff, the merriment and mockery of all the vile and truth-hating, the tyrannical and time-serving minions and emissaries of Satan, throughout the earth.

Nor is Pennington alone; others have done similar things; and many times I have been pointed to their testimony, to show that 'Garrison is an infidel, and that the American Society is now reduced to a mere handful of infidels and atheists, contemners of the Sabbath, marriage and the ministry,' One of them used to melt his audience by declaring that he owed it all to the prayers of a pious, praying mother, that he himself had not been made a complete infidel, by the seductive wiles and influences of the Garrisonian abolitionists, while he laboured among them.

Now, not one of these men, so far as I can learn, ever pretended to be doing anything for the anti-slavery cause, by his mission abroad. It was all 'Fugitives in Canada,' or 'Vigilance Committees,' or 'Chaplain Funds,' or something that did not disturb the guilty slumbers of their church at home, or here, where that church is represented as the only true Christian church of the United States; is so represented by these very delegates themselves, who continue in it, and brand as infidels those who have gone out of it.

I have spoken of the condition of the fugitive in Canada, in contrast with the poor of Manchester; not that Manchester is worse than other English or American cities of similar size and business; nor yet because there is not need of aid for the poor fugitives, who, with only their bodies, and even these often sadly mutilated, have fled to Canada to be free. But there is no necessity that so many come to this country for that object. No important results have ever been reported of the labors of these men. There surely is no need that they represent such an object as anti-slavery, and thus pocket the gifts of those who really wish to aid the anti-slavery cause, and pervert them to other objects—and above all, there is no need that they join in the senseless lie, and even give it additional force by their clerical and pretended anti-slavery character, that the abolitionists are other than they pretend, and are only seeking the overthrow of the Church and the Bible, under a profession of anti-slavery.

What need there is of this mission at all, perhaps may be seen from the testimony of a witness who is himself a fugitive and a minister, and is now travelling in the United States. Recently, in Cincinnati, he said that there are now 35,000 fugitive slaves in Canada, mostly in a flourishing condition, owing to the high prices now paid for labor on the railways. In one town, he says there are seven hundred, who are rapidly acquiring property in land. In another town, there are 130 families of escaped slaves, who already own a tract of 9000 acres. And he further declares, that all the land now owned by fugitives in Canada West amounts to 25,000 acres. Similar testimonies have come from other sources. But these are not the facts that come to the British people through the men who are so fond of representing and asking aid for these Canada missions. One of these has now gone, and become a minister or missionary, in comfortable conditions, in the West Indies. Another, after a very successful tour in the way of collecting moneys, is soon to settle on a plantation also in the West Indies; and I could tell of others alike fortunate. How far such missions as theirs conduce to procuring parishes and plantations, on which to quarter, after a short service in such missions, is not for me, who do not know, to say. My testimony, however, is, that in the real anti-slavery work, the compensations are a very different affair; and, besides, the real abolitionist, whose heart and soul are wholly in his work, will not, it seems to me, readily turn aside to other and more seculiar objects. I think no pay, parish or plantation, could seduce him. Living and dying, he will be the slave's, and take his reward in his work, and after he has gone to his rest.

Yours, for such consecration

PARKER PILLSBURY.

The American Board and its Endorsers.

In every commercial community, the value of a good endorsement is well understood. It has saved many a tottering credit and bolstered up many a rotten character. It is not necessarily a bad thing in itself. The best names on 'Change would, probably, make no objections to having their paper voluntarily endorsed by almost anybody of a tolerable standing. Just as few of us would complain of our honest neighbour speaking a good word for our honesty and sufficiency. But it is not the best names that care the most about endorsements. They can stand alone. Probably neither Mr. Astor nor Mr. Girard ever thought the value of their notes of hand at all increased by having the name of anybody else on the back of them. The more anxious, as a general thing, and a man is to get endorsers and guarantees, the more doubtful is his standing. He must have somebody to lean upon, because he cannot stand by himself.

This application of the Christian doctrine, "Bear ye one another's burdens," is by no means confined to the "place where merchants most do congregate." It applies equally well to other Congregations, and to the burden of sin as well as to that of debt. Sinners of all grades are as desirous of finding some persons of a respectable standing to help them hold up the pack they are carrying on their shoulders, on their pilgrimmage from the City of Destruction, as failing traders are to get substantial persons to help them hold together their crumbling credit. And it behoves those to whom they apply to be as wary in the one case as the other; lest, peradventure, they enable a fradulent bankrupt to put off the evil day of his crash at the expense of honest tradesmen. In case any is taken in, in consequence of the faith given to the endorser, it is quite clear that the moral responsibility, to a yet greater extent than the pecuniary one, will rest with the guarantor of the bankrupt's character. And this, in matters of Morals as well as Money.

We have noticed more than once the action of the American Board of Commissioners for its Foreign Missions at its last Anniversary, and showed how the glorification of that campaign was hardly justified by its results. We refer our readers particularly to an editorial in the Standard of the 30th ultimo, for a full account of what the famous Treat Letter, a conformity with the recommendations of which has been claimed as such strong Anti-Slavery action, really amounts to. In lookingback at the antecedents of the Board, it is, perhaps, no wonder that even so small a favour as this should be thankfully received and put down in large figures on the credit side of its account. When we remember how the question of the admission of slaveholdimg Indians to the Mission Churches was put off from year to year; how the Missionaries had employed, and even owned, Slaves to assist them in tilling that portion of the Vineyard without censure; how insolently and in the true spirit of Slave-drivers they replied to the suggestions of the Secretary who had been sent to look into the matter; how they found no condemnation of Slavery by Christ, and a recognition and regulator of it by the Apostles; how they avowed that they had admitted Slaveholders to the Churches, and would again, and defied the Board to do anything about it; we may, perhaps, not be surprised that the Board should accept any concessions with gratitude. When we recollect how the Board, in 1848, virtually endorsed the action of the Missionaries, showing the distinction between Slavery and Slaveholding, and pointing out cases in which it was innocent and even laudible to hold slaves, and how they disclaimed the idea that slaveholding was incompatible with Church-membership; and how the Board, the next year, got down on their marrow-bones to the slaveholding Missionaries and their converts, and apologized for their interference with so delicate a question, and assured the world of "their undiminished confidence in those servants of Christ;" and how ingeniously they shirked the responsibility by taking the position that the Missionaries are not amenable to them, but to the Ecclesiastical Bodies with which they are connected, for their faith and conduct; in view of all these things, we think it rather surprising that the Board was not unanimous in its eagerness to co-operate with the Missionaries themselves in resenting an insulting interference with the affairs of their mission on the part of the Indian Nation.

It is certainly not at all strange that the Board should be looking about for good and sufficient endorsers in order to keep up its character in the eyes of the world. They have done this before, and had claimed, in 1845, Dr. Chalmers and the unanimous Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland as concurring with their position that slavery does not, in all cases, "involve individual guilt in such a manner that every person implicated in it can, on Scriptural grounds, be excluded from Christian fellowship!" This year, they have found great comfort in the words of encouragement held out to them (in ignorance, we are sure, of their history) by the Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir Edward North Buxton, and other English persons of distinction and of evangelical tendencies. And they have manifested their satisfaction by electing them Honorary Members of the Corporation. Nothing can be more natural than this wish of the Board to get the countenance of English Christians of distinction. Nothing can be more consistent with their own whole career of life and conversation. But, we apprehend, nothing could well be more inconsistent than for those to whom this compliment is offered to accept it, in the shape in which it offers itself to them.

If we do not much misremember the language held by the Earl of Shaftesbury at the meeting of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, at which he presided, in 1853, he alluded to the support which Slavery received from the public sentiment of the religious public of America. We cannot lay our hands on his speech at this moment, but we are confident, from our recollection of it, that he was deeply impressed with the guilt of the professing Christians of America in this behalf.

Now, we feel assured that the Earl of Shaftesbury and Sir Edward Buxton did not know when they said the things which incurred the approbation and gratitude of the A. B. C. F. M. that this body was verily the very embodiment of the Pro-Slavery Religious Public Opinion of America—Pro-Slavery Religion incarnated and standing up between the natural sympathies of simple Christians and their brethren in bonds. Yet their whole history proves this to be true. For successive years, at every Anniversary, the most important and exciting business was to smother or to postpone the consideration of its Relations with Slavery, which some impracticable and pragmatical member of Anti-Slavery tendencies would persist in bringing before it. The leading men, without exception, set their faces like flints against any agitation of the subject. When the could not hinder its being stirred, they have used all the craft and subtlety they were masters of to huddle it out of the way.

It has virtually proclaimed (see Report present to Meeting of 1845) that Slavery is no sin; that it is not the business of the Missionaries to meddle with it directly; and that the only hope of its Abolition is through "the influence of the Gospel, conveyed in a spirit of meekness and love!" Which is, being interpreted, conveyed so as not to disturb the equanimity or self-complacency of the masters. The Report which embodied these sentiments passed, not without opposition in debate, but without a dissenting voice when it came to a vote

We cannot recapitulate all the acts of the Board which identify it with the slaveholding and pro-slavery religion of the United States. Nor yet of the remarkable action of 1846, when the Board, with exemplary consistency, whatever may be thought of their Christian morality, refused to make polygamy a bar to admission to the Mission Churches. It is enough to say that the whole influence of the Board has been thrown into the pro-slavery scale, in every instance previous to this year, if its action this year be allowed to savour of any Anti-Slavery Grace. It is true, as we think Mr. Birney proved satisfactorily, that "the American Church is the Bulwark of American Slavery," and as the Rev. Albert Barnes affirmed, that there is no power out of the Church that could maintain Slavery, if the Church attacked it in earnest. In other words, Slavery is maintained by the wicked public sentiment of the Nation. The sentiment of the embodied Religious Sentiment of the Nation is the most fatal element of this Public Opinion. The American Board of Commissioners is the Representative Body, the Quintessence of this pro-slavery piety, which makes long prayers, kneeling on the prostrate bodies of three million slaves, and ready to receive their value into the treasury of the Lord. We trust that Lord Shaftesbury and Sir Edward Buxton, and the other distinguished Englishmen who have been invited to cast in their lot among them, will look well into the history of the Board for the last twenty years, will see what they have done and what they have left undone, before they consent to lend their voice and countenance to the men who have proved themselves, by their sins of omission and commission, to be the most insidious and virulent enemies that the American Slaves, and their friends, have had to encounter in their life-long conflict. Such an act would much more than counteract all that they can do at home for the slave, by encouraging the hearts and strengthening the hands of his deadliest enemies here.—Anti-Slavery Standard.

Slavery and the Tract Society.

To the Editor of The N. Y. Tribune:

SIR: A stale slander is revived in The Manchester Examiner (Eng.), and copied into your paper of yesterday, to the effect that J. J. Gurney's work on the "Habitual Exercise of Love to God" has been "mutilated" by an American Society. Please state the fact that the book was published here during the life of the author, and as the author prepared it for the press.

1. Does K. (who enjoys ample facilities for ascertaining the truth) mean to deny that the work in question was altered as charged by The Manchester Examiner?

2. Does he deny that it was altered in deference to the slaveholding interest and spirit in the United States?

3. Does he deny that such alterations was prompted and required by the American Tract Society?

4. Does he deny that it is the regular feature of that Society to exclude from its publications all matter likely to offend or alienate slaveholders?

5. Does he deny that alterations are made without giving the reader fair notice?

6. If he does not deny any of these points, what does his caveat amount to? Suppose Mr. Gurney were persuaded, or coaxed, or bullied, into his mutilating his own work in the manner asserted, would that circumstance efface the culpability of those who constrained him to do so.—Editor Tribune.

Our readers, and the public at large, will bear with us, we trust, if we occasionally remind them that we are as ever desirous of increasing our subscription list; and will also dispose of the remaining Shares in the Press at the small sum of £2, or $8, each. For the past few weeks we were West;—where we hope to be, as requested, in a few days again,—getting subscriptions, assisting at tea-meetings, &c., for the object, and also forming, as directed, Branches to the Provincial Union. An organization was effected at Chatham, and by a combination of the ladies, a tea-meeting came off in the Town Hall, after but two days' preparation, which reflected great credit on the citizens. Gratifying remarks were made by Miss Simpson and Mr. H. C. Jackson. At Brantford, to which allusion has been made, an organization was made, and a tea-meeting held previously, addressed by Messrs. Wilkinson, Corry, and others,—the citizens taking hold of the matter in a manner worthy of them, and we have the fullest assurance from the officers and members of the Female Society, that the "Branch" shall be attended to. Immediately after the Brantford meeting, a society was formed in London, which numbers over 60 members of both sexes, and on the 20th, their tea-meeting was held in the Hall of the Mechanics' Institute. The Londoners had been preparing for some days, so that their proceedings were on a more elaborate scale than those at the other places mentioned. The presence of the City Band and a well-prepared corps of influential speakers—arrangements impossible in the former meetings, from the brief time to work,—gave interest to the gathering. The speeches of the Revds. Messrs. Dent, Basfield, Steward, and Clarke, were earnestly listened to by the large audience, the one by Mr. Clark being thought, without disparagement to others, to be particularly effective. The ladies and gentlemen of London who got up the tea, were not behind their friends in Brantford and Chatham, in zeal for the success of the paper, and the permanency of the Union, which is regarded by all as the best organization ever attempted,—as anti-caste, anti-slavery, and thoroughly national in its spirit and design. We are fully impressed with the importance of this Union to British subjects of every class, and though it may work its way slowly, it will, nevertheless, surely commend itself to the people in the end. Of tea-meetings, too, we would remark, that though open to objections as conducted, when they are got up for no higher purpose than to "see and be seen," when accompanied with music, good speeches on excellent subjects, and managed by efficient persons, they form public entainments for promoting a good understanding among the people. REMARKS.

In the absence of replies to the questions propounded by "Many Inquirers," we would say that a highly interesting correspondence, on the subject of the "Dawn Institute," by the Rev. Dr. Burns, of this city, has just reached us, through the "Canadian Free Press," and we shall give place to it, and also to the remarks of the Editor in our next.

To all whom it may concern.

We are repeatedly questioned respecting the amount of foreign "aid and comfort" we have received for this paper; and well-wishers at home, thinking that our subscription and contribution list abroad, have attained to a great size, from the large amount of funds and long list of names we have published as collected by Mr. Ward, are disposed to work but indifferently here, though entertaining the best feelings towards it. Another and different class, ask us out of sheer curiosity, in season and out of season, the same question,—a third class have settled the point, and are acting accordingly.

As a matter of policy we should probably be silent on this subject; but as a matter of personal convenience, and in order to save some busy-bodies a deal of trouble, we have concluded to gratify all concerned.

We have English exchanges, but we have not one English or other foreign subscriber, nor has one copper ever been collected abroad or been sent to America for this paper, to the best of our knowledge, so that to the people of Canada and the few subscribers we have in the States, is the paper indebted alone for its support.

To one class of its enemies, this intelligence is no doubt gratifying—not so to another class, the busy-bodies referred to.

By them, their intention of stopping our "English" supply will be seen to be useless, particularly the Rev. gentleman who has "already" sent copies of the paper, and "letters," to the parties who have "subscribed so liberally to Mr. Ward for the paper." We have never heard of such persons.

BABY SHOW IN OHIO.—At the State Agricultural Fair, held at Springfield, Ohio, recently, one hundred and twenty-seven babies were offered as candidates for valuable prizes. A tent was appropriated for their use, and that of those having charge of the innocents. Ten women and six men were appointed judges The babies came from almost everywhere. Several counties, including Hamilton of Ohio, were well represented; and then there were babies from Indiana, Louisiana, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. We would publish the names, says one writer, but for the serious protests of the parents, who do not desire to let the world know that their babies entered for the prizes and did not get it. The judges, after a long session, awarded the prizes as follows:

First prize, a splendid service of silver plate, including a large salver, to the daughter of William Romner, of Vienna, Clark County, aged 10 months.

Second prize, a service of silver plate, to the son of Wm. McDowell, of Fulton, Hamilton Co., Ohio, aged 13 months.

Third prize, a plain service of silver, to the daughter of Mr. A. Canon, of Philadelphia.

Letters are said to have been received from Horace Greely, Fanny Fern and Lucretia Mott. The latter objected that coloured children were not admitted.

☞ It is remarkable that all the babies who received the prizes had, according to the report, no mothers.—Ed. Standard.

Yes, quite right, to admit black babies; but that would have been the last of them. At Agricultural Exhibitions and the like, in the States, the contributions of colored persons seldom get more than a passing notice; and when the prejudice extends to fruits and flowers, it is not probable that black babies would be viewed except as subjects for mirth. A case of the kind occurred at a Horticultural Exhibition, a few years since, in Pennsylvania. A colored man, having some very fine grapes, presented them for competition, and every one said they were the best there; but when the time for awarding premiums came, the judges decided to give none for grapes, "as the season had been so wet," a miserable subterfuge to avoid giving precedence to a colored man, even in so small a matter. The meanness of the thing was apparent, for the unfavorableness of the season furnished the proper time for testing skill. C.

Sebastopol.

The news received last week of the fall of Sebastopol, turns out to be untrue, and has been traced to the Paris Bourse. The reports of the battle of Alma, however, are confirmed by later arrivals; and as Sebastopol is now completely invested, there is no doubt that before many days official news of its capture will have arrived.

The "Dawn Institute."

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR MADAM.—We hear a great deal about this Institute, which has excited our curiosity so much, that we are impelled, not for mere selfish satisfaction, but by a sense of duty, to present a few interrogations, desiring at the same time that some friend in possession of the necessary information may respond! Will some one be so kind? Who founded the "Dawn Institute"? Where were means procured? What was the object of that Institute? Is it carrying out the desired aim? Who were appointed to conduct, or take charge of it? Did they do justice to a confiding Public, or did they betray their trust? To whom does that Institution belong? Whose possession is it now in? What is it worth? How much land belongs to it? What improvements are there upon the premises? Who receives the proceeds of the farm—the various incomes at present? To what purpose are such incomes applied? How many students now in attendance? How many teachers employed? The salary of each? Has the Institution been progressing rapidly or has it receded since its founding? What is to be expected of its progress in the future? Shall parents point their laughing boys and smiling girls to that Institution, and tell them to make the preparatory steps, requisite to an entrance; for there must your collegiate career be spent, and from there must you receive your diplomas? Do the present affairs present any cheering or encouraging features to aspiring youths?

"SOMETHING NEW UNDER THE SUN."

Having a little more blank upon this sheet, and also having become quite economical in many things—we wish to present a few other queries:—What gives persons the best right to emmigrate to, and settle in, a country that is already peopled? Can a nation make, ex post facto laws to deprive persons of citizenship, who become subjects according to her then established laws, without dishonoring herself? Does not birth in a country, give a person equitable citizenship in that country in which he was born? Then, when the colored people are deprived of a "permanent home in Canada," what is to become of those who were born in Canada? Will they be seperated as the "children of the south," from their grey-haired mothers and fathers, or will they become "exiles upon their native soil," and have to leave Canada too? What then gives right to citizenship? Does brightness of complexion give a better right than birth, and is all law, both human and divine, subservient to caste? Will the Commercial Advertiser, Chatham Planet, or other advocates of Mr. Larwill, answer us, in accordance with equity?

Sir J. Franklin Starved to Death.

LETTER FROM DR. RAE.

MONTREAL, Oct. 21st, 1854.

The Herald of this morning has the following:—"In our extra of yesterday evening we informed the public that a rumor was current that the remains of Sir John Franklin and his crew, and their ships had been discovered, we immediately dispatched a special messenger to the Hudson Bay Company's House at Lachine, and through the kindness of the Governor, Sir George Simpson, are enabled to lay before our readers the following outline of a dispatch received by him yesterday, from Dr. Rae, who has been absent on the coast since the 1st of the month of June, 1853, and returned to York Factory on the 28th of August last, from whence he forwarded letters by express to Sir George Simpson, via Red River settlement. After briefly noticing the result of his own expedition and the difficulties with which they had to contend, he proceeded to state that from the Esquimaux he had obtained certain information of the fate of Sir John Franklin's party, who had been starved to death after the loss of their ships which were crushed in the ice, and while making their way south to the great Fish River, near the outlet of which a party of whites died, leaving accounts of their sufferings in the mutilated corpses of some who had evidently furnished food to their unfortunate companions. This information, although not derived from the Esquimaux who had communicated with the whites and had found their remains, came from another band who had obtained the details from them. No doubt is left of the truth of the report, as the natives had in their possession various articles of European manufacture which had been in the possession of the whites; among these are silver spoons, forks, &c., on one of which is engraved "Sir John Franklin, K.C. B." while others have crests on them which identify the owners as having belonged to the ill-fated expedition. Drawings of some of them have been sent down. This fearful tragedy must have occurred as long ago as the spring of 1850.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—The Report of the Directors at the meeting last Friday, Sept. 27th, present the following facts:—There are now 240 miles open to traffic. The Railway may be said to be entirely open throughout to traffic since 27th January only, and the gross receipts from that date to July 31st amounted to £150, 105. 11s. 8d. currency, which, less working expenses, £67,310 7s. 8d., leaving a nett revenue of £82,795 4s applicable to payment of interest on bonds and debentures, and also to a dividend of 3 per cent. upon the shares for the before mentioned 6 months. The traffic on this line is rapidly increasing both for local and through business, as far as passengers are concerned. The through goods traffic from the State of New York to the State of Michigan can hardly experience much alteration until the winter prevents the navigation of Lake Erie. The gradual augmentation of traffic is shown by recent returns. For the week ending—

Sept. 8,	£1931	or £20 10s	per mile per week.
" 15,	6141	" 25 12s	"
" 23,	7439	" 30 18s	"
" 29,	8541	" 35 12s	"

Exclusive of an extra traffic during the last mentioned week, owing to the Agricultural Exhibition at London, C. W., which amounted to £3,320 or £13 8s per mile per week, and for the current week not yet expired the receipts for passengers and freight will exceed £10,000.—Reform Banner.

A Maniac at Large.

On Wednesday evening, a strange looking personage was found wandering on the Guelph road near the first toll gate, and brought into the village; an able-bodied man, apparently about 52 years of age, with no clothing but a shirt, trousers, and boots. He could give no account of himself,—did not even know his own name. He was in a famishing condition, and devoured whatever food was given him. Although quite peaceable in his demeanour while here, there were marks on his wrists and ankles where he had been bound with ropes. He was kept all night, and allowed to wander away on Thursday morning. It seems evident the man had escaped from confinement, and although he appeared quite harmless, may be subject to intervals of a condition in which he becomes dangerous to himself and others. We much question the propriety of permitting such a person to go at large. He ought to have been sent to the county gaol and advertised.—Fergus Freeholder.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—A case of some interest to the travelling public was tried at Brantford, before Chief Justice Robinson. We copy from a local paper:—

Dr. Bowie, vs. The Buffalo, Brantford, and Goderich Railway. This was an action brought by the Plaintiff against the company as Common Carriers, for the loss of Goods. The defence set up was, that the goods had arrived at the place of destination, and were then consumed by fire, and that therefore the company was not liable for them as Common Carriers. The learned Judge in charging the Jury, said that the Plaintiff had succeeded in proving his case, so as to entitle him to recover, and that Defendants were guilty of negligence in not giving the Plaintiff notice after the arrival of the goods, which was part of their duty as common carriers. Verdict for Plaintiff, £69 3s. damages."—North American.

HER MAJESTY.—This steamer, built by Mr. Denney of Dumbarton, on the Clyde, for Captain Thomas Dick, has now been out between eighty and ninety days, on her voyage to Quebec, and we grieve to say that there are no hopes of her safety. She was built for the Niagara and Toronto route, nearly 200 feet long and between 300 and 400 tons burthen. She was of iron, of the strongest construction, and of that model which is considered to combine the greatest speed with safety. Her builder went in her as far as Cork, and describes her as having behaved well during the passage. She had a crew of twenty on board, picked men, and Mr. Denny will not believe that the greatest storm which ever blew caused her to founder; he thinks that she must have been destroyed by fire. She had coal for 13 days consumption on board, which would have brought her to Newfoundland, if not to Quebec. We are happy to find that the enterprising owners was fully insured and suffers no loss, save of the services of the vessel, which are required on the route.—Globe.

Occurrences at Niagara Falls.—The Niagara Falls Gazette furnishes the following:—During the latter part of last week, the clothing of three boys was discovered on the Canada bank of the river, near the water, opposite the "Niagara Falls pleasure grounds." It is supposed that the boys, while bathing, were drowned. Appearances indicate that the garments belonged to poor Irish lads. A German in the employ of the Central Railroad, was killed on Tuesday afternoon, between the Falls and suspension bridge, by being run over by a train on the Canandaigua Road. His own carelessness was the cause of the accident.

Farmers' Joint Stock Bank.—Mr. W. B. Phipps, the manager of this Bank, in a communication to the Globe of yesterday, says:—

I have been connected with the Bank for eighteen years, twelve under the old company and six under the new, and during that long period there never has been a single business hour that a person has not been at our counter prepared to redeem the notes in gold or silver. And now our office, in the most central and conspicuous place in Toronto, opposite the Post Office, is open from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m., two hours longer than the other Banks for the same purpose. Our notes are redeemed in Wall street upon the same terms as all other Canadian money, and at Buffalo upon more favorable ones.

Provincial Parliament.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Quebec, October 25.

Last night the Clergy Reserves Bill, on the motion for its second reading, was discussed till midnight. A good deal of acrimony was displayed, but there was nothing new in the arguments used.

Mr. Gamble moved an amendment to the effect, that to secularize the Reserves would be a violation of public faith, and acquired rights by the Churches of England and Scotland, and other denominations, and that the bill ought to be rejected.

This montion only found twelve supporters, viz:—Bowes, Crawford, Gamble, Larwill, Murney, O'Farrell, Powell, Rhodes, Robinson, Shaw, Stevenson, and Yielding.

Mr. Powell's amendment, to refer the question to the people for a direct vote, was declared to be out of order, the rules of the House not providing for such a motion.

The main motion for the second reading was then carried.

As the yeas were called, the hour was exactly midnight, and the gas went out.

Mr. Murney said that was a bad omen!

It was proposed to go into committee on Friday next, provided the Attorney-General East did not desire to go on with the seignorial bill.

To-night, the Attorney-General West introduced a bill to amend the Hamilton and Toronto Railroad Company's Charter.

On motion of Mr. Bureau, a committee was appointed on the expediency of establishing the Banks founded on farming stock security.

Timothy Brodeur took the oath and seat.

The House is discussing a motion of Mr. Merritt, for a committee on Banking, as the report leaves.

Remarkable Fact.—The report of the N. Y. Prison Association states that of 1200 complaints examined and nearly 2000 persons spoken to in our city prisons during six months, only one was recognised, who had up to his arrest, abstained entirely from intoxication drink. Will not those people who think slightly of temperance efforts make a note of this? And will they point out a cheaper or more effective way of arresting crime and misery?—N. Y. Organ.

By Telegraph.

Arrival of the Washington.

New York, Oct. 25, 1854.

The Washington arrived this morning from Liverpool.

No official despatches have been published relative to the battle of Alma.

The English loss was 2,000 men killed and wounded.

Marshal St. Arnaud died from natural causes. Gen. Canrobert is the chief of the French forces

After the battle of Alma, the Russians burnt all the villages which they passed through in their flight. They left about six hundred wounded behind them.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 9.

The allies had made no attack on Sebastopol up to the 3rd. They still occupied Balaklava.

The bombardment of Sebastopol began on the 5th October.

The Russians had sunk 7 ships of the line at the mouth of the harbor.

Sebastopol was completely invested, and a body of 500 French and Turks was to have left Varna on the 28th.

One hundred Russians, when escorting a convoy of munitions of war, had been taken prisoners; Menschikoff himself narrowly escaped capture.

Paris, Tuesday.

A despatch from Vienna states that a despatch from Menschikoff, received that day, announces that the allies had established themselves at Balaklava and Cape Chersonese, and that no attack had been made on Sebastopol up to October 3rd.

Bucharest, Oct. 5.

6,000 of the allies had taken possession of Cape Chersonese. There was a great concentration of Turkish troops at Matchin. Omar Pacha begins his operations against the Russians immediately.

Berlin, Tuesday.

According to official despatches, no attack upon Sebastopol had taken place up to the 30th ultimo.

The garrison of Anapa, before reported, burned by the Russians, 15,000 strong, was on the way to Sebastopol. By telegraph from Vienna, Monday evening: On the 29th of September, between 120 and 130 heavy guns were disembarked at Balaklava.

Memel has been nearly destroyed by fire.

The Niagara arrived out on the 6th and the Pacific on the 11th.

Additional by the Washington.

The official report of the battle of the Alma by Lord Raglan was published on the 9th. The struggle was a desperate one, and the loss of the British army was 26 officers, 10 sergeants, 10 drummers, and 306 rank and file killed; 73 officers, and 95 serjeants, 17 drummers, 1,427 rank and file wounded, and 18 missing.

The Russians were completely routed.

Private despatches mention that great demoralization prevailed in Sebastopol.

The allies have destroyed an aqueduct which supplied the fortress.

Eight thousand cavalry had been landed in the Crimea.

The inhabitants of Odessa have given a pledge that they would burn the place rather than allow it to fall into the hands of the Allies.

After the battle of the Alma the carriage of Menschikoff was taken, together with his private correspondence and 50,000 francs, by the French.

The loss by the burning of Memel is stated at £2,000,000 sterling.

From Poland a great movement is in operation along the whole line.

The Russian guard were marching towards Warsaw.

The troops of the Kingdom of Poland were directed on the Austrian frontier.

Arrival of the Niagara.

Halifax, Oct. 25.

The steamer Niagara, from Liverpool, 17th, arrived at this port at an early hour this morning. Her advices are three days later than those received by the Washington.

The steamer Cleopatra, from Quebec, arrived out on the 12th instant, with the intelligence of the loss of the Artic, the announcement of which created a profound sensation.

The steamer Arabia was telegraphed off Holyhead on Saturday, 14th.

THE WAR.

Although the English papers are full of interesting details of operations on the Crimea, they contain nothing new of a decisive character.

The besiegers had up to the latest date made no impression on Sebastopol, although they had closely invested it on the south and east, and their guns were playing on the walls.

Menschikoff held the field in the north, and was in daily expectation of being joined by Osten Sacken and Gortschakoff, who were at Perekop.

It is confirmed that Menschikoff had sunk 7 line of battle ships at the entrance of Sebastopol, as a blockade to the harbor.

Energetic notes from France and England have caused Prussia to express a willingness to act with Austria.

Details of Niagara's News.

Boston, Oct. 26.

The Niagara reached her dock at 11 o'clock this morning.

It is supposed that the siege artillery of the allies was mounted on batteries around Sebastopol on the 4th.

The place was completely invested on the south side.

All the allied reserves had left Varna for the Crimea.

Two French and one English regiment from Malta occupied Pirands.

The allies' trenches were within 1,600 yards of the wall, and all ready. They mounted fifty guns.

Osten-Sacken had been at Peolkupe since the 2nd, and expected to join his force with Menschikoff by the 14th.

The Paris Moniteur estimates the Russian force in the Crimea at 85,000; and the allies 90,000, including seamen.

The Turks bayoneted all the wounded Russians.

On the death of Marshal St. Arnaud, Lord Raglan took the chief command of the allied army.

Gen. Canrobert is considered energetic and adventurous, but as a tactician, doubtful.

It is almost certain that no operations will now be attempted in the Baltic.

ASIA.

Schamyl has been defeated by Alderonitoff, who again threatens Kars.

Paris, Friday.

A private telegraph despatch from Vienna, 14th, announces that according to a despatch from Lord Raglan, that the siege works were sufficiently advanced that they could open their fires on the 15th.

The recent famous lie about the fall of Sebastopol is traced to the Paris Bourse, and the Emperor has ordered an investigation, and says he will punish with the utmost serverity the guilty parties.

The liabilities of James McHenry & Co. are called £500,000.

Russian Fleet shut up in Sebastopol.—17 ships of the line, 4 frigates, 5 corvettes or brigs, 82 vessels, and 12 steamers—in all 108 sail, mounting 2200 guns of every description. This certainly is an imposing force. It is well commanded. The crews are expert at gunnery, and gifted with that passive courage peculiar to Russian soldiers, who die at their post. Nevertheless, in no respect can the Russian naval force be compared with the combined squadron in the Black Sea.

Trustees and Directors

Elected to serve during the present year:—
W. J. MACDONELL,—President,
P. J. O'NEILL,—Vice-President.
Messrs. S. G. LYNN, P FOY, & Dr. HAYES, BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA, SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

Published Weekly, at $2 a Year.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The Arts, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of Mechanical Industry, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. The Markets will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. The Children will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

NOTICE.

The undersigned begs to inform the public generally, that he is prepared to furnish the following articles at the wholesale and retail

AXE HANDLES, PICK HANDLES,

CONSTITUTION & BY-LAWS

OF THE

VICTORIA REFORM BENEVOLENT SOCIETY

OF THE

TOWN OF CHATHAM,

For Social Relief.

Organized, January 3, 1853.

ARTICLE I

Title of Society.—Candidates for Membership.

SECTION 1. This Society shall be known and distinguished by the name of "THE VICTORIA REFORM SOCIETY OF CHATHAM, FOR SOCIAL RELIEF."

SEC. 2. It shall not be lawful at any time to admit into the Society any person or persons who are addicted to intoxication, or have a plurality of living husbands.

SEC. 3. No person shall be admitted a member of this Society, who shall be under the age of sixteen years, or over forty-five, or who shall keep a brothel, or who is affected with any disorder or sickness, inconsistent with ordinary health, or may, in all probability become a charge to the Society.

SEC. 4. Every person making application for membership, must be recommended by a member of the Society, at any one of the meetings, and the name or names of such persons shall be handed over to the Board of Directors, to any meeting, when she shall be balloted for, (provided that her balloting shall not be contrary to any of the articles of the society) and if a majority of two-thirds of the members present shall vote in her favor, she shall be duly elected.

SEC. 5. Any person so approved of, shall not be considered a member until she shall come forward within three months from the date of her election, sign the Constitution, and pay in the initiation fee. But previous to such candidate signing the Constitution, if any member shall state to the Society what a majority of the members present deem a sufficient objection, she shall not be admitted.

SEC. 6. Whenever the Board of Directors shall report unfavorably on the case of a candidate for membership, it shall be their duty to state their reasons thereof—provided a motion to this effect is offered, and carried by a majority of the members then present.

SEC. 7. Each candidate for membership shall, before she signs the Constitution, assent to the following questions:—

Quest. 1. Will you, Mrs. J. A. O., promise to demean yourself as a faithful and orderly member of this Society?

Quest. 2. Will you keep its secrets inviolably, endeavor to increase its members, and extend its influence, by all just and honorable means?

Quest. 3. Will you act with honesty and impartiality in whatever office or station to which you may be elected in this Society?

ARTICLE II.

Of Initiation Fees and Weekly Dues.

SECTION 1. Each member, on her admission, shall pay to the Society, as an initiation fee, such a sum as they shall from time to time think proper to fix upon; and the further sum of seven pence half-penny monthly.

SEC. 2. A member may pay up her dues at any regular meeting; but if she neglects to do so for the space of six months, and shall after that time receive two special notices from the Secretary, her name shall be taken from the books of the Society.

ARTICLE III.

Benefits.

SECTION 1. Each member shall, at the time of signing the Constitution, or as soon after as is convenient, receive a certificate of her membership, signed by the President and Secretary.

SEC. 2. No member shall be entitled to receive relief from this Society, until she has been a member one year, and has paid up all her dues; then, if sickness should prevent her from following her profession, trade, or usual employment, and she shall have been sick one week, she shall receive Five Shillings per week, for the space of three months, provided that her sickness shall continue so long: after the expiration of said three months, she shall receive two shillings and six pence per week, for the further space of three months; and if her sickness should still continue, the Society may grant her such a sum weekly, as they may think proper, the state of the funds being considered.

SEC. 3. If any person, having been a member of this Society, for two years, and paid up all her dues for that time, should be removed by death, it shall be the duty of this Society to inter her decently in the burial ground of her profession; and for this purpose, a sum of money not exceeding Three Pounds Fifteen Shillings, shall be constitutionally drawn from the funds of the Society, to be appropriated to that purpose.

ARTICLE IV.

Officers.

SECTION 1. The officers of this Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary and Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, a Board of Directors, consisting of thirteen members and a Clergyman.

SEC. 2. The election of officers shall be held annually on the first Monday in February; the candidates must be permanent residents of the Town of Chatham.

SEC. 3. There shall be a Committee of Nomination, consisting of five persons appointed at least six weeks previous to the election; it shall be the duty of said Committee to report at the next meeting ensuing that of their appointment, two several lists of candidates for the several offices of the Society, for the ensuing year: this Committee shall be selected from among the members of the Society.

SEC. 4. If there should occur an equality of votes for two candidates for the same office, the President shall in such case, designate the person elected.

SEC. 5. In case of a vacancy in any of the offices of the Society, occasioned by death, resignation, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the President, on the fact being made known to her, to call a meeting of the Society, as soon as it is convenient, for the purpose of filling the vacancy, by an election, to be conducted in the same manner as that of the regular election.

ARTICLE V.

The Duty of the President and Vice-President.

SECTION 1. The President shall preserve order and decorum in the meetings of the Society; decide on the constitutionality of all motions offered; sign all draughts upon the Treasurer, when constitutionally made out. She shall have power to call extra meetings, when she may think it expedient, or at the request of five members of the Society; and perform all other duties appertaining to her office as President.

SEC. 2. The Vice-President shall exercise the powers and duties of the President in her absence.

ARTICLE VI.

The Secretaries.

SECTION 1. The Secretaries shall receive all dues and fees paid in at the regular and extra meetings of the Society, and deposit the same with the Treasurer, always taking her receipt. She shall keep the following books, viz: First, a book containing the Bye-laws of the Society, written in a plain hand to which each member, on being admitted shall signs her name; second, a book containing an account with each member, giving credit for all payment of dues, with the date of each payment annexed thereto; third, a roll book, with a list of the members in regular columns, in which credit shall be given for payments made; fourth, a minute book, containing a fair and correct account of the transactions of each meeting; fifth, an account with the Treasurer, charging her with all monies, and giving credit for all draughts upon the Treasurer, constitutionally authorized; her books shall determine all disputes that may arise respecting the payment of dues; she shall read the Minutes of the former meeting of the Society; also, of the Board of Directors; also, reports of Sub-committees; and give two special notices to each member whose arrears shall be over six months.

SEC. 2. The Assistant Secretary shall give notice of all Special Meetings of the Society, and call over the roll at each regular meeting of the Board of Directors, and minute down the proceedings thereof; and perform the duties of the Secretary in the meetings of the Society during her absence.

ARTICLE VII.

The Treasurer.

SECTION 1. The Treasurer shall, previous to entering on the duties of her office, give a good and sufficient security for the faithful performance of her trust, in a bond to the President and Board of Directors, in such a sum as the Board of Directors shall demand; which bond shall be deposited with the President, she giving a receipt to the Board of Directors for the same. The Treasurer shall receive all monies collected for the Society; for which she shall give her receipts to the Secretary; she shall pay all draughts made upon her, on behalf of the Society, which draughts must be signed by the President of the Board of Directors, the President and Secretary, provided such draughts shall not exceed the sum of fifteen dollars, unless it is expressly authorized by a majority of the Society, at some extra meeting called for that purpose; she shall keep an exact account with the Society, giving credit for all monies received and charging all draughts paid by her, which book shall be opened to the inspection of the Board of Directors, or any Committee that may be appointed for that purpose. She shall report every three months the amount of money in the Treasury. She shall collect all interests, dividends on stock, and all other proceeds arising from the disposition of the funds of the Society; all bills, bonds and papers that may in any way appertain to the department of the Treasurer, shall remain in her custody.

ARTICLE VIII.

Of the Board of Directors.

SECTION 1. The Board of Directors, of whom seven members present shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of ordinary business, shall meet as often and at such times as they shall think proper, or their business shall require, which shall be at least once a month; they shall repeat at each meeting of the Society, their Minutes and decision on the case of candidates for membership; they shall see that all members entitled to benefits are promptly assisted, and that no frauds are practised on the Society; they shall recommend to the Society the best mode to invest the surplus funds of the Society. All drafts for benefits shall emanate from the Board of Directors, to which their President shall sign her name; it shall be their peculiar province, to watch over the interests of the Society and its money concerns; to recommend such regulations as to counteract all attempts to impose on the Society.

SEC. 2. The Board of Directors shall keep a book, in which they shall take receipts from the persons to whom they administered benefits; they shall also report to the society, at each regular meeting, the number of sick members, that receive benefits.

ARTICLE IX.

Of the Meetings.

SECTION 1. Regular meetings of this Society shall be held in the afternoon of the first Monday in each month.

SEC. 2. Twenty members shall be necessary to form a quorum, for the purpose of taking a vote on ordinary business; but twelve members being present, shall be a number sufficient to commence the business of a Regular meeting.

ARTICLE X.

Of Expelling Members.

SECTION 1. If any member shall apply for relief to this Society, or shall receive benefits, when she was able to follow her profession, trade or occupation, or did actually follow the same, upon due proof thereof, to the Board of Directors, and their report made thereon to the Society, she shall be expelled.

SEC. 2. If any member shall be convicted in a Court of Justice, of any crime or misdemeanor, tending to injure the character of the Society, upon due proof thereof, to the Board of Directors, and their report made thereon to the Society, she shall be expelled.

SEC. 3. If any member shall refuse to come to order in the meetings of the Society, when so ordered, three times by the President or chair, she shall (if a vote passes to this effect,) be fined a sum not less than fifteen shillings; and if she shall refuse to pay such fine, within a reasonable time, she shall be expelled: Provided always, that no member, shall be expelled in any other manner, than by a vote taken at an extra meeting, called especially to consider her case; excepting the case, wherein a member shall have been twice specially notified by the Secretary to pay up her arrears over six months, and refuses to do so.

ARTICLE XI.

Chaplain.

SECTION 1. The Chaplain shall visit sick members, and give such admonition or consolation as he may think necessary, and attend at the funerals of deceased members of the Society, and inter them decently.

BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. Each member when speaking, shall stand and address the Chair, and shall not speak more than three times on any subject, unless called on by the President, or a majority of the members present.

SEC. 2. If any member shall be so imprudent as to wrangle during the time of meeting, they shall be dismissed, and shall not be permitted to meet again until proper satisfaction be given to the Board of Directors.

SEC. 3. Should any member refuse to serve in any office of the Society, after she has given her consent, and is legally elected, she shall forfeit and pay the sum of five shillings.

SEC. 4. No member of this Society shall be entitled to any relief, on account of any disease that she has imprudently brought upon herself.

SEC. 5. Any who shall be guilty of calling any other member of the Society by any improper name or names, or who shall refuse to pay her just and lawful debts, or who shall go to law with any of the members of this Society, without first complaining to the Society; for such violation, she shall forfeit, for the use of this Society, the sum of One pound five shillings, or forfeit her standing in this Society.

SEC. 6. No person or persons shall be permitted to leave the house in time of meeting on business, without permission from the President, under a less fine than seven pence half-penny.

SEC. 7. If any member by non-attendance at any of the stated meetings shall cause the book to be opened again, to receive her dues, she shall be fined three pence half-penny.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. All motions for By-laws, their repeal or amendment, shall be presented to the Society, and handed over to the Board of Directors in writing, who shall report their opinion thereon to the Society, as soon as opportunity serves, not to go over one month.

SEC. 2. No By-laws shall be passed, repealed or amended, except three-fourths of the members present shall vote for the same, and that a special meeting, called expressly for the same, and that at least one month's previous notice of the same shall be given.

SEC. 3. It shall be lawful for the Society to pass any motion contrary to these By-laws not repugnant to the plain letter of this Constitution, to keep order at any meeting for the evening while they are together.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION. 1. In case of complaint being made to the President, of the immoral conduct of any member, she shall appoint a committee of five persons, to try the accused person, and the accused and accuser shall be brought face to face, and in case of her being found, guilty, she shall for the first offence be reproved by the President; for the second offence she shall pay a fine of fifteen shillings, and for the third offence she shall be expelled from the Society.

ARTICLE. IV.

SECTION 1. In order to secure the continuance of this Society, we are determined to support it while twelve persons remain as members, who will pay in their regular dues, and conform to the rules and regulations of the Society.

SEC. 2. Members of the Society moving from Chatham, within the Province, shall be entitled to half their funds remaining, provided always, that there are no outstanding dues.

SECT. 3. To further promote the object of this Society, a Sewing circle shall be formed in connection therewith.

H. CORDELIA HANDSBROW, President.
MRS. BAILY, Vice-President.
MRS. CHARLOTTE HUNTON, Treasurer.
———, Secretary.
MRS. MARY HUNTON, Marshal.

CONSTITUTION

OF THE

Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principle of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on compassionate considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to avert, as plans now maturing to carry one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing cases on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to fill as a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate, or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to carry the cause of the country at all times, and to instil principles, reflect on such measures of many in the United States and elsewhere, who would carry out a policy tending to make formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" to the latter as our highest ambition; or to segregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s, 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS,
JOHN D. PECK,
AMOS G. BEMAN,
JOHN JONES,
J. D. BANNER,
J. MCCUNE SMITH,
} Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations as also subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Committee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law.—On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some effete prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

Poetry.

TO AUTUMN.

BY KEATS.

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness,
Close bo-om friend of the maturing sun,
Conspiring with him how to load and bless
With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eaves run;
To bend with apples the moss'd cottage trees,
And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
And still more, later flowers for the bees,
Until they think warm days will never cease,
For summer has o'er-brimm'd their clammy cells.

Who hath not seen thee oft beneath thy store?
Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
Thee sitting careless on a granery floor,
Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing wind;
Or on a half-reap'd furrow sound asleep,
Drowsed with the fume of poppies, while the hook
Spares the next swath and all its twined flowers;
And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep Steady thy laden head across a brook:
Or by a cider press with patient look,
Thou watchest the last oozings, hours by hours.

Where are the songs of Spring? Ah, where are they?
Think not of them, thou hast thy music too,—
While barred clouds bloom the soft dying day,
And touch the stubble plains with rosy hue;
Then in a wailful choir the small gnat mourns
Among the river sallows, borne aloft,
Or sinking as the light wind lives or dies;
And full grown lambs bleat loud from hilly bourns.
Hedge-crickets sing; and now, with treble soft,
The red-breast whistles from a garden croft,
And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.

Make your Girls Independent.

BY HENRY F. FRENCH.

Everybody in New England knows exactly what to do with a boy. Give him as a matter of course, the best education you can afford, and whether he is poor or rich, prepare him for some business, some regular useful business in life, so that whatever be the turn of Fortune's Wheel, he may be independent. A good education and a profession or trade, without property, is enough for him—enough to place him beyond the charities of a cold world, enough to give him hope and courage and assurance of success in life.

But what is to become of the daughter? Do we consider this question sufficiently? Is not all New England grossly negligent on this point? Does the public voice answer this question satisfactorily?

Let us examine the matter fairly. You have a daughter of sixteen, in a family of half a dozen children. You have a small property, a comfortable home, a farm perhaps, are tolerably "well off," worth perhaps eight or ten thousand dollars. You are still a young man, at least not so very old, that you need necessarily die for some years yet Suppose this young lady has progressed as well as most girls, in her studies. She can read and write respectably, has cyphered as far as square root, can read French a little, though she cannot speak a sentence of it correctly. She can play on the piano, so that a person of common discernment can distinguish her Old Hundred from the Battle of Prague, but has developed no very decided taste for music. Still she is intelligent, active, and promising. Suppose she were, some pleasant morning, to propose the question directly to you, and ask a serious reply, "What do you intend I shall do when my education is finished?" What answer would you make, which should satisfy both you and herself? The probability, perhaps, is, that within ten or twelve years, she may marry; for that is the fate of a majority of ladies. Still, I think, you would not like to answer her reasonable question by such a suggestion, because such a probability is, after all, a vague uncertainty, and you would be quite unwilling a child of yours should make marriage a matter of necessity, or even of calculation. No, you could not say to her that she has but one chance in life, and that of such a nature, that she cannot seek to avail herself of it.

Can you say to her deliberately, that you have a home which shall always be hers, also that you have means to maintain her, and that she need take no thought for the future? This is practically, what most fathers are saying to their daughters, but frequently, with less regard to truth than they profess. Your own life is uncertain. Your business enterprises may fail. Is it safe to risk the welfare of others entirely on your own continued prosperity? Besides, is there enough in the subordinate duties which usually fall to the share of a daughter in a family, to fill up the aspiring of human nature, to develop the faculties of the soul? Look at the course of life of grown up daughters in the families about you. They are usually regarded by the mother as children in all matters pertaining to the household. They do not take a share even of the responsibility of the family. If required to do a share of the work, they do it as a disagreeable task, to which a life of ease is far preferable. In the duties of wife and mother, there is enough to occupy the heart, and exercise the intellect of an educated woman; but the mere drudgery of housework, the cooking and mending and scrubbing, especially in a subordinate position, have in them nothing peculiarly attractive or ennobling to anybody. Usually, however, the daughter is not a working bee in the hive. She is better educated than her mother, perhaps, and not half so good a housekeeper, and so she naturally takes to fashion and light literature, receives calls and returns them, dusts the parlor for her share of the housework, works worsted cats and dogs for intellectual discipline, and wears a stylish bonnet to church by way of morals and religion. Without a definite object, how can she be expected to rise early in the morning, or to take an active interest in the affairs of life.

But the question recurs, what better can be done? What shall be done that our daughters may have courage to look the future calmly in the face, and feel that their position is in some measure dependent upon their own exertions?

A definite hope for the future, can alone make a rational being happy. Give every child, then, male or female, an education for some business. The discipline of acquiring it will be, in itself, salutary, and the consciousness of possessing it will at all times give dignity and independence to the character. Whatever your position in society, educate your daughter for some business in life, educate her according to your means and condition, and according to her tastes and capacity. The "sphere of woman," which has been always reduced far below the hemisphere which all accord to her as a right, includes, certainly, the whole range of teaching—in letters, in science, in music and drawing, and whatever else is learned in our schools. "Woman's Mission" surely is to teach, and the demand for female instructors, of a high order, is by no means supplied. Academies and high schools are now paying salaries of five hundred and a thousand dollars to college graduates, as mere temporary teachers, and would be glad to exchange them for well qualified females, who would enter upon their duties with some probability of permanency. Then there are the thousands of district schools, which are fast changing from the hands of college boys, to the "milder influences" of the gentle sex. If your daughter has a decided taste for music, or any ornamental acquirement, assist her to appreciate the gift which Heaven has offered her. Make her excel in something which the world deems excellent, and her superior attainment will always command respect, and the means of honorable subsistence.

But there are many who cannot afford the means, thus to qualify their daughters for teachers. What shall they do? I answer, believe that labor is honorable, and teach them a trade, or manual occupation of some kind. I have never chanced to live in any place, where dressmakers and milliners did not keep the ladies of the village in complete subjection, dealing out their favors of dress-fitting and bonnet-trimming as if they were pearls and diamonds. I venture to say, sir, to you who are reading this paper, that you can build a forty-foot barn in less time, than your wife and daughters can procure their winter hats. Teach every young lady to cut and make her own dresses. and if you go further, and educate her to the trade, her support in life is secured. The printing offices, the counting-rooms or shops, the manufacturing establishments of various kinds, are furnishing respectable employment for females, and gradually the "era of freedom" for woman's labor and talent, is enlarging everywhere in New England. The means of education have not yet been supplied to boys and girls alike. Even Boston, I believe, which affords to every boy, at the public cost, a four years' course in a Latin or High school, gives to girls as an equivalent, only one additional year in the grammar schools.

New England has her colleges—her Harvards, her Yales, her Dartmouths, for the boys, but nothing of the kind for girls. But these wants will soon be met.—Horace Mann, whose opinion is entitled in this matter to higher authority, perhaps, than any other individual in this country, has accepted the Presidency of a college in Ohio, where the sexes enjoy equal advantages of instruction.

The want of the means to give to girls, at the public expense, the same thorough and systematic education as boys are receiving at our colleges, is the great defect in our New England system of instruction. Notwithstanding this want of opportunity for education, a great share of our best writing of a literary character, both in books and magazines, is from the pens of ladies, and he who doubts the capacity of the better-half of creation, for any literary labor, deserves to have his ears pulled by Fanny Fern, and to be classed among slave-catchers in Mrs. Stowe's next edition of Uncle Tom's Cabin. Education for all, according to the capacity of each, is the true law of love and of progress.

A Miracle of Art.

There is on exhibition in Paris one of the most remarkable pieces of masterwork which the union of art and science has ever produced. It consists of a picture of about three feet square. This picture is made up of colors admirable for their beauty and boldness, but there is no subject. The most experienced eye can detect nothing but disjointed and half-formed approximations towards a coherent design. The most able artist sees there only the finest colors, but no one can tell what they are intended to represent. In the middle of the picture, which is horizontally placed, is a mirror formed by a copper cylinder covered by a perfectly polished coating of silver. This mirror is usualy veiled. So far there is little remarkable, and the greatest amateurs in painting would hardly consent to spend five francs on such an apparently profitless study. But it is impossible not to feel a glow of admiration when, on uncovering the mirror, there is presented upon it, in the brightest reflected rays, the whole scene of the Crucifixion. The partial coloring then takes a character of incontestible superiority, and presents to the astonished spectator a picture composed of six most perfect figures, depicted with a degree of boldness such as the master painters alone knew how to impart to the subject which it was their glory to represent.—Boston Transcript.

Beau Brummel.

Our London correspondent gives us the following account of Beau Brummel: The story of Brummel, had the people been so astute as to seize its leading points, is amusing as a romance. The audacious insolence with which he trampled down the haughtiest of the high nobility of England was splendid—because successful. His grandfather kept a small confectionary shop in Bury street, St. James's, London, and let lodgings. The first Lord Liverpool, then almost obscure, lodged in his house. took his son as a secretary, got him office under Lord North, and allowed him to feather his nest so well that, on his death, in 1794, there was sixty-five thousand pounds to divide among two sons and a daughter. George, the second was educated at Eton, and dressed so well; while early in his teens, that the prefix of "Beau" was then put to his name. In Oxford he affected to be exclusive, and on his father's death, in 1794, at the age of sixteen, was presented with a cornetcy in the tenth Hussars, by the Prince of Wales, colonel of that regiment. Henceforth he was the Prince's constant companion. In two years he was a captain, and then—threw up his commission, and set up as a gentleman at large. This was before he was twenty-one, and the only reason assigned was that the regiment was ordered to Manchester, which he considered decidedly vulgar.

He started as an independent gentleman, on thirty thousand pounds—a small sum for carrying on such a profession—ridiculously small for one whose wardrobe cost him eight thousand pounds a year, and who entertained fashion, and even royalty at his table. No man dressed better; simply, but richly, with elegance and taste. In this he eclipsed his much-puffed successor, D'Orsay, whose showy attire made him look like what he was—a tailor's walking advertisement. The Prince of Wales, whose wardrobe has cost one hundred thousand pounds, was Brummel's greatest rival, until corpulence, which he hated, destroyed all his reasonable pretentions to the throne of dandyism. Simplicity, of the most studied kind, was Brummel's great system.

He mixed and visited in the first circles, for he was young, handsome, satirical, and the fashion. He rode well, and was a good shot, but affected to despise Melton and the pheasants, on the plea that they were too troublesome. His great reform was in the neckcloth, which then was a sort of white muslin padding. He introduced the moderate use of starch, which gave the necessary stiffness. and dispensed with the pad. He was curious in his tie: if the cravat did not glide into it at the first touch, he would throw it aside and try another. His valet, who was met with a heap of these rumpled neckcloths on his arms, solemnly said, "These are our failures."

The Prince of Wales quarrelled with him, after nearly twenty years' intimacy. The story runs that, in the Prince's drawing-room, he said, "Wales ring the bell," which was done; and when the servant came in, the Prince said, "Order Mr. Brummel's carriage." The beau denied this, and attributed the quarrel to something he had said about Mrs. Fitzherbert's stoutness. This was about 1811. Brummel continued king of fashion, though he had quarrelled with the Prince. But he took to gaming. In 1814, he lost all he had, and ten thousand pounds more; raised what money he could, and retreated to Calais; attributed his bad luck to his having parted with "a lucky sixpence," which, he maintained, Rothschild must have got possession of; was supported in his exile by his brother and sister; was so liberal, when his remittances came, that the beggars called him "Le Roi de Calais"; was made British Consul at Caen, on the mediation of Wellington with George IV.; was removed, without compensation, when that consulate was abolished; lost his senses; spent his last hours in a hospital for lunatic mendicants; and died March 2, 1840.

There, in a nutshell, is the true history of Brummel.—New York Sunday Times.

THE BATTLE OF ALMA.

(From the Crimea Correspondence of the London Times.)

Full particulars of the Fighting—Desperate Valour of the English—Terrible Slaughter—Gallantry of the French—Shocking Spectacle—Scene after the Combat—The Dying and the Dead.

Nearly Ten Thousand Slain!

The brunt fell on the Light Division, more especially on the 7th, 23rd and 33rd regiments, and on the left brigade of the 2nd division, so far as heavy loss is concerned; but the Guards and Highlanders crowned the labors of their fellow soldiers by a grand charge, which appalled the Russians reserves, already shaken by the fire of the guns of Captain Turner's battery, and ploughed by the shot of the French guns which enfiladed them from the heights. The Guards lost many men; many officers are wounded in the three battalions, and there is scarcely one of them who has not had escapes perfectly miraculous.

CRITICAL POSITION OF THE FRENCH.

It so happened that twice or thrice during the action the French were so hardly pressed that they sent urgent messages to us for aid, and our guns were directed with such good effect on a mass of infantry which threatened their left, that they were relieved from all embarrassment, and enabled to gain a position from which they rendered us material aid in return, by directing their guns against the Russian reserves above the battery. The battle of the Alma was perfect in all respects except one—the cavalry arm was inoperative. The Russian cavalry covered itself with disgrace. It never gave our horse a chance of a charge, and the nature of the ground forbade our attempting a demonstration against a very superior force manoeuvering in a higher position. The Russians, indeed, barely covered the retreat, and our squadrons, were too weak to try a dash at them.

Ours it was to face steadily the fire of tremendous batteries; to advance with a rush, steadily and sure, and resistless as the swell of the ocean, against a wall of fire and solid masses of infantry; to struggle on, at one time overwhelmed by crushing volleys of grape and musketry, at another disorganized, by round shot winning the ground from death at every pace; to form tranquilly and readily when thrown into momentary disorder, and at last to hail victory to our colors by the never-failing British bayonet. It is said that several French officers have declared, since they viewed the ground, that they thought their men would not have been able to carry the position as we did. General Canrobert, in a moment of enthusiasm, exclaimed to one of our Generals at the close of the day, "All I would ask of fortune now is that I might command a corps of English troops for three short weeks, I could then die happy!" On the other hand, the French had to scale the sides of steep ravines covered with dense masses of infantry, supported by clouds of skirmishers; they had to clamber up rocky steeps defended by swarms of sharpshooters; they had to gain a most difficult position with quickness and alacity. Delay would have proved fatal; slowness of movements would have lost us the battle. for without the French on the heights on our right we must have been driven across the Alma, as they would have been swept into the valley had we failed in carrying our batteries. Their energetic movement, their rapid flame-like spread from crag to crag, their ceaseless fusillade of the deadly rifle, were all astonishing, and paralyzed the enemy completely. We, perhaps, could never have made such a rapid advance, or have got over so much ground in the same time

THE REGIMENTS THAT SUFFERED MOST.

The loss fell principally on the 7th, 23rd, and 33rd Regiments, and on the 30th, 55th, and 95th Regiments, which formed the right brigade of the 2d division. In fact, these regiments were directly exposed to the tremendous fire of the principal earth-work battery, and came under range almost the moment the advance was sounded. The Rifles got over the stream in such loose order that they were wonderfully preserved, in spite of the tremendous storm of shot which rattled over them. Colonel Lawrence had his horse killed under him. Major Norcott's charger received no less than five mortal wounds. When the 7th got out of the stream, Col. Yeo found himself and his men at once under range of the battery before they could form, and were obliged to advance pell mell against the guns. Poor Monck and Hare soon fell. The colors were lost for a time, for thrice did the enemy's shot strike down the officers who carried them; but Captain Pearson, Aide-de Camp to Sir G. Brown, passed the last poor fellow who bore them, and was enabled to restore them to the gallant Colonel. They are torn to pieces with shot. The 33d, which crossed the stream the first, headed by Colonel Blake, were mowed down by round after round of shot and case. The Major (Gough) Captain Fitzgerald, Lieutenants Wallis and Worthington, Ensigns Sirce and Greenwood. fell wounded in a few moments; Lieutenant Montagu was killed on the spot.

BRAVERY OF THE 23RD REGIMENT.

The 23rd, which was between the 7th and 33rd, pushed on in advance, and were received by a fearful fire of rifles and musketry, grape and canister. Encouraged by the example of their Brigadier Codrington, and headed by their gallant old General, Sir George Brown, the noble brigade rushed up the steep, every moment diminishing their numbers and strewing the ground with the dead and dying. It was right in front of the battery that the 23d received their severest losses. While the 1st brigade of the Light Division was charging up the hill on one side of it, the left or 2d brigade of the 2d (Sir De L. Evan's) divisions was charging the enemy close to them, and was exposed to a similar fire, and met with similar losses. The 30th, 55th, and 95th left long lines of dead behind them, and just as they came to the battery a sheet of lead passed through them like a sword. They were utterly broken up It was necessary to retire to reform; and the Bussians, seeing their retreat, leaped out of the embrasures and breastworks, and actually charged them down the hill with the bayonet.

But few exchanges of the steel were made. probably not more than half a dozen bayonet wounds were inflicted, and bitterly did the enemy repent his temerity. The shattered regiments re-formed, and cheered on by their indefatigable brigadier, Pennefather, whose courage never shone more conspicuously than on this day, they drove the enemy like a heard of sheep up the hill to the shelter of their earthworks, and then sent them flying beyond the hill, pursued by remorseless volleys of Minie balls, while Brigadier-General Codrington's noble brigade dealt the same vengeance on their opponents. The advance of the Guards was as grand in its calm and order as any sight ever witnessed on the battle-field.

A STIRRING SCENE.

Little more than 14,000 of our infantry were actually engaged with the enemy. Two divisions never fired a shot. The victory was won by the Guards, Highlanders, Light and Second divisions, opposed to at least 20,000 Russians, and the number of the French who disposed of the other 20,000 of the Russian army was in like proportion with the bulk of their army. The critical moment was at the advance of the first division, and that advance was a sight never to be forgotten. As they marched up the hill, the lines of the black bear-skins were barely wavering; they were nearly as straight as on a parade, and the Light division complained, that the men of the Guards were loosing time in dressing up as if on parade ground, when they should have been supporting the regiments exposed to such crushing fire. While the Guards were running up they fell fast, and at last the Duke, anxious at the loss of one regiment, seemed inclined to retire his men only for a moment to reform, but was diverted from doing so by the advice of Sir Colin Campbell. They continued their advance, therefore, swallowed up in smoke, and rent through every instant by shot, and, after a momentary check, rushed into the battery. The Grenadiers and Scotch Fusiliers contended eagerly for the honor of being first in, and still more eagerly for the honor of capturing the beautiful brass gun.

A DREADFUL SIGHT—NEARLY TEN THOUSAND DEAD BODIES.

It was a terrible and sickening sight to go over the battle field. Till deprived of my horse by a chance shot, I rode about to ascertain, as far as possible, the loss of our friends, and in doing so I was often brought to a standstill by the difficulty of getting through the piles of wounded Russians, mingled too often with our own poor soldiers. The hills of Greenwich Park in fair time are not more densely covered with human beings than were the heights of the Alma with dead and dying. On these bloody mounds fell 2,196 English officers and men, and upwards of 3,000 Russians, while their western extremity was covered with the bodies of 1,400 gallant Frenchmen, and of more than 3,000 of their foes.

HOW LONG THE FIGHT LASTED.

When Lord Raglan and his staff and the Duke of Cambridge rode round to the top of the hill, the troops cheered them with a thrilling effect—a shout of victory—which never can be forgotten. The enemy, who were flying in the distance, might almost have heard its echoes as it rolled among the hills. Our men had indeed done their work well, for the action which commenced at 1 25 on our part, was over about 4 p.m. In fact, the actual close continuous fighting did not last two hours.

THE RUSSIANS.

The Russian regiments engaged against us, judging from the numbers on the caps and buttons of the dead and wounded, were some of the Imperial Guard. The Russian regiment consists of four battalions, and each battalion may be said to be 650 strong. The soldiers were mostly stout strong men. Several of the regiments, 32d and 17th for example, wore a black leather helmet, handsomely mounted with brass, and having a brass cone on the top, with a hole for the reception of a tuft, feather, or plume; others wore simply a white, linen, foraging, cap. They were all dressed in long drab coats with brass buttons, and bearing the number of the regiment. These coats fitted loosely, were gathered in at the back by a small strap and button; descending to the ankles, and seemed stout comfortable garments, though the cloth was coarse in texture; the trousers of course blue stuff, were thrust inside a pair of Wellington boots, open at the top, to admit of their being comfortably tucked down; the boots were stout, well made, and serviceable.

THEIR POWERS OF ENDURANCE.

The surgeons remarked that their tenacity of life was very remarkable. Many of them lived with wounds calculated to destroy two or three ordinary men. I saw one of the 32d regiment on the field just after the fight. He was shot right through the head, and the brain protruded in large masses at the back of the head and from the front of the skull. I saw with my own eyes the wounded man raise his hand, wipe the horid masses from his brow, and proceed to struggle down the hill towards the water. Many of the Russians were shot in three or four places; few of them had only one wound. They seemed to have a general idea that they would be murdered; possibly, they have been told no quarter would be given, and several deplorable events took place in consequence.

SICKENING INCIDENTS.

As our men were passing by, two or three of them were shot or stabbed by men lying on the ground, and the cry was raised that "the wounded Russians" were firing on our men. There is a story, indeed, that one officer was severely injured by a man to whom he was in the very act of administering succor as he lay in agony on the field; be this as it may, there was at one time a near chance of a massacre taking place, but the men were soon controlled, and confined themselves to the pillage that always takes place on a battle field. One villain with a red coat on his back, I regret to say, I saw go up to a wounded Russian who was rolling on the earth in the rear of the 7th Regiment, and, before we could say a word, discharged his rifle right through the wretched creature's brains. Colonel Yeo rode at him to cut him down, but the fellow excused himself by declaring the Russian was going to shoot him. This was the single act of inhumanity I saw perpetrated by this army flushed with victory and animated by angry passions, although the wounded enemy had unquestionably endangered their lives by acts of ferocious folly. Many of the Russians had small crosses and chains fastened round their necks. Several were found with Korans in their knapsacks—most probably recruits from the Kasan Tartars. Many of the officers had portraits of wives, mistresses, or mothers or sisters, inside their coats. The privates wore the little money they possessed in purses fastened below their left knee, and the men, in their eager search after the money, often caused the wounded painful apprehensions that they were about to destroy them. Last night all those poor wretches lay in their agony; nothing could be done to help them. The groans, the yells, the cries of despair and suffering, were a mournful commentary on the exultation of the victors and on the joy which reigned along the bivouac fires of our men. As many of our wounded as could be possibly picked up ere darkness set in were conveyed on stretchers to the hospital tents. Many of the others were provided with blankets and covered as they lay in their blood. The bandsmen of the regiments worked in the most cheerful and indefatigable manner, hour after hour, searching out and carrying off our wounded.

SCENE AFTER THE BATTLE.

Long after night had closed, faint lights might be seen moving over the frightful field, marking the spots where friendship directed the steps of some officer in search of a wounded comrade, or where the Pillage yet stalked about on his horrid errand. The attitudes of some of the dead were awful One man might be seen resting on one knee, with the arms extended in the form of taking aim, the brow compressed, the lips clinched—the very expression of firing at an enemy stamped on the face and fixed there by death; a ball had struck this man in the neck. Physiologists or anatomists must settle the rest. Another was lying on his back with the same expression, and his arms raised in a similar attitude, the Minie musket still grasped in his hands undischarged. Another lay in a perfect arch, his head resting on one part of the ground and his feet on the other, but the back raised high above it. Many men without legs or arms were trying to crawl down to the waterside. Some of the dead lay with a calm, placid smile on the face, as though they were in some delicious dream.

BEFORE AND AFTER DEATH.

Of the Russians one thing was remarkable. The prisoners are generally coarse, sullen, and unintelligent-looking men. Death had ennobled those who fell, for the expression of their faces was altogether different. The wounded might have envied those who seemed to have passed so peacefully.

The soldiers are all shaven cleanly on the chin and cheek; only the moustache is left, and the hair is cropped as close to the head as possible. The latter is a very convenient mode of wearing the hair in these parts of the world. The officers (those of superior rank excepted) are barely distinguishable from the men, so far as uniform is concerned, but the generals wore sashes and gold epaulettes. The subalterns wore merely a lace shoulder-strap instead of the cloth one of the privates. Most of them spoke French; and the entreaties of the wounded to be taken along with us, as the officers moved up the hill, were touching in the extreme.

THE PRISONERS.

The poor fellows had a notion that our men would murder them if the eye of the officer was removed from them. An old General who sat smiling and bowing on a bank with his leg broken by a round shot, seemed principally concerned for the loss of his snuff box. This, I believe has, since been restored to him. The men say they were badly handled, and had no General to direct them. The officers displayed great gallantry and the men fought with a dogged courage characteristic of the Russian infantry, but they were utterly deficient in elan and dash. Our loss is 2,199 killed and wounded; of the French, between 1,300 and 1,400. The enemy have lost upwards of 6,000. Had we had but a little brigade of cavalry more, we might have converted the retreat into an utter rout, and taken some 5,000 prisoners' guns and standards, as trophies of our victory. The troops bivouacked on the field, not far from the scene of their triumphs. The Rifles (2d battalion) were sent in front as usual. The cavalry videttes scoured the country and fell back at nightfall on their main bodies in advance of the Rifles. The tents of Lord Raglan's head-quarters were pitched on a flat close to the bridge, and to the left of the hill on which were lying the bulk of the killed and wounded.

THE FRENCH DESPATCHES.

MARSHAL ST. ARNAUD'S LAST OFFICAL DESPATCH ANNOUNCING THE VICTORY OF THE ALMA.—THE MARSHAL'S ADDRESS TO THE ARMY.

The Moniteur contains the following official despatch, addressed by Marechal de St. Arnaud to the Emperor—the last, unfortunately, which the Marechal was destined to write:—

FIELD OF BATTLE, ALMA, Sept. 21.

SIRE,—The cannon of your Majesty has spoken; we have gained a complete victory. It is a glorious day, Sire, to add to the military annals of France, and your Majesty will have one name more to add to the victories which adorn the flags of the French army.

"The Russians had yesterday assembled all their forces, and collected all their means, in order to oppose the passage of the Alma. Prince Menschikoff commanded in person. All the heights were crowded with redoubts and formidable batteries. The Russian army counted 40,000 bayonets, from all the points of the Crimea; in the morning there arrived from Theodosia 6,000 cavalry and 180 pieces of heavy and field artillery. From the heights which they occupied, the Russians could count our men man by man, from the 19th to the moment when we arrived on the Bubbanach.

* * * Prince Napoleon, at the head of his division, took possession of the large village of Alma, under the fire of the Russian batteries. The Prince showed himself worthy of the great name he bears. We then arrived at the foot of the heights, under the fire of the Russian batteries. Then, Sire, commenced a real battle along all the line—a battle with its episodes of brilliant feats of valor. Your Majesty may be proud of your soldiers; they have not degenerated; they are the soldiers of Austerlitz and of Jena. At half-past 4 the French army was everywhere victorious. All the positions had been carried at the point of the boyonet, to the cry of "Vive l'Empereur," which resounded throughout the day. Never was such enthusiasm seen; even the wounded rose from the ground to join in it. On our left, the English met with large masses of the enemy, and with great difficulties, but everything was surmounted.

The English attacked the Russian position in admirable order under the fire of their cannon, carried them, and drove off the Russians. The bravery of Lord Raglan rivals that of antiquity. In the midst of cannon and musket shot he displayed a calmness which never left him. The French lines formed on the heights, and the artillery opened its fire. Then it was no longer a retreat but a rout; the Russians threw away their muskets and knapsacks in order to run the faster. If, Sire, I had had cavalry, I should have obtained immense results, and Menschikoff would no longer have had an army; but it was late, our troops were harrassed, and the ammunition of our artillery was exhausted. At 6 o'clock in the evening, we encamped on the very bivouac of the Russians. My tent is on the very spot where that of Prince Menchikoff stood in the morning, and who thought himself so sure of beating us that he left his carriage there. I have taken possession of it, with his pocket-book and correspondence, and shall take advantage of the valuable information it contains. The Russian army will probably be able to rally two leagues from this, and I shall find it tomorrow on the Katscha, but beaten and demoralized, while the allied army is full of ardour and enthusiasm.

I have been compelled to remain here in order to send our wounded and those of the Russians to Constantinople, and to procure ammunition and provision from the fleet. The English have had 1,500 men put hors de combat. The Duke of Cambridge is well. His division and that of Sir Geo Brown were superb. I have to regret 1,200 men hors de combat, 3 officers killed, 64 wounded, 253 sub-officers and soldiers killed, and 1,033 wounded. Gen. Canrobert, to whom is due in part the honor of the day, was slightly wounded by the splinter of a shell which struck him in the breast and hand, but he is doing very well. Gen. Thomason, of the division of the Prince, is seriously wounded by a ball in the abdomen. The Russians have lost about 5,000 men. The field of battle is covered with their dead, and our field hospitals are full of their wounded. We have counted a proportion of seven Russian dead bodies to one French. The Russian artillery caused us loss, but ours is very superior to theirs. I shall all my life regret not having had with me my two regiments of African Chasseurs. The Zouaves were the admiration of both armies; they are the first soldiers in the world.

Accept, Sire, the homage of my profound respect and of my entire devotedness.

MARECHAL A. DE SAINT ARNAUD."

ORDER OF THE DAY BY MARSHAL DE ST. ARNAUD.

Soldiers!—France and the Emperor will be satisfied with you. At Alma you have proved to the Russians that you are the worthy decendants of the conquerors of Eylau and of the Moskawa. You have rivalled in courage your allies the English, and your bayonets have carried formidable and well defended positions. Soldiers, you will again meet the Russians on your road, and you will conquer them as you have done to-day to the cry of "Vive l'Empereur!" and you will only stop at Sebastopol; it is there you will enjoy the repose which you will have well deserved.

Field of battle of Alma, Sept. 20.

Head-quarters at Alma.—Battle field at Alma, Sept. 22, 1854.

Monsieur le Ministre,—My official report gives an account to your excellency of the details of the splendid day of the 20th, but I cannot allow the courier to start without saying a few words about our brave soldiers.

The soldiers of Friedland and the Austerlitz are still under our colours, Monsieur le Marechal; this the battle of Alma has proved. There is the same glow, the same brilliant courage. Everything can be done with such men when they have been inspired with confidence. The allied armies have carried positions truly formidable. In going over them yesterday, I recognized all the advantages they possessed for offering resistance; and indeed, if the English and French had held them, the Russians could never have taken them.

Now that everything is more calm, and that the accounts brought in by the deserters and prisoners are more precise, we can probe the enemy's wounds.

The loss of the Russians is considerable. The diserters affirm it to have been above 6,000. The army is disheartened. In the evening of the 20th it had split in two. Prince Menschikoff, with the left wing, marched on Batche Serai; the right wing proceeded to Belbek. But they were without provisions, their wounded encumbered them, the road is strewed with them. This splendid success, Monsieur le Ministre, adds a glorious page to our military history, and gives to the army a moral force equivalent to 20,000 more men.

The Russian have left on the field of battle 10,000 knapsacks, and more than 5,000 muskets. It was a regular rout. Prince Menschikoff and his generals were very vain-boasting in their camp I now occupy, on the morning of the 20th. I think they have somewhat changed their tone. The Russian general had demanded at Alma provision for three weeks; I have an idea he will have stopped the convoy on its way!

Your excellency will be able to judge if there is much prospect for the Russians. In three days I shall be before Sebastopol, and shall be able to tell your excellency all that is real about that place. The moral courage and spirit of the army are admirable.

The vessels going to Varna for reinforcements of troops of all arms, left here on the 18th. They will reach me at Belbek before the end of the month.

My health is as usual. It has sustained damage amid suffering, crisis, and duty. All that does not prevent me keeping the saddle 12 hours on the day of battle. But my strength will not give.

Adieu, Monsieur le Marechal; I shall write to your excellency when I am before Sebastopol.

Receive, &c.,

MARSHAL A. DE SAINT ARNAUD.

THE RUSSIAN ACCOUNT.

THEIR LOSS PUT DOWN AT BUT 2,000!

Marshal Paskiewitch issued a bulletin on the 3rd, at Warsaw, giving the Russian version of the battle of the Alma. The loss of the allies is reported to have far exceeded that of Prince Menschikoff. The Russian loss is put down at 2,000, (the English say 6,000!) and on the whole the Warsaw despatch is made to read pretty much as if the victory was altogether on the side of the Russians, instead of against them.

The carriage of Prince Menschikoff, with his private correspondence, was taken by the French, together with 50,000f. After the battle, the Russians burnt all the villages they passed through.

Menschikoff, (an English account says,) was suffering severely from illness during the hottest of the battle,—so much so that he had to be supported. One account says he is badly wounded in the feet,—another in the hands.

Among the wounded on the British side, was Sir C. Newton, of the Scotch Fusilier Guards. He was shot in the leg and fell. When down, the Russians are said to have brutally fired upon him and beat him with their muskets, and nothing would have prevented his brains being beaten out on the spot, but the thickness of his helmet or cap. He had eleven wounds on his body, but at last accounts he was still living.

Toronto Young Men's Christian Association.

The Globe, in speaking of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, which by "evil communications" has been tempted to stray from the path of Christian duty, but which, we rejoice to learn, no longer sees men as "trees walking," says:

A convention of Young Men's Christian Associations was held at Buffalo in June last, in which a duly accredited representative from Toronto, took his seat. At the beginning of the session, Mr. Holland, the Toronto delegate, very properly presented the following resolution:—

"That the various Associations represented in this Convention recognize the Christian sentiment, 'in Christ Jesus there is neither bond nor free,' and therefore cordially invite all Christian young men, of whatever degree or condition in life, to an equal participation in the advantages these associations are calculated to afford."

Mild as the wording of this resolution was, however, its aim was too apparent to meet with sympathy even in a Christian association, and it was "referred to the Business Committee," in other words, nothing farther was heard of it. At a meeting of the Toronto association, shortly after the return of their delegate, a motion was made by one of the members:—

"That this Association deeply regret that the Convention of the Y. M. C. Associations of the United States and British Provinces, held in Buffalo, should have shrinked from discussing, in open Convention, the resolution submitted by one of its delegates, and farther that it should have tacitly rejected that resolution, the spirit of which was so decidedly in harmony with the dictates of the Gospel."

At the meeting referred to, this resolution was rejected by a majority of three, and a motion passed approving of a union with the United States Associations without any reference to the question. At the meeting on Tuesday evening, this subject again came up, and a free discussion ensued, which resulted in the following resolution being adopted:—

"That this Association desires emphatically to reiterate the sentiments embodied in the resolution proposed by its delegate at the Convention held in Buffalo in June last, and would convey to the General Committee of the Atliance that if the sentiment of the said resolution be not recognized in the formation of its constitution, this Association cannot continue in said alliance."

Why any difference of opinion on this question should obtain amongst our young men, it is difficult to imagine. Friendly discussions, however, always tend to good, and we doubt not that in the present instance, the minds of some may have received influences which will eventuate in much good to the cause of truth and freedom. We are happy to find that the Young Men's Association of Toronto, to which we wish great prosperity, has cleared itself of all mystification on the great question of human freedom, and that its members are determined, so far as their influence extends, not to countenance the time-serving policy of the larger portion of those Associations in the neighboring land which are nominally Christian, but which, in too many instances, ignore the very first principles of Christianity.

The above is a warning to Canadians to be careful as to how they form alliances with Christians across the line, lest the Christianity in Canada be brought to the deplorable condition of the spurious article current over there.

That whited sepulchre, the American Tract Society, has lately—though we hope not successfully—been trying to get a foothold here; and no pains will be spared to gain an entrance and spread their noxious sentiments, quietly and insidiously, but none the less surely, whenever occasion offers. Canadian Christians occupy a position which peculiarly enables them to hold and disseminate sterling Christian truths. Outside of the influence of, and holding a position above pro-slavery churches, the only way they can exercise an influence for good, is by forming no connection with any church or association which does not by word and action "remember those in bonds as bound with them; for if they love not their brother whom they have seen, how can they love God whom they have not seen?"

S.

The Frankfort, Ky. Yeoman thus describes the funeral of the Rev. London Ferrill, of Lexington, who was born a slave in Virginia, and moved to that City more than thirty years since. He was Pastor of the First Colored Baptist Church there, and had succeeded in building up a Church numbering more than eighteen hundred members. He had baptized more than five thousand persons during the course of his ministerial labors.

S.

We were in Lexington on Sunday last, and witnessed the funeral procession of the Rev. London Ferrill, a colored minister of the Gospel, whose death we announced in our last issue, with the prediction that his remains would be followed to the grave by a large number of his colored brethren. We were right in that supposition, as the following estimate will show.

Putting the number as low as possible, we judge there were between fifteen hundred and two thousand persons in the procession; composed of about twelve hundred men, and the rest woman; a thousand of whom were walking four abreast. The rest were riding in sixty-odd carriages, and twenty or thirty were on horseback. Such a number of persons, paying their last tribute of respect to the dead, we have not seen since the burial of Henry Clay: and we have no doubt the regret of those who accompanied the corps of Brother Ferrill (as he was familiarly called by all who knew him) to the grave, was equally as heart-felt as that of the great number of mourners who followed to their resting place the earthly remains of the illustrious statesman.

Negroes were there from all the adjoining counties, and Sunday last will be a day, the remembrance of which will never be obliterated from their memory.

The procession reached from the First Colored Baptist Church to the Cemetery, a distance of fifteen or sixteen squares.

A respectable colored man, named Henry F. Smith, while passing up Centre Street, on his way to Church, last Monday evening, was attacked by three ruffians, named Irwin, Breslau, and Malone, who pursued him to his own house, where, after being struck with a board, by Irwin, with such force as to break it, and stabbed three times with a large knife, by Malone, he fell, overpowered. His wife cried "murder," which caused a number of persons to collect, who detained the assailants until information was conveyed to the nearest police station. Sergeant McCaffrey, and officers Henderson and Kealy hastened to the spot and arrested the offenders. Irwin and Breslau are cab drivers, and Malone has been but a few days out of the Penitentiary.

From a letter under date of October 25th, received from Richmond, Virginia, by a gentleman in this city, we have been permitted to note the following circumstance:—A colored young man and woman being about to get married, and meeting with strong opposition to their wishes from the girl's mother and stepfather, attempted to elope, but were intercepted. On an examination of the matter, the girl was found to be of full age, and they were accordingly married.

The affair having thus terminated contrary to the wishes of the opponents, Mr. Reuben West, the stepfather became so exasperated, that he took advantage of the fact that the young man, Mr. Smith, had visited the city of Philadelphia about a year previous, and had him arrested, under the law prohibiting colored persons from residing in Virginia, after having visited a free State. Mr. Smith was obliged to leave, and last week started for Boston. The parties, we are informed, are all well known by persons in Toronto; and should West ever show his face here, he will be treated with the scorn he so richly merits.

A Correspondent of the Sun sends the following to that paper, in response to an item in it, a few days since:

"Don Pedro Blanco sold to parties in Florida, in 1836, fifty Africans, which were landed on the Western coast of Florida. The parties are some of them at this time living in this city. The contract was for 200; only 50 were landed."

A Visit to Her Majestys Dominions.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman.

DEAR MADAM:

It may be interesting to some of the readers of your valuable Journal, to hear the expressed opinion of one upon his first visit to Her Majesty's Dominions; also to know that Canadian interest is not entirely forgotten here in the far "West," in that the Provincial Freeman is read and appreciated here. After having heard, and read, so much pro. and con., concerning the Province of Canada, I at last resolved to know for myself the truth of the problem, by crossing over the water. After long meditation the scheme was matured for the journey, and on the 29th of August I arrived in Canada, and commenced my first journey in a foreign land.

After a complete survey of nature's works, the Niagara Falls! and the adjacent curiosities, such as the Suspension Bridge, Lundy's Lane Battle Ground, with its Egyptian like towers, for the accommodation of visitors who wish to get a perfect view of the spot, on which was the scene of one of the bloodiest battles said to have occurred during the late war between the United States and Great Britain, I took the E. & O. R. R., and wended my way with great speed down to the town of Niagara. There I found the Royal Mail Steamer "Peerless," and after a few very pleasant hours sailing, I found myself safely landed at the Toronto wharf. Stepping ashore I found plenty of Hacks and Cabs in readiness to convey passengers to any part of the City; but of course, I only engaged one. It being late in the evening, and a little rainy too, when I arrived, I concluded to remain in doors until the morning should arrive. The next morning came, and I started out to see and learn whatever I could about the first City that I ever had visited in Canada. Among other places that I visited, I shall mention that to the office of the Provincial Freeman, and being highly delighted with my very polite reception from the Lady in the Chair, I was constrained to enrol my name on the list of yearly subscribers to Our Organ, the Provincial Freeman. I would not be doing justice to myself, and the citizens on Toronto, without saying something about their manners, because I was kindly received and treated with the utmost politeness during my short stay in that city. Toronto is also, most undoubtedly, a rich City and well worthy of a visit while in Her Majesty's Dominions.

After leaving Toronto, in my course to the West, I visited Hamilton, and spent a short time with her very enterprising inhabitants. Hamilton, I must say, if not as rich as Toronto, certainly presents the appearance of a greater commercial City. From Hamilton I steered my course to Chatham, (regret that I did not stop in London), and there was kindly received by mine host, Mr. D., by whom I was treated with all the affection of a brother. The next day after my arrival in Chatham, I was invited by my worthy friend Mr. D., to participate in a little hunting excursion, and being accommodated with a gun and the other little necessaries, we began our excursion to the Bush. We had not travelled far before we came up with a small body of the Aborigines, who were enjoying themselves, as if perfectly at home. But as our business was with the other aborigines, the four-footed and more nutritious ones, we passed on the other side. I cannot speak of the result of our excursion at present, any more than to say that it was a fine one. Before I left Chatham finally, I visited the principal buildings therein; among which, I only have time to speak of the Market-house. I make this remark, simply because I have heard so many expressions, such as "if you go to Canada, you will starve, freeze to death, &c." But I can impartially say, that the market did not present any such dreary aspect as above quoted, at all. I truly concede that Chatham is well termed the "Eden" of Canada. Here my mind became thoroughly convinced of the fact that there is a field for Colored men to labor in, a long way this side of Liberia.

I must remark, in conclusion, that, in short, Canada is, in my opinion, the Colored man's Home in America. I will also state that today I received my first number of the Provincial Freeman, by mail, and read it with pleasure; it was dear to me as gold; yet I was constrained to share the joy with my friends in inviting them to the perusal of its columns. After which many questions were asked by those who had only heard of the paper. What paper is it? Where is it published? Who is Editor? Are you a subscriber? &c. My answer is: Yes, I am a subscriber, and hope ere long, to see many of the young gents of this City engaged in the same enterprise. Success to Canada, and prosperity to the circulation of the Freeman—may it be read by every Colored inhabitant of this Continent, until the Rev. Samuel R. Ward shall have accomplished his design without another mission to England.

WESLEY W. TATE.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 27th, 1854.

We infer from the concluding sentence of the above correspondence, that the writer erroneously supposes that the mission of Mr. Ward, to England, was for the purpose of establishing this paper on a permanent basis. We will therefore just refer him to an article in our last issue, under the head of—"To all whom it may concern."

The New Congress.

The following table exhibits the result of the Congressional elections in the eleven States which have voted, compared with the present Congress:

	New Congress. Admin.	Opp.	Present Congress. Admin.	Opp.
Arkansas	2	—	2	—
California	2	—	2	—
Florida	1	—	1	—
Maine	1	5	3	3
Vermont	—	3	—	3
Missouri	1	6	3	4
Pennsylvania	5	20	16	9
Ohio	—	21	12	9
Indiana	2	9	1	10
Iowa	1	1	1	1
South Carolina.	6	—	6	—
Total	21	65	47	39

Administration majority in the present Congress, 8; opposition majority in the new Congress, 44. Loss to the Administration, 52.

In the above table we have conceded the election of Fuller in the 6th district of Maine, though it is not improbable that Milliken may receive the certificate on account of fatal informalities down in Aroostook.

But it is of not so much consequence that the Administration is in a minority in these States; we want to know how slavery and the slave power stands, compared with Freedom and the free power. So we are obliged to place the six Missouri Whigs with the 21 Administration men, giving Slavery 27, and leaving Freedom only 59—a majority of only 32.

One hundred and forty-eight members are yet to be chosen—74 from Free States, and 74 from Slave States. In the contest upon slavery it is not safe to rely upon any Southern member for a vote on the right side, so we may add 74 to the 27 already chosen, and yield the slaveholders 101 members without further remark. A full House consists of 234 members, a majority being 118. The only question, then, is, can the slaveholders get 17 more members from the free States yet to elect? These States are the following:

States.	Members.	States.	Members.
New Hampshire	3	Illinois	9
Massachusetts	11	Michigan	4
Rhode Island	2	Wisconsin	3
Connecticut	4		—
New York	33	Total	74
New Jersey	5

We cannot see where the seventeen pro-slavery men are to come from. There may be one in New Hampshire, one in Connecticut, three or four in New York, one or two in Illinois, and one or two in New Jersey—but at the utmost here is only ten. This calculation renders it close work, but we believe that Freedom is bound to succeed.—Boston Telegraph.

Bloodhounds at Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, Oct. 6, 1854.

A few days since, while passing down Tenth street, from Pennsylvania Avenue, to the Smithsonian Institute, before reaching the canal, I was overtaken and passed by a large dog, (which I afterward learned was a bloodhound,) with his nose on the scent close to the ground. As he hastily ran along, he dragged, by means of a rope tied around his neck, a two-legged creature, apparently in pursuit of some game, and who, but for some after developments, might have passed in the world's great eye for a man.

Naturally feeling a little interested in the object of their pursuit, as my steps quickened, my eyes followed them about a square, when the dog taking a sudden turn to the right, run between two high piles of boards in a lumberyard at the canal's bank, jerking the attached appendage with him. As I approached a few steps more nearly, I heard the most hideous and heart-rending screams of a child, and fearing one of the several children whom I saw on the bank fishing had fallen therein, I hastened to the spot for his rescue. But my fears had not been for the worst; for here, almost under the stars and stripes of a nation's flag, which so boasts of her freedom, was I an eye witness to a scene heart-rending, appalling and terrific in the extreme. For there saw I a man of the South, as he had made his appearance through the hatchway of a small vessel, jerking after him, in a rude and heartless manner, the game, (one of God's children,) a well-formed lad with a three-fold lighter skin than the man-hunter's black soul, whose countenance, although disfigured with fright, terror and tears, bespoke a mind, sympathies and affections. Of these, the tyrannical fiend and man of the South proved destitute and void, by his grasping the stronger specimen of humanity by the ankles, and, with a swing of his whole person, bringing him over his right shoulder, uttering, in a loud and earnest voice, as he placed him there: G—d d—m you, I'll learn you to run away! I'll show you who you run away from!"—and thus they passed from the vessel up the street, followed by the hound whose acute scent was for the present dispensed with. 'Great God!' I could but exclaim, as I gazed on the children, and thought what a scene for the young and tender hearts of American free-born children.

That I might not write my first impressions, and with a heart wildly palpitating with indignation, I have delayed giving you the above for some days, during which time I have been induced, from witnessing this scene, to read through Mrs Stowe's world-renowned Uncle Tom's Cabin. At a former time, I had laid it aside unperused, believing that a high sense of honor and humanity breathed in the hearts of our southern brethren, as well as of those with whom it has been my pleasure to dwell, and, therefore, I was prejudiced against the work, and doubted its truthfulness. I have now given to you a scene acted in the metropolis of our nation consonant with those described in that work. Although I would not have otherwise than witnessed it, I trust a similar one may never again be mine to record. Publish it, then, to prove the truth of the writer just named to our American people. Scenes like these should be kept before them, and when occurring, made to them as 'familiar in their mouths as household words.'

The Jamaica Mission is established for the emancipated people of the Island of Jamaica. It has six principal stations, and four out-stations. There are connected with it seven ordained missionaries and eight churches. Mr. Richardson and Mr. Olds have been compelled by ill health to leave their labors for a short season. At the time they left, there was a work of grace of much more than ordinary power going forward at Mr. Richardson's station. In the midst of this work his health failed, and he was compelled to leave it. There is very great demand in Jamaica for an increased number of teachers. The scholars on the list of the schools under the care of the mission numbered 716. Although it is feared that, like the children of Israel when brought out of bondage, comparatively few of those who were adults when emancipated will enter the heavenly Canaan, yet there are among them many excellent exhibitions of Christian character; and it is confidently hoped that many of the young may, by the blessing of God, be saved and trained for usefulness. It is to save these especially that the mission asks for an increase of laborers.—Report of the A. M. Society for Sept.

The Dawn Institute.

We beg to call public attention to a letter from the Rev. Dr. Burns, of Toronto, in reference to the past history and present position of the Dawn Institute, which appears in our columns to-day. It is high time that both the Canadian and British public should be enlightened as to the real state of affairs in that locality. We have repeatedly heard expressions of dissatisfaction in regard to the place, from respectable parties, anxious for the elevation of the coloured inhabitants of this Province; but have never until now been furnished with anything definite enough to place before the public. Of late, it was reported that the British Anti-Slavery Society had adopted this coloured Institute, and deputed Mr. Scoble, a leading English Abolitionist, to superintend a thorough revolutionizing of the establishment; but it would seem from Dr. Burns' letter, that as yet, there are no symptoms of new life and vigour. Our columns are open to any parties officially connected with the concern, should they wish to answer Dr. Burns' queries, or to furnish any explanation on the subject. We have no other object in consenting to the publication of the Dr.'s notes of his visit and impressions, than the development of truth and the benefit of the coloured people. The prosperous state of things at Buxton, is doubtless owing to the prudent and energetic management of the Rev. Mr. King; and it may be that the failure, ruin, and decay at Dawn, may be attributed to the want of some such presiding mind there. If things are about to be arranged de novo at the latter place, we cannot but think that it is due to the public generally, that some statements in reference to the past history and present posture of its affairs should be made. It is only just that the past contributors to this benevolent enterprise should be informed what has become of their money; and every lover of his country will be interested in details respecting what is now becoming an important and numerous class of immigrants. If there have been any unfortunate investments, or if confidence has just reposed in persons who have proved incompetent and untrustworthy, it is the better course to state frankly the facts of the case, as they are sure to be properly appreciated by all intelligent and right-minded individuals. The land appertaining to the Dawn Institute must now be somewhat valuable; and for our own part, it will give us much pleasure should the Institute be speedily made something, "beyond a nonentity." Though Dawn and Buxton are in pretty close proximity, there is abundent scope for the benevelent operations of both among the refugees from slavery that have made their way to that section of Canada.

A Visit to the Dawn Institute, Dresden.

LONDON, C. W., Oct. 20th, 1854.

MR EDITOR,—The proper name or title of the "Dawn Institute" is the "American Educational Institute, at Dawn, C. W." It originated some sixteen years ago or thereby, in a benevolent desire on the part of a few Christian philanthropists to benefit the physical and moral condition of the colored refugees from slavery in the States. Its objects were,—the settlement of families of of refugees on land; the training of them to habits of Agricultural and Mechanical Industry; and the supplying of them with the means of Elementary Education. Nor were their aims of a high missionary character overlooked. The motive was the very best, and those who first acted upon it were influenced by disinterested benevolence.

Perhaps the man who stands most prominent in the undertaking is the late James F. Fuller, of London, a member of the Society of Friends. Circumstances having brought that gentleman to the States, the condition and prospects of the colored men could not fail to engage his attention; and on a visit he paid to Canada, generally, and to Toronto in particular, he ascertained the numbers of immigrants from slavery to Canada, and the probability of a rapid increase. Consulting with friends in that city, and among others, with Mr. Hiram Wilson, now of St. Catharines,—whose attention had also been called to the subject,—the idea of a local settlement and an educational institution was suggested and immediately acted on. Mr. Fuller went to England soon after, and experienced no difficulty in collecting funds for a scheme so benevolent. Very soon the sum of seventeen hundred and three dollars was by him put at the service of the friends of the undertaking. Two hundred acres of excellent land were purchased in the Township of Dawn; and soon after one hundred more were added, at a cost altogether of about 1,200 dollars. The property was invested in six Trustees, three colored and three white men, Mr. Fuller being one of the latter. With the exception of this last gentleman, all the Trustees are, I am informed, still alive.

Under the charge of these Trustees, various measures were taken to carry out the objects of the undertaking, and various appeals have from time to time been made to the public in Britain, in the United States, and in Canada. The erection of a saw mill, and of houses for boarding and educating young persons of both sexes, and in general the prosecution of the original design of the scheme, as an "American Educational Institute," have been from time to time held out to the public; and it is to be presumed with perfect integrity, as the specific end in view. To what extent these appeals have been successful it is difficult to say, as no accounts of receipts and expenditure have ever been published. My impression is, from all that I have heard and seen, that from 25,000 to 30,000 dollars have from first to last been collected on behalf of the Institution.

In the summer of 1853, being in the neighborhood, I paid a transient visit to Dawn, and it was on my way from that place I had an interview with you, when you were so kind as to say that if I had any notes of my visit which might be thought interesting to lay before the public, the Free Press was at my service. I did not at that time embrace your offer, because my information was scarcely in a suitable matured state. Last week I repeated my visit in company with two friends, and our examination of the premises was more minute than my former inspection had been. The result I now beg to lay before the public through your pages.

On Sabbath last I was engaged in opening our new church at Wallaceburgh, and on Monday forenoon we came up to Dresden, 12 miles up the East branch of the Sydenham river, formerly known as the Bear Creek; the country on both sides beautiful, and the land rich, and in some places well cultivated and cleared. Dresden is a village of three or four hundred inhabitants, I should think. It is situated on the south side of the Sydenham, and steamers and other vessels of considerable size come up to it. The grounds of the "Institute" are in the immediate vicinity. They lie compact, forming an oblong square, with a road in the centre. The cultivation seemed pretty fair, and the number of families, occupants or tenants, was said to be some six or eight. A small wooden building, used as a female school, was pointed out to me; but I was told that this was a government erection, and not properly a part of the Institute. The school had been dismissed for the day, but I learned that the number of pupils of both sexes was about twenty, and they were taught by a female.

On enquiring for the "brick house" of two stories originally intended for a boys' academy and boarding-house, and the walls of which I had seen last year, I was told that some five years ago it had been unroofed by a storm; that it had never been repaired; and that after remaining in a dilapidated state for years, and the occasional resting-place of cattle or pigs, it had become somewhat dangerous to passers-by, and was not many months ago taken entirely down. It was represented, moreover, to me that the selection of a site had been unfortunate, and that from want of proper foundations, and a drain, the house was not considered healthy. For about a year, however, prior to the unroofing, a considerable number of young colored persons had been boarded in it, and a school of about sixty pupils kept by Mr. W. P. Newman, and another gentleman of color whose name I did not learn. The American "Free Mission Society" had then the charge of it by delegation from the Trustees, and these were said to be the real "sunny days" of the Institution. Five years had elaped since that time, and I could not hear of a single pupil, and assuredly none were lingering amid the ruins of those classic halls.

My attention was specially directed to the "saw-mill." My first information of this erection was obtained in August, 1847, (if I am not mistaken,) from a colored gentleman who came to Toronto to collect money for its erection and furnishing. He had previously been in Boston, New England, and had received largely of the liberality of the merchant princes of that city. The "race" and the "water course" were prominent in his descriptive appeals, but I felt not a little surprised to find that the mill went by steam, and was never meant to run in any other way. There is however, a ditch dug through part of the grounds, but this has no connexion with the mill, and seems to be of private interest. The mill, like other erections around, was in a state of dilapidation, and for twelve months had run none. The reason given me by one of the former occupants was the badness of the steam-engine, but still the mill had run for four years, and might have been kept going, had it not been let to a third sub-tenant, who had become bankrupt, and gone off to the States.

Betwixt the saw-mill and the road, on the the left hand as you approach Dresden, stands, and upon the Institution grounds, the remains of a two-story wooden house with doors open, windows all broken, and the whole a melancholy picture of desolation. What may this be? I enquired. In reply an interesting history was given me of a benevolent lady from the States,—the name could not be remembered,—who, a good many years ago, had got the house erected by means of money provided by herself, with the intention of making it for girls what the "brick house" was meant for boys. It had been finished, and for a season so appropriated. The scheme, however, like all the other schemes, failed; and the worthy lady left the place with the view of transferring her services to Monrovia in Africa, but died on her way out. This was all I could learn of the matter. The house appears to have stood in its present state for years, and my friends and I felt saddened at the scene.

Such, Mr. Editor, are the facts of this case; and you will do a valuable service to the community by bringing the matter before a discerning public. The questions that arise are: What have become of the many thousands of dollars raised in Britain and America for the "Dawn Institute?" Where are the "Annual Reports of its progress and transactions?" Have any audited accounts been printed? Why are the buildings in such a state? Where is the proof that the "American Educational Institute, at Dawn, C. W.," is anything beyond a nonentity?—A multitude of such questions may be asked; but I refrain. Let us have information on these points; and, in the meantime, let no more money be given to an object which has, up to this time, been a signal failure.

The day following the one on which I made this visit to Dawn, I spent at the coloured settlement at Buxton; there, I need scarcely say, everything was reversed. One hundred and fifty familes dwelling in peace, and in great prosperity; a school where the languages are taught, with 100 scholars; a church, where an interesting and well dressed company of Christian worshippers assembled to hear the word of life; stores on the temperance principle reared, filled, clean, and comfortable; a regular post office established; and all this of yesterday, as compared with Dawn. Whence the difference? And as for money matters, Buxton can scarcely be said to have cost the public anything.

Mr. Editor, I am happy that you have offered your columns for the discussion of this question. In the meantime, let me solicit of the honorable member for London that he will keep his eye on any movements that may be made in Parliament for "incorporating" this trust, and resist them manfully. I know that the honorable member for Lambton will lend him all his weight; and I rather think that the member for Kent will keep clear of all black concerns. Only let him add a little clause to his "amendment," and move for a committee to "call for persons and papers" from Dawn as well as from Buxton.

Mr. Editor, respectfully yours,

ROBT. BURNS.

Dreadful Accident on the Great Western Railroad.

UPWARDS OF FIFTY KILLED.

Through the kindness of W. O. Ruggles, we are able to give the particulars of the most heart-rending and terrible railway disaster that ever occurred in America. He says:—

A few minutes after 2 p. m. yesterday, we left Niaraga Falls with three first class and two 2nd class passenger cars, one express and one baggage car. After leaving Hamilton we were detained about midnight between Hamilton and London, by a freight engine being on the track. After a delay of an hour we we started and reached London, about 6 hours behind time, about 3 miles West of London, the cylinder head of our engine burst, which delayed us two hours. We backed down to London, took a new engine and started again for Windsor, about one o'clock, and about 13 miles west of Chatham, on the Baptust Creek Flats, going about 20 miles an hour, we came in collision with a gravel train of 15 cars backing east; the collision was frightful. Our locomotive was completely thrown over to the right, the express car thrown over, and crushing the 1st and 2nd class cars into mere splinters, demolishing the next, and making a wreck of the third car, and driving into the end of the fourth; the passengers in the last cars escaped unhurt or with slight bruises; almost the entire load of the 2nd class cars were killed or wounded, some cut completely in two, others with mangled heads and bodies, and without limbs. The screams and groans were awful. Every effort was made by the conductor and passengers to relieve the suffering, but notwithstanding all superhuman efforts to relieve them, all were not extricated until more than four hours after the collision. Heaps of the dead and mangled were found in the ruins, piled together in all mangled shapes. One poor fellow was cut out of the express car, his limbs hanging out of the side, fifteen feet from the ground. One of the strangest features of the accident is, that all the gravel cars were demolished and piled upon each other, with the tender of the engine stove in. The conductor of the gravel train was on the rear car, with his signal light and a negro boy at his side. The conductor saved himself by jumping; the negro boy was killed.

At the time of the collision there was a dense fog, it being almost impossible to see lights. Where the blame belongs in this awful catastrophe, we know not; but there is gross and culpable negligence in the operation of the affairs of the road. The conductor of the gravel train says he was ordered out by the superintendent of the gravel pit.

We ought to mention that on the third car from the rear, we had no light at the time of the collision, and were in total darkness, nor had we anything but pieces of candles stuck in tubs at the time. Those had gone out at the time of the collision. We were 32 miles from Detroit and 13 from Chatham, the surrounding country for miles a vast swamp, and no aid or physicians at hand, which, with the denseness of the fog and frightful screams of the wounded for help and water, rendered it the most appalling scene imaginable. One man had six friends with him, all killed.

From the Detroit Daily Enquirer.

All accounts agree that the passenger train which came in contact with the gravel cars at the awful collision on Friday morning, was conducted with the greatest care and caution. A complication of accidents, and the delay to which it had been subjected at the Suspension Bridge, had caused it to be several hours behind time, and so great was the caution of its conductor and engineer, who knew the hazards of running off time, that much complaint was made by the passengers at what was deemed unnecessary timidity and dilatoriness.

We have already mentioned that Mr. Thomas F. Meagher, the well-known Irish patroit, was on the train and rendered efficient service after the distuster. His seat had originally been in the rear car, but finding the heat oppressive he passed into the forward first-class car, which was principally used by second-class passengers, their own cars being incapable of holding them all. He was in this car when the crash came, though he providentially escaped without much injury. From a long and interesting account furnished by him to the Tribune, we learn that he had been asleep about twenty minutes, when he was started by a deep, rumbling noise, like the sound of a heavy, spent wave as it subsides. On coming to a clearer consciousness, he distinctly heard the crashing and ripping of timbers all around him, mingled with the most fearful shrieks and groans and the noise of escaping steam. The floor under him was vibrating while he was crushed in the seat, the roof falling down immediately before him, striking him in the face with a large torn fragment. He made an instant effort to get clear from the ruins, but found his right foot caught beneath the seat and the broken floor. Upon making a second trial he succeeded in drawing out his leg, leaving the boot in the ruins, as if in a boot-jack. He succeeded in rearching the rear door, where he stumbled over the body of John Martin, the brakeman, at the end of the car. He had been at the brake at the time of the collision, and was flung back into the doorway of the car. On procuring a lamp, a little after, he found that Martin had both arms and both thighs broken—the former above the elbows. His head, too, appeared to have been dreadfully bruised, though no wound could be perceived. This noble fellow deserves especial mention. Upon going to him when the morning broke, and offering to remove him to a comfortable situation, he answered, "Never mind me—help those who are living, for I am done for." Somewhat later, upon bringing him a drink of water, he asked Meagher to turn him on his side a little more, so that he might die quietly.

Fires were immediately kindled by the passengers, which afforded light by which at a glance the awful wreck and havoc which had been made could be seen

The passenger engine and tender were lying at the foot of the embankment—some twenty feet high—bottom side upwards, smashed into fragments, with the smoke stack and iron portions embedded in the marsh, which at this point (Baptist Creek) stretched away on both sides of the road. The fire had been thrown completely out, and the hot cinders were smoking on the wet grass. The first baggage car was perfectly unhurt, but the second one was dashed into the first second-class, and with the latter formed an immense mass of splinters, wood work, iron work, bones, brains, mangled flesh, torn clothes, broken rifles, loaves of bread and other eatables, jumbled together as if a mine of gun-powder had blown them into this enormous heap of rubbish. The last second-class car had been right upon the roof of the forward first-class car more than half way in length. The weight of it had crushed in the fore part of the car beneath it, leaving the rest of it uninjured, though considerably shattered.

On both sides of the embankment, below these cars, were the wounded and dying—some of them flung out violently from the wreck, others having crawled down with broken legs, while yet others had been carried to the fires by the passengers. It is shocking even to think of the scene, as it would be utterly sickening to describe the various wounds and hideous mutilations inflicted upon the poor sufferers.

Boards were placed over the tops of the seats of the uninjured cars, and upon them the mutilated sufferers, whose wants were administered to by the passengers who escaped, until the arrival of the physicians who had been sent for. The remains of the dead were laid under canvass torn from the cars.

It appears from the evidence adduced at the Coroner's Jury, that 47 persons were killed on the spot, and one has since died, making a loss of 48. Fifty-one others were taken to Chatham severely wounded, and no return is made of a number who escaped with slight injuries. Of the killed, 24 were men, 15 women, and 9 children. Of those who were wounded, and taken to Chatham, there were twenty-four men, eleven women, and sixteen children.

There is nothing to relieve the first impressions, that the Conductor of the gravel train is largely responsible for this awful disaster. The engineer remonstrated against taking the main track upon the uncertainty as to the passage of the express train, but the conductor's orders were positive, and the result is known. The public will be satisfied that the most rigid and searching investigation into every incident connected with the collision will take place.

The following is a list of the dead up to Friday noon, as furnished by the Coroner:—

J. B. Bodfish, of Batavia, N. Y., going to Galesburg, Michigan, had on person $27 29; P. Gallagher; a young woman, name unknown, had on fur gauntlets, gloves, and black silk bonnet with artificials; a man, name unknown; a woman, with dead infant, had on person two keys; a child; F. The Detroit Advertiser puts down the number of dead, up to Saturday morning, at fifty-eight.

LAUNCH.

Capt. Gaskin's new ship was launched on Saturday. The weather was all that could be desired, and every available point from which to see the noble vessel move off was occupied. A large company had also assembled on board the ship, on which was stationed the excellent band of the Canadian Rifles. The large number of vessels in harbor, at the wharves or anchored in the bay, with their bunting displayed in honour of the occasion, added much to the interest of the whole scene Shortly after three o'clock, the signal having been given to cut away, the ship moved off and glided rapidly into the water, receiving, as she started on the ways, the name of "Eliza Mary." Miss Gaskin performed the ceremony of christening. The launch was one of the most successful that we have witnessed in Kingston, and everybody was pleased with the events of the day.

The Eliza Mary is a full-rigged ship of about 900 tons measurement, and reflects much credit upon her builder, Mr. Thurston. We shall obtain and publish in another issue, the dimensions of this, the largest merchant vessel, ever built in Upper Canada.—Kingston News.

THE TOTAL CRIMEAN POPULATION is only 200,000—women and children, old men and boys, gypsies, deserters, aliens, convicts. Tartars, Jews, Greeks, Germans, monks, and serfs, all included.

The squadrons of France and England in the Chinese waters, are to proceed to Sitka to attack the Russian settlements.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

CONSTITUTION & BY-LAWS

OF THE

VICTORIA REFORM BENEVOLENT SOCIETY,

OF THE

TOWN OF CHATHAM,

For Social Relief.

Organized, January 3, 1853.

ARTICLE I

Title of Society.—Candidates for Membership.

SECTION 1. This Society shall be known and established by the name of "THE VICTORIA REFORM SOCIETY OF CHATHAM, FOR SOCIAL RELIEF."

SEC. 2. It shall not be lawful at any time to admit into the Society any person or persons who are addicted to intoxication, or have a plurality of living husbands.

SEC. 3. No person shall be admitted a member of this Society, who shall be under the age of sixteen years, or over forty five, or who shall keep a brothel, or who is affected with any disorder or sickness, inconsistent with ordinary health, or may, in all probability be come a charge to the Society.

SEC. 4. Every person making application for membership, must be recommended by a member of the Society, at any one of the meetings, and the name or names of such persons shall be handed over to the Board of Directors, to any meeting, when she shall be balloted for, (provided that her balloting shall not be contrary to any of the articles of the society) and if a majority of two-thirds of the members present shall vote in her favor, she shall be duly elected.

SEC. 5. Any person so approved of, shall not be considered a member until she shall come forward within three months from the date of her election, sign the Constitution, and pay in the initiation fee. But previous to such candidate signing the Constitution, if any member shall state to the Society what a majority of the members present deem a sufficient objection, she shall not be admitted.

SEC. 6. Whenever the Board of Directors shall report unfavorably on the case of a candidate for membership, it shall be their duty to state their reasons thereof—provided a motion to this effect is offered, and carried by a majority of the members then present.

SEC. 7. Each candidate for membership shall, before she signs the Constitution, assent to the following questions:—

Quest. 1. Will you, Mrs. J. A. Q., promise to demean yourself as a faithful and orderly member of this Society?

Quest. 2. Will you keep its secrets inviolably, endeavor to increase its members, and extend its influence, by all just and honorable means?

Quest. 3. Will you act with honesty and impartiality in whatever office or station to which you may be elected in this Society?

ARTICLE II.

Of Initiation Fees and Weekly Dues.

SECTION. 1. Each member, on her admission, shall pay to the Society, as an intiation fee, such a sum as they shall from time to time think proper to fix upon; and the further sum of seven pence half-penny monthly.

SEC. 2. A member may pay up her dues at any regular meeting, but if she neglects to do so for the space of six months, and shall after that time receive two special notices from the Secretary, her name shall be taken from the books of the Society.

ARTICLE III.

Benefits.

SECTION 1. Each member shall, at the time of signing the Constitution, or as soon after as is convenient, receive a certificate of her membership, signed by the President and Secretary.

SEC 2. No member shall be entitled to receive relief from this Society, until she has been a member one year, and has paid up all her dues; then, if sickness should prevent her from following her profession, trade, or usual employment, and she shall have been sick one week, she shall receive Five Shillings per week, for the space of three months, provided that her sickness shall continue so long; after the expiration of said three months, she shall receive two shillings and six pence per week, for the further space of three months; and if her sickness should still continue, the Society may grant her such a sum weekly, as they may think proper, the state of the funds being considered.

SEC. 3. If any person, having been a member of this Society, for two years, and paid up all her dues for that time, should be removed by death, it shall be the duty of this Society to inter her decently in the burial ground of her profession; and for this purpose, a sum of money not exceeding Three Pounds Fifteen Shillings, shall be constitutionally drawn from the funds of the Society, to be appropriated to that purpose.

ARTICLE IV.

Officers.

SECTION 1. The officers of this Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary and Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, a Board of Directors, consisting of thirteen members and a Clergyman.

SEC. 2. The election of officers shall be held annually on the first Monday in February; the candidates must be permanent residents of the Town of Chatham.

SEC. 3. There shall be a Committee of Nomination, consisting of five persons appointed at least six weeks previous to the election; it shall be the duty of said Committee to report at the next meeting ensuing that of their appointment, two several lists of candidates for the several offices of the Society, for the ensuing year: this Committee shall be selected from among the members of the Society.

SEC. 4. If there should occur an equality of votes for two candidates for the same office, the President shall in such case, designate the person elected.

SEC. 5. In case of a vacancy in any of the offices of the Society, occasioned by death, resignation, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the President, on the fact being made known to her, to call a meeting of the Society, as soon as it is convenient, for the purpose of filling the vacancy, by an election, to be conducted in the same manner as that of the regular election.

ARTICLE V.

The Duty of the President and Vice-President.

SECTION 1. The President shall preserve order and decorum in the meetings of the Society; decide on the constitutionality of all motions offered; sign all draughts upon the Treasurer, when constitutionally made out. She shall have power to call extra meetings, when she may think it expedient, or at the request of five members of the Society; and perform all other duties appertaining to her office as President.

SEC. 2. The Vice-President shall exercise the powers and duties of the President in her absence.

ARTICLE VI.

The Secretaries.

SECTION 1. The Secretaries shall receive all dues and fees paid in at the regular and extra meetings of the Society, and deposit the same with the Treasurer, always taking her receipt. She shall keep the following books, viz: First, a book containing the Bye-laws of the Society, written in a plain hand to which each member, on being admitted shall signs her name; second, a book containing an account with each member, giving credit for all payment of dues, with the date of each payment annexed thereto; third, a roll book, with a list of the members in regular columns, in which credit shall be given for payments made; fourth, a minute book, containing a fair and correct account of the transactions of each meeting; fifth, an account with the Treasurer, charging her with all monies, and giving credit for all draughts upon the Treasurer, constitutionally authorized; her books shall determine all disputes that may arise respecting the payment of dues; she shall read the Minutes of the former meeting of the Society; also, of the Board of Directors; also, reports of Sub-committees; and give two special notices to each member whose arrears shall be over six months.

SEC. 2. The Assistant Secretary shall give notice of all Special Meetings of the Society, and call over the roll at each regular meeting of the Board of Directors, and minute down the proceedings thereof; and perform the duties of the Secretary in the meetings of the Society during her absence.

ARTICLE VII.

The Treasurer.

SECTION 1. The Treasurer shall, previous to entering on the duties of her office, give a good and sufficient security for the faithful performance of her trust, in a bond to the President and Board of Directors, in such a sum as the Board of Directors shall demand; which bond shall be deposited with the President, she giving a receipt to the Board of Directors for the same. The Treasurer shall receive all monies collected for the Society; for which she shall give her receipts to the Secretary; she shall pay all draughts made upon her, on behalf of the Society, which draughts must be signed by the President of the Board of Directors, the President and Secretary, provided such draughts shall not exceed the sum of fifteen dollars, unless it is expressly authorized by a majority of the Society, at some extra meeting called for that purpose; she shall keep an exact account with the Society, giving credit for all monies received and charging all draughts paid by her, which book shall be opened to the inspection of the Board of Directors, or any Committee that may be appointed for that purpose. She shall report every three months the amount of money in the Treasury. She shall collect all interests, dividends on stock, and all other proceeds arising from the disposition of the funds of the Society; all bills, bonds and papers that may in any way appertain to the department of the Treasurer, shall remain in her custody.

ARTICLE VIII.

Of the Board of Directors.

SECTION. 1. The Board of Directors, of whom seven members present shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of ordinary business, shall meet as often and at such times as they shall think proper, or their business shall require, which shall be at least once a month; they shall repeat at each meeting of the Society, their Minutes and decision on the case of candidates for membership; they shall see that all members entitled to benefits are promptly assisted, and that no frauds are practised on the Society; they shall recommend to the Society the best mode to invest the surplus funds of the Society. All draughts for benefits shall emanate from the Board of Directors, to which their President shall sign her name; it shall be their peculiar province, to watch over the interests of the Society and its money concerns; to recommend such regulations as to counteract all attempts to impose on the Society.

SEC. 2. The Board of Directors shall keep a book, in which they shall take receipts from the persons to whom they administered benefits; they shall also report to the society, at each regular meeting, the number of sick members, that receive benefits.

ARTICLE IX.

Of the Meetings.

SECTION 1. Regular meetings of this Society shall be held in the afternoon of the first Monday in each month.

SEC. 2. Twenty members shall be necessary to form a quorum, for the purpose of taking a vote on ordinary business; but twelve members being present, shall be a number sufficient to commence the business of a Regular meeting.

ARTICLE X.

Of Expelling Members.

SECTION 1. If any member shall apply for relief to this Society, or shall receive benefits, when she was able to follow her profession, trade or occupation, or did actually follow the same, upon due proof thereof, to the Board of Directors, and their report made thereon to the Society, she shall be expelled.

SEC. 2. If any member shall be convicted in a Court of Justice, of any crime or misdemeanor, tending to injure the character of the Society, upon due proof thereof, to the Board of Directors, and their report made thereon to the Society, she shall be expelled.

SEC. 3. If any member shall refuse to come to order in the meetings of the Society, when so ordered, three times by the President or chair, she shall (if a vote passes to this effect,) be fined a sum not less than fifteen shillings; and if she shall refuse to pay such fine, within a reasonable time, she shall be expelled: Provided always, that no member, shall be expelled in any other manner, than by a vote taken at an extra meeting, called especially to consider her case; excepting the case, wherein a member shall have been twice specially notified by the Secretary to pay up her arrears over six months, and refuses to do so.

ARTICLE XI.

Chaplain.

SECTION 1. The Chaplain shall visit sick members, and give such admonition or consolation as he may think necessary, and attend at the funerals of deceased members of the Society, and inter them decently.

BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. Each member when speaking, shall stand and address the Chair, and shall not speak more than three times on any subject, unless called on by the President, or a majority of the members present.

SEC. 2. If any member shall be so imprudent as to wrangle during the time of meeting, they shall be dismissed, and shall not be permitted to meet again until proper satisfaction be given to the Board of Directors.

SEC. 3. Should any member refuse to serve in any office of the Society, after she has given her consent, and is legally elected, she shall forfeit and pay the sum of five shillings.

SEC. 4. No member of this Society shall be entitled to any relief, on account of any disease that she has imprudently brought upon herself.

SEC. 5. Any who shall be guilty of calling any other member of the Society by any improper name or names, or who shall refuse to pay her just and lawful debts, or who shall go to law with any of the members of this Society, without first complaining to the Society; for such violation, she shall forfeit, for the use of this Society, the sum of One pound five shillings, or forfeit her standing in this Society.

SEC. 6. No person or persons shall be permitted to leave the house in time of meeting on business, without permission from the President, under a less fine than seven pence half-penny.

SEC. 7. If any member by non-attendance at any of the stated meetings shall cause the book to be opened again, to receive her dues, she shall be fined three pence half-penny.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. All motions for By-laws, their repeal or amendment, shall be presented to the Society, and handed over to the Board of Directors in writing, who shall report their opinion thereon to the Society, as soon as opportunity serves, not to go over one month.

SEC. 2. No By-laws shall be passed, repealed or amended, except three-fourths of the members present shall vote for the same, and that a special meeting, called expressly for the same, and that at least one month's previous notice of the same shall be given.

SEC. 3. It shall be lawful for the Society to pass any motion contrary to these By-laws not repugnant to the plain letter of this Constitution, to keep order at any meeting for the evening while they are together.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION. 1. In case of complaint being made to the President, of the immoral conduct of any member, she shall appoint a committee of five persons, to try the accused person, and the accused and accuser shall be brought face to face, and in case of her being found guilty, she shall for the first offence be reproved by the President; for the second offence she shall pay a fine of fifteen shillings, and for the third offence she shall be expelled from the Society.

ARTICLE. IV.

SECTION 1. In order to secure the continuance of this Society, we are determined to support it while twelve persons remain as members, who will pay in their regular dues, and conform to the rules and regulations of the Society.

SEC. 2. Members of the Society moving from Chatham, within the Province, shall be entitled to half their funds remaining, provided always, that there are no outstanding dues.

SECT. 3. To further promote the object of this Society, a Sewing circle shall be formed in connection the ewith.

H. CORDELIA HANDSBROW, President.
MRS. BAILY, Vice-President.
MRS. CHARLOTTE HUNTON, Treasurer.

MRS. MARY HUNTON, Marshal.

CONSTITUTION

OF THE

Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Plea[s]:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of [illegible] to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a Brotherhood not based on complexion—[illegible] imperative duty now resting upon us to throw the [illegible] arraying to array one class of Her Majesty's [illegible] against another—[illegible] of [illegible] 1st. To [illegible] Freedom [illegible] 2d. To encourage and support a Press, or those Press's, in Canada, which will stand on the watch tower to warn the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for [illegible] herein to build, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition, or to angrily call themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Law; 3rd. Board America, unless those of darker line, [illegible] 4th. To [illegible] of white people in the United States. To aid in the power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts—6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures the Provincial Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. curr'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

} Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent. every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on an assignment made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

9. The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars afterwards, shall [illegible] with two names to the President of the Society of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent. on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent. on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Committee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations, [illegible] and shall transmit all such donations to the Treasurer [illegible] said. They shall receive [illegible] per cent. on all such donations [illegible]

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him: and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Alienated American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may [illegible] at [illegible] to three thousand [illegible] of whom are located in the [illegible] Toronto, and other places along the Canada frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always inflicted in the case of Fugitives to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States; (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men successfully, and honorably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Country—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIFFIN of St Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev, THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

PRESIDENT.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

It was moved by the Rev. J. Wemberley, Rector of Dorrington, seconded by the Rev. George Wilkins, and adopted:—

"That the best thanks of this Meeting be presented to the Earl of Shaftesbury, for his kindness in presiding on the present occasion."

Poetry.

THE EARLY DEAD.

Weep for the early dead!
To ease the anguished heart of its wild pain,
Let the swift tears, like falling autumn rain,
In mournfulness be shed.

Weep for yourselves alone—
Not for a loved one, freed from sin and tears,
Shall bow henceforth through the eternal years,
Low at our Father's throne.

Weep for the love that gave
It genial sunlight to time's darkened way;
Fond and enduring, strengthening day by day,
Through suffering, to the grave!

Joy that the soul is free!
That the worn frame hath laid life's burden down;
That a fair, noble brow hath now its crown
Of immortality.

How beautiful is Death,
When round the fainting lips an angel's smile
Seems deepening with a holier light the while,
As ebbs the weary breath.

How blessed is life's close;
The heart by cares no longer is opprest,
And manhood's hands lie folded o'er the breast,
As with a child's repose.

The fair earth groweth dim—
Soon the white footsteps of the wintry storm
Stirring sere leaves above his sleeping form,
Shall hymn his requeim.

And Spring shall come again,
With sudden smile—prophet of glorious hours;
And Summer on her throne of blushing flowers,
Resume her charmed reign.

And yet he shall not wake!
The soul that shares Heaven's gladness far away,
Would ne'er reanimate the sleeping clay,
E'er for the mourner's sake.

Turn then in faith to heaven.
Think of that hour when those who part in pain,
By suffering sanctified, shall meet again,
Where endless rest is given.

Miscellaneous.

Mid-October Days.

BY HENRY WARD BRECHER.

At this season of the year great changes are wrought upon the face of nature in a few weeks, or even in a few days. Lenox, in the middle of September, stood in untarnished green. Grass and flowers were plump and succulent with copious juices. Here and there a coquette of a leaf displayed gay colours among its yet sober maple leaves. A shade of yellow, a bright streak of red, might be seen in single trees, as if nature, like an artist, was trying its colours to make sure of the right shades before laying them on the gorgeous canvass. Yet all these made no impressions on the vast front of the mountains around us, that still lay patiently, like mighty dromedaries camped down against the horizon—a caravan that shall never rise up to the voice of a driver, nor move, till He who formed them shall scatter them!

It is now mid-October. All things are changed. Of all the railroads near New York none can compare for beauty of scenery with the Housatonic from Newton up to Pittsfield, but especially from New Milford to Lenox.

The scenery now seemed enchanted. The Housatonic was the same. The skies the same. The mountain farms the same. But they had blossomed into resplendent colours from top to base. It seemed strange to see such majestic things, that seem always images of firmness and majesty, now tricked out with fairy pomp as if all the spirits of the air had revelled there, and hung their glowing scarfs on every leaf and bough.

Once more I am upon this serene hill-top. The air is very clear, very still, and very solemn, or rather, tenderly sad, in its brightness. It is not that moist spring air, full of the smell of wood, of the soil, and of vegation brought from the South. It is not that summer atmosphere, full of alternations of haze and fervent clearness, as if nature were brewing every day some influence for its myriad paths, and falling sometimes in showers, and sometimes with coercive heat upon root and leaf; and, like an universal task-master, was driving up the hours to accomplish the labours of the year. No! In these autumn days there is a sense of leisure and of meditation. The sun seems to look down upon the labours of its fiery hands with complacency. Be satisfied, O seasonable sun! Thou hast shaped an ample year, and art garnering up harvests which well may swell thy rejoicing heart with gracious gladness.

One who breaks off in the summer, and returns in autumn to the hills, needs almost to come to a new acquaintance with the most familiar things. It is another world, or it is the old world, a masquerading; and you halt, like one scrutinizing a distinguished friend, between the obvious dissemblance and the subtle likeness.

There stood two elms leaning their branches toward each other, forming a glorious arch of green. Now in faint yellow, they grow attenuated, and seem as if departing; fading out of sight, as trees do in twilight. Yonder, over against that young growth of birch and evergreen, stood all summer a perfect maple tree, rounded out on every side, thick with luxuriant foliage, and dark with greenness, save when the morning sun, streaming through it, sent transparency through its very heart. Now it is a tower of gorgeous red. So sober and solemn did it seem all summer that I should as soon have thought to see a prophet dancing at a peasant's holiday, as it disfigured to such intense gayety! Its fellows, too, the birches and the walnuts, burn from head to foot with fires that glow but never consume.

But these holiday hills! Have the evening clouds suffused with sun-set, dropt down fixed into solid forms? Have the rainbows that followed autumn storms faded upon the mountains and left their mantles there? Yet, with all their brilliancy, how modest do they seem—patient when bare, or burdened with winter; cheerful when flushed with summer green; and modest still when they lift up their wreathed and crowned heads on the resplendent days of autumn?

I stand alone upon the peaceful summit of this hill, and turn in every direction. The east is all aglow; the blue north flushes all her hills with radiance; the west stands in burnished armour: the southern hills buckle the zone of the horizon together with emeralds and rubies, such as were never set in the fabled girdle of the gods! Of gazing there cannot be enough. The hunger of the eyes grows by feeding.

Only the brotherhood of evergreen—the pine, the cedar, the spruce, and the hemlock—refuses to join this universal revel. They wear their sober green straight through fall and winter, as if they were set to keep open the path of summer through the whole year, and girdle all seasons together with a clasp of endless green. But in vain do they give solemn examples to the merry leaves that frolic with every breeze that runs sweet riot in the glowing shades. Gay leaves will not be counselled, but will die bright and laughing. But both together—the transfigured leaves of deciduous trees and the calm, unchangableness of ever green—how more beautiful are they than either alone! The solemn pine brings colour to the cheek of the beech, and the scarlet and golden maple rests gracefully upon the dark foliage of the million-figured pine.

All summer long these leaves have wrought their tasks. They have plied their laboratory, and then that old chemist, the sun, hath prepared all the juices of the trees. Now is their play-spell. Nature gives them a jubilee. It is a concert of colours for the eye. What a mighty chorus do they roll down the valleys, up the hill-sides, and over the mountains!

Before October we sought and found colours in single tones; in iris-winking dewdrops, in westward trooping clouds. But when the year, having wrought and finished her solid structures, unbends and consecrates the glad October months to fancy, then all hues that were before scattered in lurking flowers in clouds, upon plumed birds, and burnished insects, are set loose like a flood and poured abroad in the wild magnificence of Divine bounty. And the earth lifts up its head crowned as no monarch was ever crowned, and the seasons go forth toward winter, chanting to God a hymn of praise that may fitly carry with it the hearts of all men and bring forth in kindred joy the sympathetic spirits of the dead.

These are the days that one fain would be loose from the earth, and wander as a spirit, or lie bedded in some buoyant cloud, to float above the vast expanse, in the silence of the upper air. Now would we be voyagers, pursuing the seasons through all their latitudes, and no longer stand to wait their coming and going about our fixed habitations.—Independent.

The Tragedy of Life.

The correspondent of the London Art Journal, writing from Rome, and describing the studies of celebrated artists, thus portrays one whom the envious would not be likely to disparage:

"As yet fame and prosperity had attended the efforts of those artists whose studios we had visited. But a sad change was now to meet us as we picked our steps along an unutterably broken up, dirty lane, and then groped our way up a dark winding staircase to the next studio on our list. We were admitted with all the eagerness of that 'hope delayed which maketh the heart sick.' There was an anxious, wan look about the pretty woman (evidently the painter's wife) who received us, and then instantly withdrew. The rooms seemed cold and bare, even for Italian rooms: no carpet covered the brick floor, little furniture appeared anywhere, the only embellishments were several large fresh pictures in old frames, all unsold productions of a meritorious but neglected artist. He—a poor, thin, shrivelled, grey-haired man, sat painting in his little studio, dressed in a threadbare coat, and rose evidently startled and surprised at the entrance of visitors; it was easy to see that few came his way! A fine, spirited picture of the Campagna, with admirable groups of cattle and peasants in the foreground, drawn like Paul Potter, and excellently colored, stood on the easel. Had this poor man been the fashion, how much and how justly would his picture have been praised? I asked him if it was a commission: 'No, I never have any commissions now,' he replied, with a heavy sigh. 'Was he going to send it to the exhibition of the Royal Academy?' 'No, for he could not afford the expense, and he had no friend to insure even a tolerable place.' I felt quite touched, but only ventured to say that I warmly and sincerely admired the picture on his easel.

"A pale gleam of pleasure stole across his face, and then faded out like the flame of a wasted lamp. On the walls were beautiful sketches of landscapes and animals—one, a blood red sunset, with an old ruin darkening the foreground, I admired greatly. I ought to add that this poor neglected man is one of the best animal painters alive, after Landseer. He has engraved a series of etchings that prove his talent; and there is a great picture by him of men on horseback chasing a drove of wild bullocks, galloping down into the foreground, which is really admirable. But what matters all this? it is too late now; the iron has entered into his soul, and he is pining, old, and broken-hearted.

"In a corner of the studio was a lovely female face, just sketched in. 'I shall never finish that portrait, begun twenty years ago now,' and he sighed again. I understood the allusion: that picture was the representation of the face which had been his fate. When it was begun, he was a rising artist, received in the magnificent saloons of a certain wealthy Roman nobleman, on a footing equality with the rest of his professional brethren. The original of the head we were now looking at was a beautiful model who often sat to him, and whom he regarded with the lover's as well as the artist's eye. She was very good, very virtuous, sitting only for that fatal face which worked him such woe. At last he married the model: he was proud of his fair and honest wife, and in a moment of imprudent but pardonable enthusiasm, he took her with him to one of the great Roman nobleman's parties. Had she not been so surpassingly lovely, she might have passed unnoticed; but as it was, all eyes were bent upon her: a buzz went round the room of wonder and admiration, but with it there mingled gradually a whisper that the beauty had been a model.

"Both husband and wife were desired to withdraw, and from that day the painter's fate was sealed; no one employed him, no one received him; solitary and poor, he worked on, and children were born, and debts contracted, and misery gathered like a dark cloud around his household, until he became the poor, pinched, faded man whom I now saw. It was his beautiful wife who had opened the door and then quickly left us. Time had laid his heavy finger on her, too. We had no opportunity of seeing more of her, for she never showed herself again at our departure. What a world of wretchedness there is in all this, even as I write it; and yet every word is strictly, positively true.

Biography of Sir John Franklin.

The reported discovery of the remains of this illustrious navigator—whatever doubts may be thrown upon this credibility of the narrative—furnishes a suitable occasion for collecting the scanty details of his biography, which have thus far been communicated to the public. Sir John Franklin was born in 1786, and would accordingly have been 68 years of age had he survived to the present time. His native place was Spilsby, a small town in Lincolnshire, in the vicinity of the North Sea. From his earliest years he betrayed a certain boldness of disposition and love of adventure. His father endeavored to cure him of his sea-faring propensities, by permitting him to try the experiment of a voyage to Lisbon in a trading vessel. But this only produced the opposite effect. He was confirmed in his taste for the ocean, and would not be satisfied until he had procured the consent of his father to his entering the navy. He obtained a midshipman's warrant in his fourteenth year. His first service was in the frigate Polypheme, where he was distinguished for his youthful courage and energy. He was in the battle of Copenhagan in 1801, and two years after accompanied his relative, Capt. Flinders, on a voyage of discovery to the South Sea, during which he was shipwrecked on the coast of New-Holland. At a subsequent period, he was in the Bellerophon at the battle of Trafalgar. In 1814 he was a lieutenant in the Bedford, which brought the allied monarchs to England. He was concerned in the attack on New-Orleans, where he gained great credit by his bravery and skill. In 1818 he commanded the brig Trent in the Polar Expedition under Capt. Buchan. After the failure of the search for the North-West Passage by Capt. Ross, he received the commission in 1810, to undertake an expedition by land from Hudson's Bay to the mouth of the Copper Mine River, in conjunction with Richardson and Bach, to co-operate with Capt. Parry, who was to visit the region by water. On this expedition he followed the coast as far as Cape Turnagain, 68° 30 north latitude, and after incredible hardships, having been once rescued from death by the Indians, he returned to England in 1822. He was promoted to the rank of Post-Captain, and three years after undertook a second expedition to the Polar Sea, visiting the coast between Mackenzie River and the Copper Mine River. By the middle of Aug. 1827, he had reached the seventeenth degree of latitude, and the one hundred and fiftieth degree of longitude, but was compelled to return by the early setting in of extreme cold weather. In recognition of his merits on this expedition he received the order of knighthood from George the Fourth. In 1830 he commanded a ship of the line in the Mediterranean, and afterward was appointed Governor of Van Diemen's Land, from which post he was recalled in March, 1843. Returning to England in the spring of 1845 he was entrusted with the command of the fatal expedition in which his life has fallen a sacrifice.

The two vessels, Erebus and Terror, in which the younger Ross had accomplished his expedition to the South Pole, were selected for the voyage, and two distinguished officers, captains Crozier and Fitzjames, were appointed as his companions. The expedition sailed on the 19th of May, 1845, arrived at the Whale Fish Islands on the 4th of July, and was seen for the last time in Mellville Bay, on the 26th of that month. It was not until after the return of Capt. Ross in 1849, who had been sent in search of the missing navigators, that general anxiety was felt for their safety. In 1850 an expedition was fitted out by Lady Franklin, and another by the British Government to seek the lost vessels. About the same time, our townsmen, Mr. Henry Grinnell, dispatched the two ships Advance and Rescue for the same purpose. The unsuccessful result of these expeditions is well known. During the past year a large fleet was sent out by the British Government, to make renewed search for Sir John Franklin. Mr. Grinnell also despatched the Advance, under the command of Dr. Cane, on a similar errand. But all in vain. Before the announcement of this recent intelligence no further hope was cherished that the lives of the brave explorers had been preserved. Their names were some time since stricken from the Admirality list, and orders issued for the recall of the Expeditions.

SEBASTOPOL—Its Position and Strength.

Nearly due east of the Bosphorous, snugly placed in a deep indentation of the chalk hills of the Crimea, was planted, by the foresight of Catherine II., the important naval station of Sebastopol; which, hardly inferior in strength to Cronstadt, is of even greater consequence, as being the point whence have been destined to issue the Russian fleets that autocratic ambition would direct against his most coveted prize. The minarets of Stamboul may almost be descried from the rocky cliffs of this Russian port: and from the prevalence of easterly winds assisted also by the current that races through the narrow straits between Asia and Europe, it occupies such a position of ventage as would enable it to send forth its fleets whenever the moment appears opportune.

Such was what, without doubt, determined the intelligent Catherine in selecting a site for her principal naval nursery, and her successors have carefully followed her policy. It was from Sebastopol, it will be remembered, that the fleet sailed which destroyed the Turkish squadron lying in the harbor of Sinople. To Sebastopol the same fleet returned in triumph, and from thence, sheltered by the powerful batteries that guard the port, it has continued to defy the united strength of the French and English squadrons. It is somewhat extraordinary that in anticipation of a naval battle we should be compelled to seek for men-of-war under the guns of land batteries; it was not thus that navies had been used to contend for the dominion of the seas—but Russian sailors, it appears, can be brought to battle upon no other terms; and thence, as an important element in such a contest, we are obliged to consider the strength of the fortified ports to which they have fled for protection. Such, in the estimation of military men, are large odds against the Allies, and it may well be considered doubtful if an attack from sea upon Cronstadt will earn for any British admiral the fame of the conqueror of St. Jean d'Acre. The following is a very interesting and concise description of the Russian stronghold in the Black Sea, and there is every probability that by the next mail it will appear to have been the scene of a most desperate conflict.

Sebastopol, the famous stronghold of the Russians in the Black Sea, is one of the most modern creations in the rapidly growing empire of the Czar, its site until 1786 having been occupied by nothing more pretentious than a miserable village of Tartar huts, named Akhtier. The splendid natural advantages of its harbor for a first rate naval port, however, attracted the keen attention of Catherine II., and in 1780 the first stone of the new fortress and arsenal was laid, and from that period it has rapidly increased in strength and importance. Sebastopol is situated on the western coast of the peninsula of the Crimea, in an amphitheatre to the south of the harbor, extending along a point of land which separates the Bay Yujnaia-Bukhta, which forms the port, from Artillery Bay, a small indentation on the other side.

The town stands on a chalky stratum, which rises from a height of thirty feet at the extremity of the point to an elevation of one hundred and ninety feet above the sea in the upper part. This elevation, with the steep coast opposite, which also consists of a calcareous rock, perfectly defends the bay, which, from the summit of the heights, appears to lie at the bottom of a deep cavity, and, indeed, at a very short distance from the shore inland it is impossible to perceive the tops of the highest masts. The town is composed of parallel streets running up the steep acclivity, and is divided into quarters by a few transversed streets Near the extremity of the point of land stands the House built in 1786 for the reception of the Empress Catherine II.

Behind are situated the admiralty, the arsenal and the houses of the naval officials, while higher up are the dwellings of the inhabitants of the town, the market and the Greek Church, besides which there is a Russian Church for the use of the sailors belonging to the Black Sea fleet. The seamen's hospitals and barracks of the garrison, built a short distance from the former, compose a suburb. Outside the town, towards Artillery bay, are the quarters of the artillery corps, a few private houses, the quarrantine station, and scattered here and there upon the shore opposite the roadstead, the country houses and gardens of the officers of the dockyard and arsenal. The town of Sebastopol itself is not much above a mile in length, and is nowhere more than four hundred yards wide, but neither the regimental barracks, erected about a mile and a half from the upper part of the town, nor the hospitals are included within thiss pace.

The harbor, as being the most important feature of Sebastopol, and which, has been compared to that of Malta, merits a more minute description. The principal bay is about three miles and a half in depth with a width of three quarters of a mile and then narrowing to six hundred or seven hundred at the head. The average depth at as far as the ancient village of Akhtier, where the naval magazines now are, it is about nine fathoms, and from there diminishes gradually between the two ports to three fathoms. There is not a rock or shoal in the whole harbor, except opposite the Severnain Kossa, or northern point, where there is a small sand bank, which ships entering the bay have to avoid, and where the sailors find abundance of fish. At the further end of the port the water becomes gradually shallower, in the direction of Inkerman, and near the little river of Cyjugusen, is not more than a yard or a half in depth, with a muddy bottom.

The entrance to the harbor is defended by strong batteries placed at the extremities of the two points of land that form the bay. Besides these there is another fronting the town, and two more on the double point on which the town stands, with a redoubt higher up. One of these batteries, which is semi-circular, also defends Artillery bay. The large harbor, as well as the lesser, is perfectly protected from all winds by the chalk rocks which surround it, and which rise to a greater height more inland, so that it is only on the rare occurrence of a tempest from the west that any danger can be occasioned to the shipping in the bay. About a mile from the mouth of the grand port for vessels of war forms a sort of small arm, running in a southwest direction.

This arm, which the Tartars used to call Kartali-Kosb (Vulture bay) is now Yuuaia-Bukhta, or Southport. It is upwards of a mile and a half in length, with a width of four hundred yards at the entrance, and has a little narrow creek of about six hundred yards in length, in which ships can be laid up in ordinary with perfect safety. On the other side of the town, in Artillery bay, in a similar creek used to careen vessels of war, for the purpose of cleansing and scorching their bottoms. The sea worm teredo navalis, which pierces submerged wood, exists in large numbers in the Black Sea, especially along the shores of the Crimea, and in the harbor of Sebastopol. In less than two years, if a vessel is not copper-sheathed, these worms, pierce through the whole of the outer timbers. Hence it is found necessary to counteract their operations by careening the vessel every two years, and scorching the outside with pitch and juniper wood.

The situation of Sebastopol on dry soil, causes it to be extremely healthy, the air being tempered in summer by cooling winds, and softened in winter by the shelter of lofty hills to the north and east. The greatest heat in summer does not exceed twenty-six degrees of Reaumur, (77 1-2 F.) Land and sea breezes alternate successively, morning and evening, cooling the air.

Welcome to Wm. Wells Brown.

Great Meeting for the reception of Wm. Wells Brown, on his return from Europe, in Philadelphia, Brick Wesley Church, October 17th.

Arrangements having been made by the Vigilance Committee of Philadelphia for a public meeting in the Brick Wesley Church, it was crowded to its utmost capacity, with the friends of Mr. Brown, and the public generally, to extend to him the most cordial token of regard. The fact that he had so faithfully and nobly represented his enslaved countrymen, while in Europe, was too obvious, in the estimation of those who had assembled to welcome and greet him on his return, to admit of a shadow of doubt. During the five years that Mr. Brown had passed in Europe, his numerous friends, especially the coloured man, have great cause of satisfaction and gratication, in looking over his labours; as a lecturer, presenting the claims of his brethren in bonds; as an author, constantly using his pen in enlightening the British people on the monstrous iniquities of slavery, likewise contributing to the demands of literature and knowledge in other respects—two of his works having been published and creditably noticed by the press of Great Britain. As a father, he seems to have been remarkably successful in educating his daughters, fitting them to fill any literary position in life that their talents may entitle them to. Therefore, it was in view of Mr. Brown's fidelity and efficiency in the anti-slavery cause—his bravery in returning to the land of prejudice and oppression, to labour on, in pleading the cause of the down-trodden—that the great assemblage seemed to be led captive by him.

In opening the meeting, before Mr. Brown had been introduced, Mr. J. C. White, of the Vigilance Committee, briefly set forth the duties and requirements of the Committee, and hoped that something tangible would be done, on the present occasion, in favor of escaping fugitives, the number constantly claiming aid from the Committee being very great, &c. Mr. White then announced that Mr. Robert Purvis, Chairman of the Committee, would preside on the present occasion. On Mr. Garrison entering the church, the audience heartily cheered him, being evidenly highly delighted with his presence, and the assurance that he was to address them. On quiet being restored, the chairman introduced Mr. Brown, in a brief, though enthusiastic speech—heartily assuring him of the unwavering confidence his friends had reposed in him during his labours abroad, and the pleasure he felt, on behalf of the audience, of extending his right hand to give him a cordial welcome home.

Mr. Brown said:

"Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen, on my return from Europe, a few weeks since, we encountered very rough weather for the season of the year. For several days the clouds obscured the sky, the wind blew, and the waves run mountains high, so that the captain was unable to ascertain the latitude in which he was, or the distance he had run. However, one morning the clouds cleared away, the sun appeared, and the waves ceased. The captain then came on deck, with glass in hand, to take the sun, and find out the longitude and the distance. We, the coloured people of this country, have been out upon an experimental voyage, and for more than two centuries we have been surrounded by the most boisterous weather, with clouds obscuring from our gaze the sun of freedom, and our bark in a leaky condition, seeking a safe harbor. Let us, my friends, stop and take the sun, and see where we are. Our fathers, torn from their native country, and brought to this, were made the 'hewers of wood and drawers of water.' We, their children, are following in their footsteps. It was said, seventy years ago, that Christianity would cause slavery to cease. The Gospel, it was said, would wipe out the stain from the escutcheon of the country; but behold the result. This nation started with half a million of slaves, and to-day there are more than three millions, and this increase, too, under the preaching of the American Gospel. My friends, how could it be otherwise? Look at the tendency of this Gospel, and the cause is obvious. From Andover down to the man who teaches Theology on his "own hook," the world has been taught that slavery is God-ordained. Moses Stuart was for more than 40 years preparing men to teach this most infamous doctrine. Go to the fashionable churches in our cities, and you will see that those who worship there believe what has been taught them by the 'Negro pew,' or the isolated gallery that you will there find. 'Slavery is the corner stone of our Republican Institutions,' said a church member. 'Two hundred years have sanctioned and sanctified Negro Slavery,' says another; and to-day, the cardinal principle of American religion is to teach man to enslave his fellow man. In politics as well as religion, we are denied our equality. What Court of Justice in the United States ever thinks of selecting coloured men as jurors? In Great Britain, if a foreigner is to be tried for an offence, one-half of his jury is drawn from amongst his own countrymen. Here, we are tried by men who are taught to hate us, and who never entertain the idea that we should have justice. The churches, schools, social circle, and all places where we should seek improvemnnt, are shut against us. One thing is certain, and that is, our own education and elevation is to be one of the main levers to overthrow the institution of slavery in these United States. Then let us be true to ourselves and to the cause of our enslaved countrymen. By all means let us prove that we are worthy co-operators with the noble band who are advocating our rights. I am glad, my friends, that you have given such an enthusiastic welcome to our staunch friend, Mr. Garrison, to-night. We need union in this contest with the monster slavery, especially when we see it not content with keeping the ground it formerly occupied, but now seeking to spread itself over soil heretofore consecrated to freedom. The eye of the viper is now on Hayti, that government of people who had shown themselves such worthy recipients of liberty. If the Dominican Republican attempts to give the American Government a foothold in St. Domingo, let us hope that the Emperor of Hayti will put a stop to it. And if he gets into a war with them, and this nation interferes, let not only our prayers, but our sympathy, and if needs be, let our arms speak for the Haytians. Your Vigilance Committee was formed for a high and grand purpose. What can be nobler than to help men and women who are escaping from the oppession of the Southern States of this confederacy? Then give of your abundance, that this association may be able to assist those who need their aid. You, no doubt, expect to hear from me something about Europe. (And here Mr. Brown narrated some of his experience abroad; showing that prejudice was unknown in Europe, and that every man was treated according to his merits and not according to complexion.) I might have remained abroad, said Mr. Brown, and kept out of the danger of the Fugitive Slave Law, for no colored person is safe, even though he may have been purchased, but I wanted to be here in the contest; I felt that duty called me home, and here I am. For the invitation which you extended to me, and the hearty welcome that you have given me, I am truly thankful to you. Before we separate to-night, let us renew our determination to devote our lives and our energies to the cause of human freedom. Let us ask ourselves what we are doing How many of us takes anti-slavery papers? Who of us takes the Anti-Slavery Standard or the Liberator? Friends, let us 'remember those in bonds as bound with them'"

While Mr. Brown was delivering his able and interesting speech, of which the above is but a brief synopsis, the audience manifested the warmest pleasure, which elicited frequent cheers, &c. On the conclusion of Mr. B.'s remarks, Mr. Garrison was introduced, as the great Pioneer and unflinching advocate of the coloured man's rights. The interest evinced by the audience throughout his remarks was quite manifest, and brought forth loud and frequent cheers. It is needless to say that his speech was one of great force and reason, carrying the obvious evidence to his hearers that his heart was on the present occasion, as in days past, deeply interested in the cause of the oppressed.

In conclusion, Mr. McKim offered the following Resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, after which the audience retired:

"Resolved, That we rejoice in the opportunity afforded by this meeting of greeting our friend Mr. Wm. Wells Brown, on his return to this country, and that we hereby avail ourselves of it to extend to him our heartiest assurances of welcome."

"Resolved, That our thanks are due to Mr. Brown for the zeal and fidelity with which he has advocated the cause of freedom and the interests of the coloured man in Great Britain, and that we are severally grateful to him for leaving a country where a black man labours under no disabilities, and where there is no prejudice against colour, to return to this land of slavery and labour for the disenthralment of his brethren from the hate of the white man, and the chains of the slaveholder."

"Resolved, That we are happy to have with us, on this occasion, our ever faithful friend, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, the pioneer of freedom and the eloquent champion of the black man's rights, and that we take this occasion of renewing to him the expression of our affectionate regard and implicit confidence."

"Resolved, That the Vigilance Committee of Philadelphia, which has made its appeal to us this evening, is an organization in the highest degree deserving of support, and every opportunity should be taken by the friends of freedom to increase its efficiency."

The Dominican Project.

At last, we are enabled to furnish the public with intelligence of a somewhat positive character concerning the negotiations of Mr. Pierce's Commissioner in Dominica. We give in this paper the letters of two correspondents in that island, both of whom it is proper that we should vouch for as sure to be informed upon the subjects whereof they write, who represent opposite views of the slavery question in general, as well as of the real object contemplated by Mr. Cazneau's diplomacy. The one informs us that by dint of lavish bribes to the negro functionaries of the Dominican Government, the Commissioner has secured for the United States the right to establish naval and military depots in the northern part of the island, which includes, of course, the peninsula of Samana and the mountainous region, rich in metals, but very sparsely populated by herdsmen and woodcutters, known as the Department of the Cibao. The purpose of this acquisition, according to our correspondent, is to have a basis for warlike operations against the neighboring Spanish islands; the conquest of which, according to the intention of our negro-driving filibusters, is to be followed by the annexation, peaceable or forcible, of St. Domingo itself.

Our second letter contains the additional information that the treaty provides for the full recognition of Dominica by the American Government; and, while saying nothing of grants of territory for naval depots or fortified posts, lets us know that Americans are to be allowed to hold and cultivate land and work mines in that country without being required to become naturalized. In other words, they will enjoy all the advantages of citizenship, with others to which citizens cannot lay claim; and it is doubtless expected that the mines of the country, once so productive, but so long buried in forgetfulness, will attract theither a great crowd of adventurers, who may be used afterward not only against Cuba and Porto Rico, but for the subjugation of the present negro and mulatto proprietors of the island, and the introduction there of that peculiar institution, which our Southern philosophers extol as alone calculated to bless and elevate the negro. Our correspondent attempts to propitiate those whose weakness is supposed to be a love of the African, by representing this great speculation as particularly designed for his benefit; but this little dodge of sophism is rather too transparent. Nobody will be deluded by the idea that our surplus blacks will emigrate to the forests of mahogany or the mines of gold that form the now worthless treasures of the Cibao. It is possible that negroes may in time be carried there from this country, but not till after the law abolishing the slave trade has been abrogated. Nor, indeed, is it certain that the island will even then open a new market to our slave-breeders, for, ere that time, the question of reopening the traffic which Africa may have been settled contrary to their interests, and in favor of the free trade principles advocated by the slave-consuming States further South.

The first point to be settled by Congress in regard to this treaty will be on the recognition of the Dominican Government; and we trust the friends of freedom will then be prepared to take a decided position. There would seem to be no good reason why that Government should not be recognized; but there are others which have a prior right. Hayti, which, of all portions of America, was the first to follow our example by establishing her independence, and which has maintained it for half a century, certainly merits far more than Dominica that we should acknowledge her existence. Liberia, too, the only colony off this continent that we have ever founded, a successful experiment in republican government, and a most hopeful agent in the civilization of Africa, has claims upon us, which, common sense, seem quite imperative; and yet, we have never admitted her to international relations. The reason for this injustice is no doubt a plain one. Both these States are inhabited and administered by negroes; and, as we hold three or four millions of that race in brutal bondage, we cannot afford to receive individual members of it on equal terms as diplomatic agents or consuls. Hence it is that we have never recognized either Hayti or Liberia; but, if we are now to depart from our established policy, and to admit negro governments into fellowship, it will hardly do to extend that civility only to the youngest and least deserving of them, for the mere reasons that it is the one we mean first to plunder and overthrow.

It is time that the people of the North were fully aroused to the nature of the schemes for extending and strengthening the institution of slavery, in which it is proposed to involve them. It is vain to say that these schemes are imaginary, and exist only in the brains of fanatical alarmists. The annexation of Texas, the Mexican war, and the passage of the Nebraska Bill, all accomplished by the same restless, encroaching and insatiable power, must have passed from the memory of those who now seek to lull the public mind into repose and confidence, by crying peace, peace, when peace there is none. There is no enterprise too quixotic, no plot too monstrous, no outrage too audacious, no national wrong too dark, to be attempted when the perpetuation of slavery is its end.

It is an old saying, that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, but the recent history and legislation of this country should only serve to render its warning more solemn, and its wisdom more impressive.

From the Baltimore Patriot.

The Dominican Republic.

A correspondent in the Island of St. Domingo has been so kind as to communicate, through our columns, an authentic account of the relations between the Government of that Island and the American Commissioner. As the public has been in uncertainty whether the treaty alleged to have been negotiated annexed the Island unconditionally, or merely obtained the rights of deposit and of commercial intercourse, we can state, upon the authority of our correspondent, that the treaty of annexation was defeated, and that the only convention negotiated opens to our citizens a country represented to be rich in mineral and staple products.

Of the inducements to immigration and investment set forth in the letter, there can be no doubt. The acquisition of such a country by open and honorable purchase would do much to supply the want of certain staple productions, and this nothing but an unfortunate sectional question prevents us from effecting, while our commercial rivals, by fomenting our own feuds and the prejudices of the Spanish race against us, obtain a practical monopoly of all the advantages. Coffee lands at $3 per acre, equal to those of Cuba, are certainly a temptation to the purchaser. The letter may be relied on as authentic, so far as it affirms facts. The opinions expressed are, of course, those of the correspondent, in some instances, perhaps, adopted with an imperfect knowledge of events which have transpired, and which, if known, might have modified them.

SAN CHRISTOVAL, (Dominican Republic.) September 17, 1854.

The Dominican Congress has adjourned, and the member for this district has returned home with the intelligence that five colleagues were frightened out of the treaty almost concluded with the United States. He says the British Consul, Sir Robert Schomburg, told the members not to treat with the United States, or England and France would set the Haytien negroes upon them—or rather, he said, the negro army was forty thousand strong, and would not leave a drop of white blood on the Island, if European influence did not hold them back. Senor —— also said the Dominicans had agreed that our people should be free to hold lands and mines without losing in any degree their nationality, and also the Congress had, at the instance of the American Commissioner, Gen. Cazneau, placed the mining laws in a shape to give American workmen and capitalists the pick and rule of the mineral wealth of the Island. All Hayti is a pile of rich mines. Salt, sulphur, iron, copper, or gold, is found in almost every hill. What more than such concessions as these could Gen. Cazneau ask ar expect? He lives entirely among the Dominicans, and his house is always so full of officers that he seems almost a member of the Government himself. He knows the situation of the country, and he ought to be contented with having negotiated and made popular a treaty which gives to our citizens, all the benefits of a new California, without any trouble or expense to our Government.

There are some famous caverns near this place, and also a mountain of copper, which all strangers come to see, for it is only twenty miles from St. Domingo City. The British Consul's right-hand man is here now, only to look at the caves, as he says, but he is very busy telling the old woman who live by picking up gold dust after the rains, that the Americans are coming to make slaves of them, and that the colored people had better be left under Hayti than the cruel Yankees.

This town has had a taste of the Haytiens, and are in no hurry to have them for masters again. They saw the white women collected and tied together, and driven off in a long file by a heard of negroes, and no one ever knew their exact fate. The bravest of them provoked their savage masters to kill them at once, but some others were known to drag out their miserable lives under the whip, like ill-treated slaves, on the country patches of the negroes. No negro was responsible by negro law for the murder or maltreatment of even a mulatto, much less of a white person. The cruelties which the mixed bloods suffered in attempting to hide and protect some white families of San Christoval and Santo Domingo, are still recounted with horror by all colors, and both whites and blacks are afraid to have them come back again.

The British Consul's plan, to hoist the Haytien flag, will not work if the American Cabinet does its duty, and recognises the Dominican Republic. But what will it say to the fair seeming professions of friendship England is making? Or, will it shut its eyes, and refuse to see this impudent effort to negroize Eastern Hayti? It has redeemed itself from its African master by its own efforts, and the United States ought either to take it by the hand in good faith, or come out honestly and say it is willing to let the negroes take and keep and barbarize the whole West Indies.

It is said all through the island that General Cazneau demanded the cession of the bay and peninsula of Samana, but Senor ——, of the Dominican Senate, tells me that this is untrue, and that the report originated in the circumstance of the frigate Columbia going round there as soon as it had landed Gen. Cazneau, the American Commissioner, without communicating this intention to the authorities. Couriers were despatched by the local officers, with reports that the Columbia people were examining the coal and other mines, and said they should plant the American flag before they left.

The whole country was once offered to the United States, through the same Gen. Cazneau, when he was travelling on the island, and he refused to be the bearer of the proposition, and discouraged the Dominicans from making the offer, saying the United States would rather see them independent and prosperous members of the great family of American nations. This idea has got into their heads, and all the leading Dominicans are full of the American system and Pierce's inaugural, and now this gentleman does not seem to stand up to his own programme. The Dominican Republic is willing to annex out and out, or it is willing, upon being recognised, to give to our citizens all the benefits of an additional State to the Union, without any cost or responsibility whatever, and yet he hesitates and permits Congress to adjourn before he signs the treaty, although it is one he has shaped out himself, and is better than any other I have ever seen for American interests.

Land that is worth $40 or $50 an acre in Cuba, for coffee and sugar, can be had here for $3, and that in healthy and convenient situations; and mining lands equal to the best in the world can be had to work on shares on the easiest and most liberal terms. Our Government and our commissioners should hesitate to refuse these things to our people.

DUTCH SLAVERY.—Discussions have taken place, in the lower house of the Dutch parliament, respecting emancipation in the Dutch Colonies. Numerous petitions have come in for that purpose.

The number of slaves in the Dutch Colonies is about 53,000, namely, 39,000 in Surinam, 10,400 in Curagoa, and other West India Islands, and the remaining 3600 in the East India Colonies.

Great Excitement—Mobbing a Kidnapper.

WORCESTER, MASS., Oct. 30.

Asa A. Buttman, the notorious kidnapper of Thomas Simms, and Anthony Burns was discovered "booked" at the American House, in this city yesterday, and was immediately posted throughout the city. In the evening a vigilance committee of citizens surrounded the hotel, and watched his movements. He flourished his pistol at them, and threatened to use it, whereupon a warrant was issued, and he was immediately arrested, and this forenoon brought before the Police Court, charged with having concealed weapons. The case was postponed two weeks, and he was required to give bonds for his appearance.

A large and excited crowd gathered around the Court Room, and it being evident that Buttman's life was in danger, Mr. Geo. Hoar, free soiler, and son of the venerable Samuel Hoar, who was driven out of South Carolina, moved to let the kidnapper go in safety out of the city.

The crowd gave way, and Buttman, accompanied by a strong guard, went to the depot followed by the populace, where the colored men fell upon him, and would undoubtedly have taken his life, but for the interference of Martin Stowell, Jas. A. Howland, Mr. Hoar, Rev. Mr. Higginson, and S. S Foster, all abolitionists.

Buttman was bustled into a carriage accompanied by Mr. Higginson, and thus escaped with his life. Mr. Higginson was considerably cut by the missiles thrown at the carriage, and Buttman was pelted with rotten eggs and stones, and kicked and beaten almost to death.

He promised never to visit Worcester again, and he probably will not. He is now out of harm's way.

Another Railway Accident.

BETWEEN THIRTY AND FORTY PERSONS INJURED

CHICAGO, Nov. 3, 1854.

The Passenger Train for Rock Island, which left Chicago at 11 o'clock on Wednesday night, broke the axletree of the engine near the Minnesota station. A horse jumped on the track, throwing off the train, breaking the ribs of the engineer, and killing and wounding from 30 to 40 first-class passengers.

CHINA.

Political affairs at Canton remain in a critical state; the dissaffection is spreading. The insurgents are in great force in the surrounding country, and three attempts were made to take the city, which, however, failed. Honam, opposite Canton, is threatened, and the latest accounts mention that the people are quietly maturing for an open revolt against the mandarins' authority. An attempt made to effect a compromise with the insurgents was not successful. Fighting was going on between the two parties at Shanghae, but the Imperialists appear to make little progress. Samqua, the late Taoutai, has been ordered to Pekin to answer some charges of the public censor. Lau has been appointed in his place. The news of the insurgents in the north is meagre. The latest Pekin Gazette is of the 28th June, but contains little news. At Foochow an extensive fire broke out and destroyed about 1,000 houses.

The Fortifier of Sebastopol.

Every one has heard of Sebastopol, but every one has not heard of Colonel Upton, for many years the chief engineer of that redoubtable fortification. Mr. Upton was the surveyor of the Dunchurch and Stratford road, and resided at Daventry for many years. His name frequently appears in the parliamentary reports of the commissioners of the Holyhead road, between the year 1818 and 1826. All the greatest improvements on the above line were made under his superintendence; and Mr. Telford, who was the engineer of the Holyhead road, had the highest opinion of his acquirements, and took every opportunity of stating his opinion of him to the commissioners. Mr. Upton got into a course of expensive living unwarranted by his means, and was induced to commit many gross frauds on the trustees of the road. Those frauds were discovered in the month of April, 1826, and on inquiry by a competent person employed, it was discovered that he had trespassed on the funds of the trustees to an amount exceeding £2,000. Evidence was taken at the time of the facts, and he was held to bail to appear at the July assizes following, to answer the charge. He appeared at the assizes, and answered when called on to plead. The trial did not come on the first day of the assize. He had been given to understand by his solicitor that he would be merely indicted for a fraud, but he obtained information he could not doubt that he would be indicted for forgery, and, if found guilty would probably be hanged. He slept at Northampton, got up about seven o'clock, said he was going to take a walk, and should return to breakfast. He did not, however, appear again and it seemed, went that morning to London. By some means he got a recommendation to the Russian authorities in London, received the appointment of engineer, and was, in a few days, on his way to the Crimea. We have heard by what means he obtained his recommendation, but if we were to publish them it would implicate persons whose characters are unimpeached. As talents are much more highly prized in Russia than honesty, it is possible that his real character might have been given. Talents are the first thing required in that country, and the surest guarantee for honesty is the certainty of being hanged if you are detected in being otherwise. When Mr. Upton went to Sebastopol the harbour was in a very inefficient state, and in vain had several engineers endeavored to improve it. There was great difficulty in getting the water into it so as to admit large ships. He procured immense iron works at Birmingham, and by dint of science, labour, and expense, he made it what it is. The whole time of his residence in the Crimea he has been engaged in the fortifications in the Black Sea, and has been for some years the chief engineer at Sebastopol. The Emperor was so pleased with him that he gave him the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the army, and he was received at the palace at St. Petersburg. In addition to his numerous forgeries and frauds, he got upwards of £3,000 of the money of his wife's relations, not one farthing of which did he repay. He held the post-office at Daventry for a year, and at the end of it was a defaulter of nearly £300, which one of his sureties was obliged to pay. He died about a year ago, and has left a name more durable than the brass artillery he planted at Sebastopol.—Northampton Herald.

Terrible Ravages of the Cholera.

We translate for the Inquirer the following letter from the Italian journal, Opinione, published at Genoa:

"MESSINA, Sept. 1854.—This city has been afflicted in the most awful manner, 5,068 persons died from the 23rd to the 28th of August. On the 29th there was a complete slaughter; the general terror increased the number of victims. Of the 5,000 soldiers composing the garrison, 2,000 perished, and almost all the police. It is impossible to describe the desolate appearance of the city. Entire families have been destroyed. Of the family of Mr. Ruggieri, Sardinia consul, composed of twelve persons, not one survives. The shops are all closed, and their occupants have either fled or shut themselves up.

"There were not vehicles enough to carry the dead to the cemeteries, and the police were obliged to seek ox-waggons in the country. In a few days 13.000 persons have died. The sick were left without food, medical aid, or the solace of clerical attendance in their dying moments. The physicians, as well as the druggists and priests, all shamefully took to flight. Large numbers of galley prisoners, condemned to chains for life for capital crimes, were pardoned on condition of burying the dead. Such a spectacle has not been seen in any Italian city since the plagues of the "Middle Ages."

From a subsequent letter of Sept. 10, we see that the government had sent a steamboat with physicians, druggists, priests, provisions, &c., and that the disease had begun to decline.—Phil. Inq.

NOTICE.

M. A. Shadd, General Agent for this paper, is West on business connected with it. She will visit Michigan, Ohio, and probably Pennsylvania, before her return; will lecture by invitation, on the practicability of an en masse Emigration of Colored Americans to the Canadas, and other British Provinces, north of the United States, and will also seek to extend the circulation of the Provincial Freeman. S.

Fears are often entertained and expressed by many colored persons in the States, when contemplating a removal to Canada, that in the event of their coming to this country they will find not only laws similar to those of the States, but that in cases of litigation between white and coloured persons, justice, if done them, will be as tardily meted out here, as even in the so-called Free States. The reason for such fears may perhaps be found in the fact, that the countries lie contiguous, are governed in a somewhat similar manner, and inhabited by a people of the same origin, as that where they now are It is therefore not very strange, that in contemplating a change, which, to superficia observers may appear trifling, many are led to hesitate, on such grounds; but that British law is in Canada administered without regard to complexional differences, was so clearly exemplified in the decision given in a case at the late Assizes, in Toronto, that we cannot forbear contrasting it with what would, without doubt, have been the result, under similar circumstances, in a court of Justice on the other side of the line. We refer to the case of Breslau, who is here sentenced with death for being found in the company of those who attempted to murder a colored man. That such a judgment would have been rendered in a Yankee Court, who will suppose for a moment. So far from such being the case, had he been the one who struck the blow, so long as the party assaulted recovered, a few years in prison would have been the extent of his punishment. But situated as was Breslau he would have been discharged from custody with probably a reprimand. S, Prohibitory Law.

The motion for a second reading of the Prohibitory Liquor Law was carried on the 25th, by a large majority, 95 to 5. The objections offered against the Bill were about as forcible as those generally given by the advocates of a bad cause, and some of them quite as expressive of a strict regard for self-interest, at least.

The objections, generally, were akin to the standing argument of the rumseller—"If I do not sell, some one else will." One Member thought that if the liquor traffic was prohibited, opium would be used; others, that it would be evaded—that it would be procured under the plea of sickness, and the like. Mr. Hincks gave the House what will, no doubt, when coming from such high authority, be considered a proof positive of the possibility of its being evaded, in cases where the party possesses a greater love for the "creature," than regard for the law of the land, by relating for the benefit of law-loving citizens, an incident of his own experience in the matter. He, it seems, while travelling in a neighboring State, where a Prohibitory Law was in operation, had wilfully evaded it, by procuring "two bottles of wine, done up as medicine." So, of course, if Mr. Hincks could so easily evade the law, there is no doubt that others, after having the assurance of the fact from such a source, will, in the event of the passage of this law, which the honorable gentleman seemed to regard as similar, make the attempt.

The Member from Kent, Mr. Larwill, thought that a Prohibitory Law would have the effect to cause a diminution in the quantity of grain produced, which was known to be largely consumed in the manufacture of whiskey. Why that result should be an objectionable feature, is not clear; for if the falling off would be in proportion to the quantity now consumed in the manufacture of "whiskey," which is to be inferred, so far from being an argument against, it would be decidedly in favor of the law. For although minus the grain, we would be minus the whiskey, minus the records of the greater proportion of crime committed, and minus the infliction of such a sensible remark as that, from the learned Member, who evidently thinks that corn, barley, &c., were created for the special purpose of manufacturing his loved whiskey.

But such, it is almost needless to say, would not be the fact, the victims of intemperance would, after becoming sobered, resort to useful employments, with the prospect of being able to retain the fruit of their labours. They would become producers to the benefit, instead of consumers to the injury, of their fellow-subjects. S.

☞ The Grand Jury, in their presentment, on Saturday last, attributed a great proportion of the crime committed, to the abuse of intoxicating liquors, and recommended the passage of a Prohibitory Law.

There is a movement in Sonora calculated, if successful, to check the fever for annexation and fillibusterism. The following letter published in the San Francisco Chronicle of Sept. 29, contains the best account received here of the terms of the memorial and its motives:—

LETTER FROM HERMOSILLO.—We translate the following letter to a person in New York from the German Evening Gazette:

On the report that it was probable that at no distant time negotiations would be opened between the United States and Mexico, for the annexation of a portion of Sonora, a number of persons of Hermosillo had met and addressed a note to the Mexican Government.

The purport of the note was that they petitioned Santa Anna to determine, and publish as the inflexible determination of the Mexican Government, that henceforth, for no consideration and under no circumstances, will any land be granted under treaty by Mexico to the United States, except under conditions that,—

1. Slavery shall never be tolerated in the territory granted.

2. All titles for land granted by Mexico, or Spain, though incomplete or possessory, or without boundaries clearly defined, shall be confirmed in fee simple, so that the claimant shall have all the land granted, provided that the claimant has not forfeited his title under the equitable rules of Mexican law.

3. Every person recognized as a citizen, no matter what his color or blood, shall be entitled to all the privileges of voting, eligibility to office, bearing witness in Court, and other political privileges enjoyed by the American citizens of the territory conveyed.

The citizens of Sonora are certainly possessed of a large share of credulity, if they are willing to enter into any treaty whatever with the American Government, be it ever so clearly defined, after its recent violation of one of its own, most solemn compacts, and that, too, against the remonstrances of a great proportion of the citizens.

Statesmen who frame, and Executives who place their signatures to documents, with the intention of rendering of no effect compacts which have been entered into with the understanding that they are unalterable, which of course cannot be repealed, and the letter of which clearly ratifies the understanding mutually agreed upon by all parties; they who thus deliberately violate pledges made to their own citizens, and which all have been taught to regard as sacred, will not hesitate to act in a similar, and if it suit their purpose, more summary manner, with a nation weak as is the Mexican, and which, too, is composed partly of the same people, who, the more effectually to crush and for the perpetuation of the crushing system extended over them, the Missouri compromise was trampled on.

S.

☞ In another column will be found an interesting article from the New York Tribune, on the "Dominican Project," and an editorial and correspondence from the Baltimore Patriot, giving a Southern view of the same subject, will no doubt be found equally interesting. The correspondent is evidently a Young American of the genuine go-a-head school, as Gen. Cazneau though generally considered prompt in forwarding schemes pertaining to Fillibusterism, is here charged with unnecessarily delaying important matters. S.

☞ The Oil Paintings for sale at No. 5, City Buildings, by M. Habisher, are said by connoisseurs, to be the best ever offered to the Toronto public. They are, indeed, productions of no ordinary merit, and only need being seen to be appreciated. The collection, though consisting partly of his own productions, contains some fine pieces from celebrated European masters. The moderate prices varying from £1 5s. to £100, will not be considered, when contemplating such masterpieces, evidently the fruit of many a weary day of toil. Our citizens will do well to avail themselves of the opportunity to purchase at the earliest date, as we understand the gentleman will remain but a few days in the City. S.

A man named McManus, while sitting in a house on Elizabeth Street, in a state of intoxication last week, fell into the fire, and was so badly burned, that he died on Tuesday.

Toronto Fall Assizes.

On Saturday, Nov. 4th, the prisoners found guilty at this Assizes, were brought before Mr. Justice Burns, to receive sentence. The following shows the crimes for which they were convicted, with the punishments awarded:

SENTENCES.

Jeremiah Leary—larceny—two calander months in gaol.
John Reid—attempted larceny—on month in gaol.
Jeremiah Webb—larceny—habit and repute—two years in the provincial penitentiary.
John Sommerville—obstructing Northern Railway—four calendar months in gaol, with hard labour.
Helen Healey—perjury—two years hard labour in the provincial penitentiary.
Patrick Gilfole—perjury—two years in provincial penitentiary.
Christopher Koch—larceny—two years in do. do.
Charlotte Brown—larceny—three months in gaol.
W. H. Brown—assault—four months in gaol.
Patrick Maher—assault—three months hard labor.
George D. Green—larceny—aggravated—two years in the provincial penitentiary.
John Lively—larceny—two years do. do.
Samuel Davis—assault—fine of £1 5s.
John Smith, carver—larceny—habit and repute, five years hard labour in the provincial penitentiary.
John Smith, carver (same person)—sheep-stealing; aggravated by previous sentence of death; commuted to seven years imprisonment in the penitentiary. Ten years imprisonment, with hard labour, in the provincial penitentiary. This sentence to commence at the expiration of the first sentence—seventeen years in all.
John King—sheep stealing—three years do
George Brown Weir—sheep stealing—3 years do
George Brown Weir—second conviction—three years in the provincial penitentiary; to commence at the termination of the first sentence.
George Danby—sheep stealing, aggravated by previous conviction—seven years hard labour in the penitentiary.
John Nelson—sheep stealing—three years do do
Hugh McTamany—larceny, aggravated—three years hard labour in the penitentiary.
William Edward Reid—same charge—three years hard labour in the penitentiary.
Hugh McTamany—second conviction—two years hard labour; to commence at the end of the first sentence.
John Breslau—assault, with intent to murder. This was one of the three who assaulted Henry F. Smith, a colored man, while he was going to chapel on Monday night last. The principal perpetrators of the deed having unfortunately been admitted on bail during the sitting of the Court, had made their escape. Breslau being an accomplice, however, was convicted by the jury on the first count of the indictment—assault, with intent to murder.

The Judge addressing the prisoner, said: The sentence of the Court, if pronounced against you, would be that of death. I have no alternative—it does not rest with me. I regret exceedingly to be called upon to say a single word to you. [The young prisoner was very much affected, and cried excessively.] Your poor mother and sister came to me last evening. I told them I had no alternative. [Here the Judge could not refrain from tears, and the Court and the audience were deeply moved.] You got yourself into bad company. This is the consequence of keeping bad company. What surprises me very much is, that in a serious charge like this, the principal should have been admitted to bail while this Court was sitting. The principal one concerned in this charge is not forthcoming to answer for himself. You, to a certain extent, are implicated and made answerable by the law. For what he did you are the only one brought to answer. When you connect yourself with those who are desperadoes and bad characters, all have to partake of the same guilt, in the eye of the law. It does not rest with me. I am extremely sorry for your case and I represented to your aged mother and sister all that could be done. The commutation of the sentence, or what may be done with you, rests entirely in the hands of the Executive Government. It does not rest with the Court. We cannot alter it. The only power that can alter it is the Executive Government. To that Government you must apply. Therefore, we abstain from passing sentence, and simply on the present occasion record judgment of death.

The prisoner cried bitterly as he left the dock.

Martin Richard Kehoe—Murder.

The Judge, addressing the prisoner said—You have been convicted of murder. What have you to say, why the sentence of the Court should not be pronounced?

PRISONER. I declare my innocence before that God in whose presence I stand. I know nothing at all of the crime which lies against me. What the medical men have testified to here is untrue. I call upon God Almighty to have mercy upon me, for I protest my innocence.

After stating to the prisoner that he had been convicted on testimony so undeniable, as to leave no doubt of his guilt, thereby having no room for hope that the government would interfere, and admonishing him to prepare for death, the Judge proceeded to pronounce the sentence as follows:

The sentence of the Court is—that you now be removed hence to the common gaol of these counties, and there be confined until Monday, the 4th day of December, and that on that day you be removed hence and be hanged by the neck until you be dead—and may God have mercy upon your soul.

The prisoner before leaving the dock said, I call God to witness that I am innocent of the charge. You have to appear before that God as well as I, and you will there see I have spoken the truth. These may be the last words I may have to say to your Lordship.

The Court was deeply moved during the delivery of the awful sentence.

Patrick Farely, James Purcell, Thomas Hagan, Reynolds McMullen, Patrick Grainey, conspiracy, £5 each, and in default be committed to gaol.

James Paul, James Watson, Rebecca Blunt, Julia Bonna, and Maria Kelly, discharged.

Mr. HAGARTY here stated that the foreman of the Grand Jury had a statement to submit. It seems that one of the tailors—not one of the five—said to him, "this is all your doings. I will remember you for it." He gave the name as Mr. Costello.

Mr. WARD having been put upon oath, said that Costello touched him upon the hand while sitting in the Grand Jury box and beckoned to him as if he wanted to say something. He. [Mr. Ward] leant over the box and Costello said,—your name is Ward. He [Mr. Ward] answered in the affirmative. Costello then said, "this is your [Ward's] doings; I will remember you for it."

A warrant was granted for the apprehension of Mr. Costello.

This closed the criminal business of the Court, and after taking up some civil cases, the Assizes were closed.

Arrival of the Arabia.

SIEGE OF SEBASTOPOL.

THE MARKETS STILL ADVANCING.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.

The bombardment of Sebastopol commenced October 13th.

Omar Pacha had gone to the Crimea to a Council of War. His forces are expected to go to the Crimea.

Menschikoff has been partially reinforced.

Reports have been again circulated simultaneously in Vienna, Paris, and London of the fall of Sebastopol.

It is said that General Canrobert had notified the French Government that the allied position is impregnable, being defended by 80,000 men, with 200 guns, and could easily be held against 200,000 Russians.

In consequence of correspondence found in Menschikoff's effects captured at Alma, important arrests have been made at Varna.

Two small British steamers have been ordered to the sea of Azoph, to bombard the town of Kerlich.

Lord Radcliffe has succeeded in procuring a firman to suppress the trade in Circassian and Grecian slaves.

A large portion of the French Baltic fleet have returned to Cherbourg.

The British Parliament is further prorogued to the 6th November.

British papers publish a list of the privates killed and wounded at Alma.

The national subscription for the killed and wounded reached £6,000.

A Regiment of Women have been organized for nurses, to be immediately sent to Scutari.

FRANCE.—Nothing of political interest.

SPAIN.—The constitutional project has been abandoned.

VIENNA.—A private despatch from Bucharest of 15th announces that the bombardment of Sebastopol commenced on the 13th. Two hundred pieces of artillery are employed, and Sebastopol was not expected to hold out more than three or four days.

The German press everywhere give indications of an approaching rupture between Austria and Prussia.

Great anxiety prevailed at Berlin.

Thirty thousand Russians had crossed the Danube into the Dobrudscha. The vanguard is at Babadach. Twelve thousand Russians, under Uschakoff, occupied the Danube ferries, near Toultsch.

SIEGE OF SEBASTOPOL.

The arrival from the East, which extends to the 3rd October, enable us to furnish the following narrative of the movements of the army before Sebastopol.—On the 28th Sept., the second, third and fourth divisions of the army were ordered at once to move up to the height above Sebastopol, where they encamped the first division remaining at Kadikoi, behind the port of Balaklava, for the protection of that important post, while the Light Division rested on the heights above the harbour, which it had occupied before the surrender of the fort. At the desire of Gen. Brown, the Light Division also moved forward on the following day, and now occupies a position in the line of the besieging army. The engineer and the artillery proceeded at once to land the siege train, and on the 29th some of the guns were already dragged on the heights and temporarily placed in a field about one mile in the rear of the position occupied by the troops. From this elevated encampment, which was occupied by our troops without any opposition on the part of the enemy, a view may be obtained of the whole port of Sebastopol, with its harbour, arsenals, ships and forts lying within a circle of three or four miles, at the foot of the vast armament which already threatens the devoted city. In the military harbour, the Russians had moored a three decker, so as to direct its fire up the ravine which descends to the arsenal and the docks. On the east of the town, however, and immediately in front of the British lines, a strong horseshoe redout has been constructed, which we do not find marked in any of the maps now before us, and this will be the point against which our attack must first be directed.

The Duke of Cambridge's division, consisting of the Guards and Highland Brigade, remained in the rear of the army near Balaklava until the 2nd of October, in order to cover the base of operations from the possibility of an attack. Meanwhile the roads and tracks through the hilly country south of Khutor Mackenzie by which the Allied armies made their flank march on Balaklava, have been broken up and put into a state of defence by the British forces. The right flank of the army is effectually covered by the defile leading into the valley of the Sehernaya, by that stream, and by the marshy ground about it; and so satisfied was Lord Raglan on the 1st of October of the strength of this position, that he caused the 1st division to advance to the right of the army, and to take up the position it will occupy during the siege.—London Times.

DISPOSITION OF THE BESIEGED ARMIES.

The Moniteur of Thursday, the 16th, contains the following article :—

The Minister of War has received from the General-in-Chief of the army in the East, despatches dated Oct. 3.

No fresh military operations had been effected since the taking of Balaklava. The two armies are established in an excellent military position, the English army drawing its materiel and provisions from Balaklava, and the French from two small bays to the north of Cape Chersonesus.

This position of the two armies has naturally determined their mode of distribution of the territory before the place of Sebastopol during the siege. The French army will have the left of the attack, from the sea to the southern fort. The English army will take the right, from the southern fort to the ruins of Inkermann.

Our army is divided into two corps—the first, under the orders of General Foley, and composed of the third and fourth divisions, will make the siege ;—the second, under the command of General Bosquet, and comprising the first and second divisions, will form the corps of observation. The Turkish division is placed in reserve according to circumstances.—The English army has made similar arrangements. A portion of its divisions will assist in the attacks against the place; the other part forming a corps of observation, will be united with the corps of General Bosquet.

These arrangements are of a nature to remove all doubt as to the result of the siege which is about to commence.

OMAR PACHA'S OPERATIONS.

The Morning Chronicle noticing that an impression appears to prevail that Omar Pacha will immediately assume the offensive in Bessarabia, says that it may perhaps be doubted whether such a movement is actually contemplated; but even if the Turkish commander should not cross the frontier, the menacing attitude which he assumes in its vicinity will be almost equally efficacious in detaining in compulsory inactivity a large Russian army of observation. It may be added that offensive operations on his part would at this moment be unavailing for the immediate purpose of effecting a diversion in favor of the allies, since any Russian force, designed for the relief of Sebastopol, must, ere this, have reach Perkop.

According to the statements of deserters, the spirits of the Russian army appear to be much depressed since its disasters upon the Alma, where it lost from 7000 to 8000 men.

VISIT OF THE EMPEROR AND EMPRESS OF FRANCE TO ENGLAND.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Chronicle thus writes :—I understand, from what appears excellent authority, that the talked-of visit of the Emperor and Empress of the French to England will take place in the course of the month of November, but I have not heard that the precise day is fixed. I understand that it is expected that Queen Victoria and Prince Albert will return the visit about the middle of May next, when her Majesty will not only be able to see the French Exhibition, which will then be open but see Paris in all its glory, with the immense improvements now going on, in a state of completion. It is almost needless to say that this exchange of visits is of immense importance.—They must not be looked on simply as an exchange of civilities between the Sovereigns of two great countries. They are a great political event, and will do much to coment the alliance which has already been so cordially entered into between the people of both countries.

Arrival of the America.

THE WAR.

HALIFAX, Nov. 9th.

The America, from Liverpool, on the 28th ult., arrived here at a quarter past three o'clock.

The Collins' steamer Atlantic arrived off Holyhead at noon on Wednesday 25th, but could not enter the Mersey until 3 o'clock.

The St. Louis sailed from Southampton for New York on the 25th.

The London Times says, we are informed that Mr. Soule, the American Minister at Madrid, was refused admisssion to pass through France, from England to Spain.

The London Morning Post, announcing the acquisition of Samana, says it amounts virtually, if not actually, to the annexation of St. Domingo.

The acquisition by the United States of so important a point in the West Indies—a position threatening on either hand the Spanish islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, and so directly affecting the British West Indian positions, cannot be received with indifference.

A letter from the Hague, of the 21st, mentioning the departure of Mr. Gibson for America, says, that he took with him the result of the conference of the American Ministers at Ostend.

THE WAR.

Sebastopol is not taken.

The latest advices show that 20 days elapsed between the departure of the besieging armies from Balaklava and their opening fire upon Sebastopol; both the French and English had their batteries ready on the 15th; on the 17th fire was commenced on the place both from land and sea. The bombardment was continued till night, the Russians lost 500 killed and wounded; Admiral Kornilrff was killed.

The Russian fortifications suffered very little on the 18th. The bombardment was resumed from the Allied batteries only.

When the mail left Constantinople 5 steamers had arrived at Balaklava with men wounded in repelling a great Sortee of 20,000 strong.

General Raglan and Canrobert had formally summoned Sebastopol to surrender, and requested the woman, children, and sick to be sent away, and flags to be hoisted upon the Hospitals.

So far as known the Russian army is concentrated upon the outer Belbec, and already numbers 45,000.

The allied army is divided into a scige army and army of observation.

On the 5th and 11th the garrison of Sebastopol made sorties and destroyed some small works.

On the evening of the 5th a convoy of 3,000 Russians succeeded in entering Sebastopol.

The allies now number 110,000 and 8,000 additional French are ready to embark from Marseilles on the 21st and 5,000 Turks from Varna.

Letters of the 12th say that the Allies have 300 gun batteries, and after a few days fire, will attempt to storm the garrison, which is estimated at 40,000 men.

Altogether the prospect of the speedy fall of Sebastopol is not so favourable to the allies.

General Menschikoff, who commanded at Sinope, is Commandant of Sebastopol. He has published an address saying he will defend it to the last, and any one is welcome to shoot him if he don't.

Advices from Constantinople to the 23rd say that the Russians had retaken Eupatoria, and that the English garrison of 500 men had retired with the loss of 1 gun. This is denied in the English papers.

An Allied force is sent under Gens. Bosque and Achmet Pacha to Perekop, to prevent the advance of the Russians.

Affairs look black between Prussia and Austria.

A great council of war was held at Vienna, the Emperor presided.

It is reported that Austria summoned Prussia to withdraw from the frontier of Gallacia.

The whole Austrian army was to be placed on a war footing on the 24th.

The garrison at Vienna has been ordered to be ready to march at 48 hours notice. Russia meantime continues to menace Austria.

The Czar has gone to Warsaw.

Little doubt is entertained at Vienna that ere long there will be actual hostilities.

PRUSSIA.

Austria had returned an answer to the last despatch of the Prussian Government, repeating that Austria will adhere inflexibly to her policy expressed in the note of the 30th September. The action which Prussia would take was looked for with anxiety.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The British Fleet will leave the Baltic about the end of November, returning in squadrons to Portsmouth, Sheerness, Plymouth and Cork. Five floating batteries and 20 gun boats, drawing about four feet of water each are building in England for spring operations. An expedition is to be sent out next spring to bring home the remains of Sir John Franklin's party. Dr. Rae will have the command.

FRANCE.

The Emperor has written a letter of condolence to Madame St. Arnaud and bestowing a pension of 20,000 francs upon her as a national recompense.

The whole camp of the south is to embark or east.

Mr. Soule's return to Madrid caused quite an excitement and a clamor was being raised to induce the Spanish Government to solicit his recall.

Queen Isabella has abandoned the idea of abdicating.

Calavera is in Paris.

The Legitimists are preparing for a movement. Austria has just concluded an immense financial operation, by which she has transferred to a company of capitalists all railroads constructed and worked by the Government in Hungary and Bohemia.

The Company pays 200,000,000 francs, on which the Government guarantees 5 per cent.

CHINA.

CANTON, 9th Sept.

The city is still besieged and the distress of the besieged was great.

The insurgents yet hold Shanghai.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, October 27th.

Messrs. Richardson & Co. report that flour had been in good consumptive demand until Friday the 27th when the advanced rates partly receded and limited business. Market, however, closed on the week with an advance of 2s. on flour and 6d. a 9d. on wheat. Indian corn continued in active demand, chiefly or the continent at 3s. a 4s. advance.

LATEST.

On the 21st the operations of the besiegers continued, and their fire was effectively answered.

TREBISOND, Oct. 9.

The Abasian Chiefs have refused to receive Schamyl's envoy. Harriff Pacha has consequently cut off all communication with the coast of Abasia.

PARIS, Friday night.

There is no confirmation of the entry of the Russians into the Dobrudscha; it is therefore doubted.

Sir John Burgoyne, on the 14th fixed the site of batteries which will destroy the Russian shipping. A Russian war steamer had been captured by the fleet.

The Moniteur of this morning contains news of a victory over the Russians near Gurney. They lost their baggage and 30 guns, and a Russian General was killed.

Arrival of the New Governor at Quebec.

QUEBEC, Nov. 9.

The new Governor General, Sir Edmund Head, arrived at a little before 8 o'clock this morning, in the steamer John Munn, accompanied by her Excellency Lady Head and the Misses Heads, and Miss Murphy. The party were met on the wharf by the Commandant of the Garrison, by Col. Thorndyke, R. A., Lieut. Col. Irvine, A. D. C., and Capt. Hamilton, Military Secretary. Owing to the clearness of the night, the steamer arrived in port earlier than usual; notwithstanding the early hour, a considerable number of persons were on the wharf. No public demonstration was got up, from the day of the arrival of his Excellency not having been previously known.

Great Western Railroad Accident.

The following is the substance of the presentment of the Grand Jury to Chief Justice Macaulay, delivered in Chatham, on the 4th instant:

The Jurors having bestowed great care and attention on the melancholy circumstance which occurred at Baptiste Creek, about 15 miles West of Chatham, on Friday, October 17th, at about half past 5 in the morning, resulting from a collision between the Mail Express Train going West, and a Gravel or Ballast Train; and which involved a great sacrifice of human life, and leaving others wounded and mutilated, considers that from the unusually dense fog which then prevailed, common prudence on the part of the Conductor of the Gravel Train should have restrained him from venturing out of the siding until daylight, and correct information should have been obtained by the Conductor or the Engineer, respecting the Express Train being unavoidably delayed between London and Chatham.

The Jury further present that great blame is attached to the Conductor and Engineer, for venturing out in distinct violation of the rules laid down by the Great Western Railway for the guidance of the officers and employes. Had these rules and regulations been obeyed, the accident would not have happened.

The Jury also present that D. W. Twitchell, the Couductor, and Kettlewell, the Engineer, of the Locomotive St. Lawrence, employed at the Gravel pit, are guilty of manslaughter, they having, by reason of wilful negligence, caused the death of J. P. Bodfish, Nathaniel Oakes, and about fifty others.

They also present an opinion that no Gravel Train should be allowed to use the main track at night, and that proper watchmen should be appointed, as far as practicable, to keep the line clear, and give timely warning to Conductors of Gravel trains, if there is an impediment or hindrance on the Road.

In accordance with this presentment, Chief Justice Macaulay issued Bench Warrants for the apprehension of Twitchell and Kettlewell. The latter was actually apprehended and lodged in gaol, bail for his reappearance being refused.—Spectator.

☞ George Irwin, one of the persons connected with the attempted murder of the colored man Henry F. Smith, and who was bailed, but absconded, returned to this city—disguised in female attire—on Friday evening, and remained until four o'clock on Sunday morning, when John Malone, the other party implicated in the matter, also arrived in Toronto. About nine o'clock on the latter morning, the Police Magistrate got information of the return of the parties; but, although the utmost exertions were then, and still continue to be made, by the police authorities, no trace of their present whereabouts has yet been discovered.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—On Friday se'night a coloured man of the name of S. G. Lightfoot, farmer, in the Township of West Flamboro,' while returning with his team from Hamilton, was stopped by five young men in Beasely's Hollow, and compelled, under fear of his life, to give up what money he had on his person, being about £5 currency. The parties were all armed—not less than three pistols having been presented at Lightfoot's head, when his money was demanded. He was accompanied on the occasion by his mother-in-law, but from the darkness of the night, it would be questionable whether either of them would be able to recognize the ruffians. On leaving they proceeded towards Hamilton, and undoubtedly belong to some gang of scoundrels with which this part of the Province would seem to be at present infested. Occurrences of this kind have hitherto been rare amongst us, and it is to be hoped the guilty parties will not escape the punishment they so justly merit.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto. LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

Drat the Flies.

The sun was shining hotly on a fine September day,
When I heard an angry matron so bitterly inveigh
Against the tribe of insects that in autumn time arise;
She clenched her fists and stamped her feet, and cried, "Ah—drat them flies!

"There ain't no rest, nor quiet, nor comfort to be had
For them nasty filthy creatures; they're enough to drive one mad;
They settle on our noses; they whizzes in our eyes;
And they buzzwuzwuzzes in our ears: ah—drat them plaguey flies!

"There's not a safe that's safe from them; no apple room without,
And them vexatious wasps, which also is about,
And one can sting almost as bad as t'other when they tries,
Ay, through a cotton stocking, too! ah—drat them vicious flies!

"Them hojus big blue-bottles blows over all the meat,
To that degree that mutton can't be kept a day to eat;
They swarms in every pantry; and them of smaller size
Bespots and spatters everything: ah—drat them horrid flies!

"They sticks in treacle, jellies, preserves, and sweets and jams,
And they breeds their nits, and hoppers, and choppers in our hams,
They infests every cupboard; not a hole but where they pries,
No crink nor crank but they creeps through: ah—drat them crawly flies!

"They drownds theirselves in mikings, and gets into the tea,
In every sugar-basin there's always two or three;
We finds 'em in our puddins, we finds 'em in our pies,
I've no patience with the rebels: ah—drat them tiresome flies!

"They ferrets into wardrobes, and there they spiles the cloth,
For 'tis my firm opinion 'tis they that breeds the moth;
And tell me what you will, you won't persuade me otherwise;
No, get along with you, I say: ah—drat them noxous flies!

"I lays about fly-papers in every room in vain,
Catch hundreds and kill thousands, as many comes again;
Just like them Rooshian locurses, which also I despise;
I can't abear no insex: ah—drat all them nasty flies!"

RECIPES, &c.

How to Boil and Dress Maccaroni.—Put in an iron pot or stew-pan two quarts of water; let it boil; add two teaspoonsful of salt, one ounce of butter; then add one pound of maccaroni; boil till tender, let it be rather firm to the touch; it is then ready for use, either for soup, pudding, or to be dressed with cheese. Drain it into a cullender; put it back in the pan, add four ounces of cheese or more, a little butter; salt, and pepper; toss it well together and serve. It will be found light and nutritious, and well worthy the notice of vegetarians.

Pumpkin Pie.—Stew the pumpkin dry, and make it like squash pie, only season rather higher. In the country, where this real Yankee pie is prepared in perfection, ginger is always used with other spices. There, too, part cream instead of milk is mixed with the pumpkin, which gives it a richer flavor. Roll the paste rather thicker than for fruit pies, as there is but one crust. If the pie is large and deep, it will require to bake an hour in a brisk oven.

Apple Dumplings.—With a narrow knife or apple corer, take out the core of pared tart mellow apples, and fill the place of the core with sugar; roll out some plain light pie crust about two-thirds of an inch thick, and cut it into pieces of just sufficient size to roll the apple in. Enclose an apple in each piece, tying each in a thick piece of cloth well floured. Boil one hour without intermission. A better way is to cover each cloth with soft boiled rice, enclose the apple with this, and tie the cloth around snugly, and boil till the apple is tender.

Apple Snow.—Put twelve good tart apples in cold water, and set them over a slow fire; when soft, drain off the water, strip the skins of the apples, core them, and lay them in a deep dish. Beat the whites of twelve eggs to a stiff froth; put half a pound of powdered white sugar to the apples, beat them to stiff froth, and add the beaten eggs. Beat the whole to a stiff snow, then turn it into a dessert dish, and ornament it with myrtle or box.

To Make Tomato Tart.—Roll out your flour dough into very thin flakes, and place them on your bake plates; then cut your tomatoes into thin slices, and spread them over this dough thinly. Take two table-spoonfuls of good brown sugar, and one table spoonful of cinnamon bark; mix and spread over each plate of tomatoes; bake well, but not too rapidly, and you will have a tart fit for the palate of an epicure. The fruit should be fine.

Sweet Potato Pudding.—Boil one pound of sweet potatoes, very tender, and press them, while hot, through a grater—the finer the better. To this, add half a dozen eggs, well beaten, three-quarters of a pound of fine sugar, three quarters of a pound of butter, some grated nutmeg and lemon rind, and a glass of old brandy. Put a paste in the dish, and when the pudding is done, sprinkle the top with white sugar, finely pulverized. This is a dish fit to grace the table of an Apicins.

To Pickle Walnuts.—When they are in a condition to admit of their being easily perforated with a pin, they are fit to pickle. Gather the fruit fresh from the trees, and place them in very cold, strong brine; allow them to remain twelve or fourteen days. The brine should be previously well boiled and skimmed. Take a quantity of good sharp vinegar, sufficient to cover them, and put into it one whole pepper, some mustard cloves, and onions, ginger, garlic, and horse radish. The whole should be boiled, and poured over the walnuts. It requires from two to three months to pickle walnuts thoroughly; but when properly prepared, they are delicious, and very highly esteemed by most persons.

Importance of the Onion.—The onion is worthy of notice as an extensive article of consumption in this country. It is so largely cultivated at home, and is imported, to the extent of seven or eight hundred tons a year from Spain and Portugal. But it rises in importance when we consider that in these latter countries it forms one of the common and universal supports of life. It is interesting, therefore, to know that, in addition to the peculiar flavor which first recommends it, the onion is remarkably nutritious. According to my analysis, the dried onion root contains from twenty-five to thirty per cent of gluten. It ranks in this respect with the nutritious pea and grain of the east. It is not merely a relish, therefore, that the wayfaring Spaniard eats his onion with his humble crust of bread, as he sits by the refreshing spring, it is because experience has proved that, like the cheese of the English laborer, it helps to sustain his strength also, and adds, beyond what its bulk would suggest, to the amount of nourishment which his simple meal supplies.—Chemistry of Common Life.

Quick Digestion—Healthy Food.—Of all articles of food, boiled rice is digested in the shortest time—an hour. As it contains eight-ninths of nutritious matter it is a valuable substance for diet. Tripe and pig's feet are digested almost as rapidly. Apples, if sweet and ripe, are next in order. Roasted potatoes are digested in half the time required by the same vegetables boiled, which occupy more than three hours and a half—more than beef or mutton. Stewed oysters and boiled eggs are digested in three hours and a half—an hour more than is required by the same articles raw. Turkey and goose are converted in two hours and a half, half an hour sooner than chickens. Roasted veal, pork and salted beef, occupy five hours and a half—the longest of any articles of food.—Scientific American.

Apple Molasses and Apple Butter.

The juice of the sweet apple, it is probably well known to most of our readers, makes an excellent molasses. The article, when properly made, is pure, possessing a vinous or rather brandied flavor, which renders it greatly superior for mince, apple or tart pies, to the best West India Molasses. If it is made from sour apples, a small quantity of imported molasses may be added to improve the flavor. Beet made with it, possesses a brisk and highly vapid flavor, which common molasses does not impart. Four and a half barrels of good cider will make one barrel of molasses, costing in ordinary seasons about $5,50. One who has had considerable experience in manufacturing this article, says:

"I make a little cider; my apples are worth more fed to my hogs, than for cider; but I make a practice of selecting my sweet apples, those that furnish the richest, heaviest liquor, and make a cheese from them, using the cider thus obtained for making apple or quince preserves, boiling down for molasses, and keeping two or three barrels for drink or ultimate conversion into vinegar. When new from the press, and before fermentation commences, that which I intend for boiling is brought to the house and boiled in brass, to the proper consistence; taking care not to burn it, as that gives the molasses a disagreeable flavor, and taking off all the scum that rises during the process. The quantity to be boiled, or the number of barrels required to make one of molasses, will depend greatly on the kind of apples used, and the richness of the new liquor. Four or four and a half are generally sufficient, but when care is not used in making the selections of apples, five barrels may be necessary, but let it take more or less, enough must be used to make the molasses, when cold, as thick as the best West India. When boiled sufficiently, it should be turned into vessels to cool and from thence into a new sweet barrel, put into a cool cellar, where it will keep without trouble, and be ready at all times."

Constitution of the Provincial Union.

Article I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexion, and ranks together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

Art. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

Art. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

Art. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s 3d.

Art. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

Art. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

Art. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

Art. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

Art. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, & Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

Art. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

Fredrick Douglass,
John D. Peck,
Amos G. Beman,
John Jones,
J. D. Bonner,
J. McCune Smith,
} Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "The American Industrial School."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Committee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ord nary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period; but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shattesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. Ward, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B Gribble, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. Thomas James, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted.

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number Provincial Freeman.

DEVOTED TO ANTI-SLAVERY, TEMPERANCE, AND GENERAL LITERATURE.

"Self-Reliance is the True Road to Independence."

VOLUME I. } TORONTO, CANADA WEST, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1854. { NUMBER 35.

PROSPECTUS
PROVINCIAL FREEMAN,

The Provincial Freeman will be devoted to Anti-Slavery, Temperance and General Literature. The organ of no particular Political Party, it will open its columns to the views of men of different political opinions, reserving the right, as an independent Journal, of full expression on all questions or projects affecting the people in a political way; and reserving, also, the right to express emphatic condemnation of all projects, having for their object in a great or remote degree, the subversion of the principles of the British Constitution, or of British rule in the Provinces.

Not committed to the views of any religious sect exclusively, it will carefully observe the rights of every sect, at the same time that a reservation shall be made in favor of an existing difference of opinion, as to the views or actions of the sects respectively.

As an advertising medium, as a vehicle of information on Agriculture,—and as an enemy to vice in any and every conceivable form and a promoter of good morals, it shall be made worthy of the patronage of the public.

Poetry.

Trust in God and Persevere.

Brother, is life's morning clouded?
Has the sunlight ceased to shine!
Is the earth in darkness shrouded?
Would'st thou at thy lot repine?
Cheer up, brother, let thy vision
Look above: see, see light is near,
Soon will come the next transition,
"Trust in God, and persevere."

Brother, has life's hope receded,
Hast thou sought its joys in vain?
Friends proved false when mostly needed,
Foes rejoicing at thy pain?
Cheer up; brother, there's a blessing
Waiting for thee—never fear;
Foes forgiving, sins confessing,
"Trust in God, and persevere."

Brother, all things round are calling
With united voice, "be strong!"
Though the wrongs of earth be galling,
They must lose their strength ere long.
Yes, my brother, though life's trouble
Drive thee near to dark despair,
Soon 'twill banish like a bubble,
"Trust in God, and persevere."

He from His high throne in Heaven,
Watches every step you take;
He will see each fetter riven,
Which your foes in anger make;
Cheer up, brother, he has power
To dry up every tear,
And though darkest tempests lower,
"Trust in God, and persevere."

Brother, there's a quiet slumber,
Waiting for thee in the grave;
Brother, there's a glorious number
Christ in mercy deigns to save;
Wait thou 'til life's quiet even,
Closes round thee, bright and clear,
And till called from earth to heaven,
"Trust in God, and persevere."

Miscellaneous.

The Reformer of Turkey and his Gazette.

We do not read much in what are called the War-books; but in dipping into the volumes, we occasionally alight upon passages that have more than a transitory interest. In a work now before us, for instance, which gives an impromptu history of Islamism, commencing with the biography of Mohammed from his birth, we skip over with suspicion those portions that ought to have taken years to write instead of months or weeks, but give ourselves up with perfect faith to the off-hand sketches of existing things that are evidently drawn from personal observation. The author does not paint the Turks quite en beau; but he has confidence in the reality of the civilisation they are commencing, and looks with hope to their future. This civilisation, our readers know, is spick-and-span new, and some deny its title to the name of civilization at all. The last sultan, Mahmoud, and all his subjects, were semi-barbarians till the chief arrived at the calm and reflective middle age of man; at which point he seems to have been suddenly inspired with an ambition to imitate the refinement of Christian Europe. The slavery of the harem was discouraged, although the sultan did not dare to attempt to put it down. The number of captives for the market was diminished, and their consequently higher value told favourably on their treatment. A man looked at his purchased slave in the light of a round sum of money; more attention was paid to her health and comfort; jealousy demanded more in the way of confirmation than trifles light as air; even absolute misconduct did not seem to justify the master in condemning himself to so heavy a mulct, and recourse, therefore, was more rarely had to the ultimate measures hinted at in the verse of the poet—

There yawns the sack, and yonder rolls the wave.

As Mahmoud rose in civilisation, he uncrossed his legs, got up from his carpet, and seated himself decently on a chair, like a Christian man. He rigged a table in his dining-room, covered it with a damask cloth, and overspread it with plate. His dishes and plates were of silver, his spoons of gold, and instead of his own unbelieving fingers, which he had hitherto used in dipping into the greasy pillaufs, he had orthodox knives and forks. Mahmoud drank champagne at his meals: this was in fact his favorite beverage, and he sipped away at it till he became as glorious as any king in Christendom. Poor Mahmoud! his barbarous admiration of the Franks could not distinguish between their virtues and their vices; and so he became not only tolerant and merciful, but drunken, and the reforming sultan is shrewdly suspected to have died at last of delirium tremens.

It was Mahmoud who began those reforms in the army, the result of which we can read in every newspaper; but we are more interested in another step in advance made by this lover of champagne—the establishment at Constantinople of a Gazette. 'This first Turkish newspaper,' says Mr. Neale, 'was called the Taakvimi Veekai or the Tatler of Events, and it was first issued to the public on Guy Faux Day 1831. No Guy in the streets of London ever attracted a greater portion of inquisitiveness than did the first Turkish press. I doubt whether the conspirator himself, when taken in the very act, with his lantern and matches, gave rise to more conversation, inquirers, suggestions, and execrations, than did this Turkish Tatler. Crowds assembled in the streets round any learned scribe who could spell its pages out to them; and the indignation of the old school knew no bounds at the fresh innovation of their long-inherent rights of exclusive ignorance and fanaticism—the padasha and the vizier must have gone mad to countenance such a scandal.' Curiosity, however, got the better of indignation. The most bigoted of the Turks slipped the atrocious article into their fathomless trousers, and carried it home with them to examine its contents in the secret recesses of the harem. These, however, were the learned men who could read; the others flocked to the public cafes and khatibs, where they could share the misdemeanour with a crowd of their own class, and employ the services of persons who possessed the necessary accomplishment. These individuals rose at once to the surface of society. The heavens raised coffee, pipes, and paras upon them; and as the solemn audience sat around, stroking their beards, and staring in amazement as the recital went on, a spectator might have fancied that he saw the Moslem mind awakening, rubbing its eyes to find out where it was, and blinking in the new light of morning.

The paper was a decided success; and not merely in Constantinople, but throughout a great part of the empire. This appears marvellous, but it is full of hope. The Turks parted with their literary prejudices with less struggle than the army did with their sack trousers; and in a singularly short time the circulation of the Tatler became immense. In out-of-the-way places, such as Alexandretta and Antioch, our author himself was indebted to its columns for news of what was doing in Europe. 'Some fair notion may be conceived of the varied instructive and amusing information the columns of this paper contained, when I state that through its medium ignorant bigoted old Turks, who had never travelled, even by a book, ten miles beyond the town of their birth, whose education had consisted entirely in being able just to read and write their language—the latter imperfectly enough—the patterns of whose huge sherwals, and turbans, and zennars had been perpetuated in the same family through twenty generations—whose pride was plentiful, and who never condescended to smile; even these hard-headed and harder-hearted men, were enabled to form some indistinct conception of railways and steamers, and of the immense advantage which they must eventually prove to the advancement of commerce and science. The project aerial ship was perfectly described, and constituted the theme of endless conversation Being a Frank, and, above all, an Englishman, I was allowed no peace of mind or tranquility, being supposed to possess perfect knowledge of the working and planning of so marvellous an invention. Day after day, week after week, the same incomparably dull old faces, all beard and inquisitiveness, preceded by the invariable pipe-bearer, followed by some half-score attendants and hangers-on, would be seen approaching the house, entering and taking precisely the same seat as yesterday, and recapitulating the same questions which, at the expiration of the first week, had been asked and responded to at least a dozen of times. Happily, the project exploded. The ship was a failure. The old Turks no longer looked nervously forward to the day when, turning out some fine morning, they would find the whole town gazing earnestly up into the air at Smith, and Brown, and Jones, and other adventurous travellers, who were ballooning it to Timbuctoo from the fabulous cities of Mexico. The Tatler explained to the Turks that the project was a failure, and then we were permitted some small peace of mind.' The great object accomplished by the Tatler, was forcing upon the Turks the knowledge that there exists other countries worthy of observation as well as their own. They began to doubt, while they read, whether they actually were, as they had hitherto believed themselves to be—a peculiar people, favoured, like the Israelites of old, with an especial patronage; and as the present war against a nation low down in refinement, brings them in friendly contact with the refined people of the West, it is not too much to hope that the change thus begun will go steadily on.

If we add that Mahmoud was a patron of art, and that pictures are now bought and hung up in Turkey—that he found a school of surgery—and that he opened asylums for lunatics, who are now treated as patients, instead of being venerated as saints or prophets—we have said enough to show that at least the point of the wedge has been inserted.

Prince Mentschikoff.

Our European correspondent has furnished us with some account of Prince Mentschikoff, the general who has played so important a part in the Turco-Russian struggle, and to whom the Czar has committed the defence of the Crimea.

Prince Alexander Sergius Mentschikoff is a descendant of Alexander Mentschikoff, the famous favorite of Peter the Great, who, from being the apprentice of a baker, rose, by degrees, to the highest dignities of the Russian Empire; but, under the reign of Peter II., fell in disgrace, and was exiled to Siberia. The father of Prince Alexander Sergius recovered, by the favor of Paul I., the estates of the family, but is, for the rest, almost unknown to history. Prince Alexander Sergius himself was born in the memorable year of 1789, and entered the Russian army in 1805. Some time later, he was appointed attache to the Russian Legation at Vienna. During the campaigns from 1812 to 1815, he held the position of an adjutant of the Emperor Alexander, and rose, in that capacity, to the rank of general. After the pacification of Europe, he became a most ardent member of the party which favored the plans of the Greek Hetæri, the object of which was the enfranchisement of the Greeks from the Turkish yoke, and the restoration of the Byzantine empire, under the auspices of the Emperor Alexander. There can be no doubt that the Prince favored, at first, the plan in question; but the military revolutions in Naples, Piedmont, and Spain, had the effect of changing his views, or perhaps, rather, of inspiring him with hesitation. His ears became deaf to the most urgent representations in behalf of the Greeks. This induced Mentschikoff, together with Capodistrias, Strogonoff, and several other high Russian dignitaries, to resign their positions.

But on the death of the Emperor Alexander, and the succession of his brother Nicholas to the throne, Prince Mentschikoff was sent as ambassador plenipotentiary extraordinary to Persia, in order to attempt at inducing the Schah to enter into an alliance with Russia against Turkey. The Prince failed in accomplishing the object in view, because the Schah was by English emissaries led to believe that the affairs of Russia were in the greatest disorder, on account of the revolt of the troops, and that there was a fair chance of compelling the new Czar to submit to a disadvantageous peace. Therefore, instead of accepting the proffered alliance, the Schah declared war against Russia. But the result was, as is generally known, very unhappy for the Persian prince, and consequently quite the contrary to what he had been induced to anticipate.

Prince Mentschikoff, instead of returning to St. Petersburg, joined, without having, however, received any official appointment, the army which the Czar had sent against Persia. But, on the outbreak of the war between Russia and Turkey, in 1828, he was appointed commander of a corps, at the head of which he attacked Anapa, and compelled that important place to surrender, on the 23rd of June. From thence he was transferred, by the command of the Emperor, to the European theatre of the war, in order to cause the siege of Varna to be pursued with increased vigor. But the remarkable energy which he displayed at this place was of no long duration, on account of the severe wounds he received from a cannon ball, and which made him unfit for any further service during the war in question.

After the healing of his wounds he was appointed vice-admiral, and chief of the staff general of the fleet. To him, it is affirmed by good authority, much praise is due, for the increase of strength and efficiency which the Russian navy, since that time, has attained. In the year 1831, he was appointed Governor General of Finland; in 1834 he was made an admiral; and in 1836 he became minister of the navy; but on resigning that position, he returned to the discharge of his duties as Governor General of Finland, while at the same time directing his especial attention to the improvement and increase of the Baltic fleet of Russia.

Count Leiningen having succeeded in obtaining from Turkey some concessions demanded by Austria, and the French Ambassador at Constantinople having, by threatening that the French fleet was ready to proceed to the coast of Syria, compelled the Turkish Government to submit to certain demands relative to the "Holy Places," the Emperor of Russia deemed that the time was come when he ought to take a decisive step toward the ultimate aim which he had in view relative to Turkey. He resolved, therefore, to send an ambassador extraordinary, provided with very extensive powers and very large means, to the Turkish capital, in order, by persuasion, corruption, and menaces, to induce the Turkish Government to submit to conditions which the ambassador was to propose, and which, if accepted, would have conferred upon the the Czar the right of interfering, in certain respects, with the internal affairs of Turkey.

Prince Alexander Sergius Mentschikoff was the person whom the Emperor Nicholas selected, as the most suitable of the Russian dignitaries, to proceed to Constantinople, to address to the Sultan personally the arrogant demand, which was intended to divest that Prince of a part of his sovereign right, in order to transfer the same to the Czar, who, as the ambassador was to mention distinctly, would view a refusal as a casus belli

Mentschikoff, accompanied by a numerous and splendid retinue—including one General, two Colonels, and two Commodores of ships-of-the-line, proceeded to Constantinople, where his arrival produced the greatest excitement among the Greek portion of the population. A great number of Greeks daily surrounded the palace where Mentschikoff had taken up his residence; and whenever he made his appearance in public, the Greeks received him with manifest signs of joy, and, as a token of their especial regard, uncovered their heads, which they use never to do, except during religious festivities. It appeared evident that this class of Turkish subjects were informed that the Prince was empowered by the Czar to demand their emancipation from the supremacy of the Sultan, at least with regard to everthing connected with the exercise of their religion.

The deportment of Menchikoff himself, during his short stay at Constantinople, was well calculated to prove his total want of all the qualities necessary to a Diplomatist, or that he had been sent by the Czar thither for the purpose of procuring him a pretext for attacking Turkey. He displayed so much pride and arrogance as to make himself ridiculous, instead of attaining the desired object of inspiring the Turks with fear for the power of his master. He seemed to forget, or not to understand, that every fault which he committed would eagerly be taken hold of by Lord Stratford Canning of Redcliffe, the English ambassador, in order to be used as means of inducing the Turkish Government the more obstinately to resist the conditions which he was come to impose upon it. His first visit to the Grand Vizier was attended with circumstances which must necessarily excite the national pride of every Turk. At another occasion, when he was expected at Kuru Tscheorne, the residence of the Grand Vizier, where he was to have an interview with many of the highest Turkish dignitaries, he was seen on board his magnificent steamer, passing the palace where he was expected, and landing at Besehilu Tasch, the residence of the Sultan himself as if he had forgotten the place which had been assigned to him by the Grand Vizier, but in reality to oblige the Sultan to admit him to a new audience, which he had been refused, on account of the alleged or real illness of that Prince. He did not hesitate in addressing some reproaches to the Sultan, and in giving him the advice "to consult all such persons who were able to inform him of the consequences which would follow upon his refusal to submit to the demands of the Czar." Having pronounced these words in a rather loud voice and with much vehemence, Mentschikoff returned to his steamer, but, instead of directing it to proceed back to Bujukdere, he ordered it to remain at anchor before the gates and windows of the imperial palace, as if wishing that the Sultan, while meditating what answer to return, should have within his sight a memento of the Russian fleet, which was but a few days sailing distant from Constantinople.

The whole conduct of Mentschikoff was of so provoking and insulting a character as to make it generally believed, especially by the foreign ambassadors at Constantinople, that he had exceeded his instructions. After declaring that he could have no farther official communications with the Turkish Government, he nevertheless continued to communicate officially with the Divan; and after announcing the day on which he was to depart, he remained beyond that time still full twelve days, at Bujudere, on board of his steam frigate, which, indeed, during his whole stay at Constantinople, he made to play a very conspicuous part. The ambassadors of the other great European Powers, who had made several successful attempts at mediating between him and the Government of Turkey, adopted, meanwhile, new conditions of reconciliation, which, by the hands of one among themselves, the Austrian Charge d' Affaires, von Kletzl, then offered to Mentschikoff for acceptance. But he returned a prompt refusal, and in the night between the 21st and 22d of May, 1853, he departed from the shores of the Bosphorus.

If, as there are many reasons to suppose, he hastened by his pride and overbearing conduct the rupture between Russia and Turkey, he must ere this have perceived his folly, and deeply repented the share he took in causing the outbreak of a war, which has shown the vanity of all human calculations, at the same time as it must have had the effect of convincing himself how much he overrated the real power of his master. But justice seems to require that we make the remark, that the Turkish Government might perhaps have yielded to his arrogant demands, on account of the fright with which he inspired it, had not the English and French ambassadors, and especially the former, encouraged it to brave the fury of the Czar. Russian partisans have therefore, while acquitting the Emperor Nicholas of all blame, not hesitated in accusing Lord Stratford Redcliffe, and even Lord Palmerston, as responsible for the outbreak of the war between Russia and Turkey; asserting that, even after the occupation of the Danubian Principalities by the Russians, any farther hostilities might easily have been prevented, but for the machinations of those two English diplomatists. One of the advocates of the innocence of the Czar uses the following expressions: "Who will have to answer at the Supreme Tribunal for all the blood to be shed by Christian nations in this war? Not unhappy Turkey, she is hors de cause; not Russia, as we have proved by an examination of her interests, and of the continuous and premeditated policy of her rival; not even France, in spite of that personal policy which the national feeling will soon or late condemn. The whole responsibility of this war must fall upon a few English statesmen—notably upon Lord Redcliffe and Lord Palmerston, who, while they detest each other, have worked cordially together in driving their country to war." But much blame as is duly attached to the English Government, for the unscrupulous course of policy generally pursued by it, I think that the impartial historian will deem it justified in opposing the realization of the ambitious plans of the Czar relative to Turkey, and decide that the Emperor Nicholas, and the councellors whose advices he followed in invading the Danubian Principalities, are alone responsible for all the sufferings entailed upon humanity by the means of the war in question.

Prince Mentschikoff returned from Constantinople to St. Petersburgh, which city he entered in a very unostentatious way; hence the rumor was renewed, that he had exceeded his instructions, but subsequent events have afforded no confirmation of this having been the case. Be this as it will, he was at least visited with no visible signs of his master's displeasure. After a short stay at St. Petersburgh, he proceeded to Moscow and thence to the Crimea. He had been appointed Governor General of that Peninsula, and commander-in-chief of all the forces stationed there, including the Russian fleet in the Black Sea, and the garrison of St. Sebastopol. From that place he directed the attack which, some months later, was made with so much success upon the Turkish squadron in the harbor of Sinope To the inquiry of the Czar, whether he deemed his forces sufficient to resist an attack of the combined English and French fleet, he is reported to have returned the answer, "I don't know whether we can conquer the French and English, but I know that we all, officers, soldiers, and sailors, are resolved to fight to the last man, for the honor of your majesty and of Russia." He has now ample opportunity of proving the sincerity of this assertion. More than sixty thousand enemies have landed on the Crimea, and we know now, with certainty, that Prince Mentschikoff has in the vicinity of the Alma river been defeated by the invading forces, under the command of the Marshall St. Arnaud and Lord Raglan.

What Family Government Is.

It is not to watch children with a suspicious eye; to frown at their merry outbursts of innocent hilarity; to suppress their joyous laughter, and to mould them into melancholic little models of octogenarian gravity.

And when they have been in fault, it is not to punish them simply on account of the personal injury that you may have chanced to suffer in consequence of their fault; while disobedience, unattended by inconvenience to yourself, passes without rebuke.

Nor is it to overwhelm the little culprit with a flood of angry words; to stun him with a deafening noise; to call him by hard names, which do not express his misdeeds; to load him with epithets which would be extravagant if applied to a fault of ten-fold enormity; or to declare with passionate vehemence that he is the worst child in the village, and destined to the gallows. But it is to watch anxiously for the first risings of sin and to repress them; to counteract the earliest workings of selfishness; to suppress the first beginnings of rebellion against rightful authority; to teach an implicit and unquestioning and cheerful obedience to the will of the parent, as the best preparation for a future allegiance to the requirement of the civil Magistrate, and to the laws of the great Ruler and Father in heaven.

It is to punish a fault because it is a fault; because it is sinful and contrary to the commands of God; without reference to whether it may or not have been productive of immediate injury to the parent or others.

It is to reprove with calmness and composure, and not with angry irritation; in a few words, fitly chosen, and not with a torrent of abuse; to punish as often as you threaten, and threaten only when you both intend and can remember to perform; to say what you mean, and infallibly to do what you say.

It is to govern your family as in the sight of Him, who gave you your authority; who will reward your strict fidelity with such blessings as he bestowed on Abraham, or punish your criminal neglect with such curses as he visited on Eli.

Agriculture in Japan.

A correspondent of the New York Observer, thus writes from on board the United States frigate Powhattan, while at anchor in the Bay of Yelodo. The agriculture of Japan must be as instructive to us Western nations, in many respects, as that of China:

"The region of country near this anchorage is exceedingly fertile, and the black, rich, soil, produces two crops annually; the wheat and barley are now almost ready to flower in same places. The rice fields are draining, will soon be ready to receive the shoots, for here all the rice is transplanted. Wheat and barley are drilled and not sown broad-cast, and the vigorous grain shows the care bestowed on it. During the time we have been in this bay the climate has been very pleasant, a good medium between too hot and too cold; snow resting on Mount Fusi and other high mountains, but never on the lowlands. This peak is considered about 14,000 feet high, and lies nearly due west of our ships, raising its symetrical cone far above every other point. The country is undulating in this vicinity, a succession of ravines, plataux, valleys, and ridges, affording room for the forest-lands as well as grain. Terraces are common, some of which have cost great labor to dig them down. Oak, chestnut, maple, pines, furs, and other trees, not recognized in their winter nakedness, are common but the abundance of the Camellia Japonican growing 40 or 50 feet high, and now lately covered with flowers, is the admiration of all. The Japanese furnished a large supply of them for the dinner table the other day. The white Japonica is not so common, only one or two trees having been met. The Pyrus Japonica is also common, and peaches are now in flower. I have seen two specimens of pine trees, the top of which were forced down and trained over a framework, leaving the trunk like the handle of an umbrella underneath this canopy of thirty feet width. The time spent on one was twenty—on the other, thirty years. A pine grafted on a fir was also shown me, and if this small village exhibits these horticultural curiosities, larger cities doubtless furnished greater rarities. Many of the pines and other trees covering the hills are planted, and we have met farmers putting out saplings on steep hills, which otherwise we would never have suspected were not natural growth. This shows the great cost of fuel and the care taken to keep up a supply."

ASSYRIAN DISOVERIES.—From an account of Assyrian researches and discoveries, in the last Annual Report of the Royal Asiatic Society, made by Col. Rawlinson, we learn that the most recent, as well as the most important discovery, in an historical and geographical point of view, is that of another obelisk, in the south-east corner of the great mound of Nimrod, and erected by Shamasphula, the son of Shalombara. The date of the obelisk is about the beginning of the eighth century, B. C. The chronology of Assyria has received a valuable accession by the discovery of a record of one of the early kings, whose name is read Tiglath-Pileser, like that of the later King of Assyria known to the Hebrews. Tiglath-Pileser I, is shown to have flourished 418 years before the reign of Sennacherib. From letters more recently received, we learn that Col. Rawlinson has read the name of Semiramis on the statue of the god Nebo, dug up from the ruins of the palace of Nimrod. Semiramis appears, in a legend upon the statue, to have been really the wife of Pal, King of Assyria, the same as is mentioned in the book of Kings—the cotemporary of Menahem, King of Israel. This would place Semiramis 150 years before Nebuchadnezzar, which will curiously confirm the tradition recorded by Herodatus—that this queen preceded Nitocris, the wife of Nebuchadnezzar, by five generations, equal to 150 years. A further very curious discovery, made by Col. Rawlinson, is, that the employment of the Babylonian cuneiform writing was continued down at least so late as the time of the Macedonian dominion in Asia,—the commencement of the third century before Christ.

The Black Swan—and so Forth.

Miss E. T. Greenfield is a woman of fame. She has sung in all the principal cities of our country, if we mistake not, within the last five or six years. Certainly, she has sung in most of the Northern cities, and in some of the cities of the old world also. She sings beautifully. Her voice is of great power and 'compass,' and surpassingly sweet, also. Probably we have not upon our soil another American-born lady so gifted in musical powers. True, we do not like and cannot appreciate the kind of singing with which Miss Greenfield favors her audiences. We don't like the screaming part; and, for our life and soul, we can't like it. But we have learnt, by patiently listening, that all this screaming and caterwauling is an effort to do something, and we will do Miss Greenfield the justice to say that she does it. She displays, in a remarkable degree, the almost superhuman power of a naturally powerful and well-educated voice. She sung in our city on Monday evening; and we are not sure that our people have listened to sweeter music than she gave us since Jenny Lind was here. Every body said it was good, and the lovers of screaming pronounced it heavenly. We guess it was earthly, but decidedly up. She sings to us again, her agent informs us, some of these days.

Well—Miss E. T. Greenfield is the 'Black Swan'—the Black Swan, as the boys would say, and nothing shorter. She is, in other words, a colored lady—or, if you please, a nigger—a female nigger woman, with African hair, eyes, lips, nose, &c. She is not the worse for that, but sings just as sweetly, and ought to be respected as highly, as though she were as white as a snow-flake, and as prettyas a Peacedale shawl. Why not?

But we don't like this Black Swan; and we happen to be in the mood to give our reasons for not liking her, if we can give them in our own way.

Miss Greenfield is African in blood, and was formerly a slave. She was born in Natchez, Mississippi. Her mistress carried her to Philadelphia, and dying, left her there in a state of freedom. Her musical talent was cultivated, and she became the wonder of the New World.

Does she remember her former state—the pit from which she was digged? Not a bit of it. Does she tune her sweet voice to sing of freedom? Seldom does she paint the sorrows of slavery—its cruelties, its tortures, its barbarities! We never heard of it. Does she sing to her own down-trodden race, or in any way try to elevate them? No.

She sings to the fashionables, and turns up her nigger nose to everything that does not smell of exclusiveness. She shuts her doors to the poor, and only asks patronage of wealth. She don't associate with niggers. While the Hutchinsons sing the songs of freedom, and charge twenty-five or twelve and a half cents for a single admission, she screeches from Robert le Diable, 'Robert, tol que j'aime.' Here and there she will squeeze in a 'Slave Song'—a sort of pathetic ballad, without any back-bone in it; or, likely enough, a song of freedom in the abstract, so delicately finished as to be mistaken for a dream. And for admission to the hall, she charges fifty cents. Just enough to let in the aristocracy, and keep out the slave's friends.

We don't deny that this is a fair business transaction. Miss Greenfield has a perfect right to charge fifty cents per ticket to her concerts, if she wants to. As a business affair, it is none of our business. But one can't help his thoughts; and we can't help thinking that if Miss Greenfield would try less to please the lovers of screeching, (who, after all, care little about her as they do for a last year's almanac), and more to interest and elevate her own race, and the common people of the white race, she would show a degree of sound sense which every body could applaud and nobody condemn. If she would charge twenty-five cents admission fee, and sing songs of freedom, she would have much larger audiences—could put more real music into her voice—please a class of people who are worth pleasing—help on the cause of freedom—and become a blessing to her own and all future generations.

But she won't do this; and we shall not waste much breath in urging her to. She likes 'high life,' and will continue to belittle herself in the estimation of all sensible people, by courting the applause of the aristocracy. We shall not cry about it. But it is our privilege to speak our thoughts on the subject—and we have spoke 'em If Miss Greenfield don't like it, we can't help it.

Bombardment of Petropaulowski by a Portion of the Allied Fleet.

The San Francisco Herald furnishes the following narrative of this affair:—

On Tuesday, the 3rd of October, a portion of the allied fleet, consisting of the French ship Forte, 60 guns, Admiral Des Pointes, the French frigate Eurydice, 30 guns, Captain A. La Grandiere, and the French brig of war Obligado, 18 guns. Captain Des Rosencourt, anchored off North Beach, and by them the news was brought of the bombardment of the Russian town of Petropaulowski, situated on the Western shore of Kamtschatka, by the above mentioned vessels, with the English vessels of war President, Pique, and steamer Virago, on the 1st of September. Petropaulowski is situated on a kind of inner bay, formed by a sand-bar running across the harbor, and behind this bar were anchored the Russian frigate Aurora and the armed transport Dwina. The allied fleet were unable to approach nearer than three miles to the city, in consequence of a strong current from the Northward.

FRENCH ACCOUNT OF THE BATTLE OF PETROPAULOWSKI.

The Echo du Pacifique contains an account of the attack on Petropaulowski, which we translate.

On July 25th, the allied fleet, composed of the French vessels the Forte, Urydice, Artemise, Obligado, and the English vessels, the President, Pique, Amphitrite and Virago left Honolulu. On the 30th of July the Amphirite and Artemise were detached for San Francisco. August 28th, the fleet arrived within sight of the mountains about Petropaulowski. After a reconnoisance of the bay by the Virago the fleet moved up on the 29th with colors flying, in the following order: the President, the Forte, the Pique, the Eurydice. The Virago was placed by the side of the President, and the Obligado by the side of the Forte. At the moment of casting anchor, the four Russian batteries opened upon them. These four batteries were the battery on Schakoff Point, on the left of the entrance to the harbor; a battery on the point to the right; an uncovered battery of twelve guns on the tongue of land jutting out into the port near the entrance; and a battery on the peninsula, which protects the city on the West. This battery was placed on a low portion of the peninsula, over which the masts of four vessels in the bay, were discoverable. Three of these vessels were men-of-war, and one a merchant vessel.

It was then half-past four o'clock. The Virago advanced toward the peninsula, and opened a fire upon the Russian batteries. A battery of mortars near the town replied, but the bombs fell short, exploding high in the air. Lights were kept up in the vessels during the night to deceive the Russians, who maintained the fires at their batteries through the night. In the morning every preparation was made for a severe battle. The Schakoff battery contained 5 heavy guns, the uncovered battery containing 12 thirty-six pounders; the battery on the right was less dangerous, and protected by feeble fortifications. The English Admiral directed the master cannoneer of the Pique to dismount one of their guns; the shot struck the gun, dismounted it, and made it useless. The open battery was evidently the most dangerous, being protected by fascines 12 feet in diameter. The Pique was moored at the starboard of the Virago and the President was placed behind the steamer. The Forte took a position on the larboard of the Virago. Beyond the sand bank the Russian transport was visible, and three portholes of the Aurora. The Virago advanced to within cannon-shot of the light-house; the cannon was fired, and the ball fell near the steamer; the Virago replied with a bomb which struck the light-house.

At this time, a quarter after one, a small boat was despatched from the Pique, with the commander of that vessel to the Forte. The French Admiral with his aid-de-camp and surgeon, went to the President. Admiral Price had just been mortally wounded, his pistol having gone off in his hand, and the ball having pierced his heart. The drums beat a retreat, and their preparations for the battle were suspended

An hour later a Russian sloop, rigged like a coaster, was seen steering for Avatscha. Two small boats from the President pursued and took it with nine sailors who were on board.

On the morning of the 31st of August the Schakoff battery opened fire; the Pique the Forte, and the President began a heavy fire in reply. The Virago landed a body of troops near the battery on the right; the firing of the Schakoff battery began to slacken, the troops from the Virago advanced on the run toward the battery on the right; the Aurora by a steady fire, arrested them for a few moments; a loud huzza welcomed the fire, and when the smoke cleared away the troops were seen in possession of the battery. They destroyed the gun carriages and spiked the guns. The Aurora landed 200 men to retake the battery; the Pique and the Forte opened a fire to protect their men who re-embarked in good order.

The Forte threw a hail of canister shot on the open battery, which replied by a heavy fire, sending four balls into the frigate's hull, and as many through the bulwarks. At the end of half an hour, the half of the Russian guns were unfit for service; the President then turned to aid the Forte; at the expiration of two and a half hours the battery was silenced, and the Russians went on board the Aurora and Dwina. The cannonade then ceased, and on the vessels the night was spent in reparing the damage done during the day.

On the 1st of September, the Virago went to the bay of Tarinski, where the body of Admiral Price was interred. When there, the steamer picked up three American sailors, deserters from whalers, who communicated what was supposed to be important information with regard to the topography of Petropaulowski. On the 3rd of September, a council of war was held on the Forte, and it was resolved to make a second attack the next day. It was resolved to land 700 men, of both nations, including a picked body of 176 carbineers. Every man was to receive 60 cartridges, and an additional supply of ammunition was to be placed in sloops. Captain de la Grandiere for the French, and Captain Barridge for English, were to be in command of the troops on land. The day was passed in making preparations.

On Monday, the 4th of September, at three o'clock in the morning, the drums called all hands to quarters, and the troops for the land were taken on board the Virago, which landed them on the low portion of the peninsula. The battery fired a shot through the rigging of the Virago; the Forte replied, and dismounted one of the guns of the battery; the guns of the battery, handled with great skill, redoubled their fire on the Forte. The balls whistled over the frigate. One went through the mainmast, about fifteen feet above the deck; another was lodged in the midst of the mizenmast. The troops were landed at eight o'clock. The two batteries were silenced. The commander of the Forte pointed out a magazine of oil, and promised to promote the gunner who should set it on fire. The first ball effected the object; a heavy cloud of smoke, followed by a clear flame, marked the successful shot. The fire continued to burn for six hours.

The troops took up the march, the English marines in the lead. On arriving at the battery, the guns were spiked. The troops, leaving the battery, mounted the hill at a quickstep, and entered into a thick brushwood. Here they were received by a lively fire of musketry, to which they replied in the midst of the brush. The Virago leaving the troops, went to the point at the North, from which a constant fire was kept up. Here, on a brook near the town, a battery of five guns was unmasked, and then silenced by the Virago.

In the meantime the fight in the brushwood was very severe. The sailors fought like madmen under the destructive fire of the Russians. Capt. Parker fell, charging at the head of the English marines; M. Bourasset fell at his side. Lieut. Lefebre, of the Eurydice, was killed. Mr. Howard, aide-de-camp of the English Admiral, had his arm broken. Unable to sustain the unequal struggle, the orders was given to re-embark. The first object of the landing was attained. The battery was evacuated, the Russian cannoneers dead upon their guns, and their cannons spiked. To go further would have cost severe losses; to have dislodged the Russians from the wood, of which the size was unknown, would have required a siege. The troops retired slowly. One company of one hundred men hidden among the ruins of the battery when the remainder passed, gave the advancing Russians a check; under this protection the English and French carried off their wounded. On board the Forte the carpenters were busy in repairing damages. On the next day, the 5th, those killed in the assault were buried at Tarenski. On the 6th, the squadron made ready to depart, and on the 7th departed. During the day two vessels were seen, one a three-master, the other a schooner. The Virago took the schooner, and the President took the Sitka, a vessel of 800 tons, from Ayan, in Ochotsk sea, with provisions and arms from Petropaulowski. The cargo of the Sitka was valued at $200,000. The schooner was burned on the high sea on the 8th.

Such was the battle of Petropaulowski, one of the most bloody of the encounters which have so far taken place between the Allies and the Russians. Although the squadron was not entirely successful, yet it obtained several important advantages. The Russians have lost a large number of men, who cannot well be replaced at that remote point. They have also a large number of guns, spiked and rendered useless for service. Besides, they have lost the provisions, previously much needed, which were on the Sitka. Far from all reinforcements, without hope of obtaining provisions, the garrison of Petropaulowski is separated from the rest of the world by Arctic Winter. A fortress isolated in the midst of ice, its destruction would have been no conquest. The object was to attack the Russian vessels, not the fortifications. If the frigates were not taken, they were at least severely injured. The Aurora had her masts cut by the balls of the Forte, and her decks riddled; her sails were cut into rags, and many of her guns were dismounted. These injuries condemn the Aurora to inaction for the Winter, even if the ice and cold of the season did not prevent a departure.

The losses which our vessels have sustained, have not weakened their force nor decreased their enthusiasm. Superior to the enemy, they were arrested by obstacles which their courage would have overcome, but the destruction of which offered no adequate reward to the victors. Besides, the fleet was short of provisions. It was expected Petropaulowski would yield at the first assault and not that it would resist a siege. During the whole course of the expedition the most thorough good feeling prevailed between the French and English. On land and sea, in the harbor of Honolulu, and under the fire of Petropaulowski, the officers and sailors of the two nations, have learned by continual intercourse, to love and esteem each other. The two nations, rivals in other times, now friends, obey the same thought, and mix their blood upon the field of battle. In the polar seas of Asia, and on the shores of Bomarsund, they are animated by the same sympathy and emulation. The brave Parker, cheering our soldiers forward, died at their side; and, around him our officers and sailors fell, decimated by an invisible enemy. A friendship founded upon mutual esteem, and cemented by such recollections, assured the permanent union of two of the greatest nations of the earth.

The Echo du Pacifique contains a report of the numbers of the killed and wounded of the French, at Petropaulowski, as follows:

Frenchmen killed	12
Left on land	19
Wounded	67
Total of Frenchmen	98
Total of Englishmen	111
French and English	209

EXPECTED RENEWAL OF THE CAMPAIGN—ILLNESS OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER.

Most of the French ships have reached home. The British are yet cruising about.

Extensive preparations are being made in England for the siege of Cronstadt, which, it is stated, will be the first act of the spring campaign. The British war department has ordered the construction of 120 gun boats, carrying each two heavy guns, and of 40 floating batteries, carrying each 70 guns—total, 2,800 guns—to be ready by the opening of navigation in the spring.

The French are likewise making preparations.

There is a rumor, from Stockholm, that the Baltic fleet will, next spring, be under the command of Sir Edmund Lyons.

Napier is sick—unable to leave his ship.

PROMOTION OF LORD RAGLAN.—The London Standard says, it is understood that Lord Raglan will be raised to the rank of Field Marshal after the operations of Sebastopol. The Committee of the House of Commons reported in favor of additional Field Marshals of repute being made. We believe it is decided to give his Lordship £50,000 in lieu of pension; his private fortune was merely £1,000.

THE PATRIOTIC FUND.—The subscription list for this great national object will be headed by her Majesty with the donation of £1,000. His Royal Highness Prince Albert will contribute £500; and a like sum has been promised by the Duke of Wellington. Already a liberal subscription has been opened for the same object at Hamburg, where the news of the victory of the Alma was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The Directors of the Crystal Palace have set apart the 28th of October as a day which the whole proceeds will be given to the "Patriotic Fund." All sorts of day labourers, from the largest order of professional men to the humblest mechanics, appear to concur in proposing to set apart one day's pay for this patriotic purpose.

M. A. SHADD, General Agent for this paper, is in the Western part of the Province, on business connected with the paper. She will visit Michigan, Ohio and probably Pennsylvania before her return; will lecture by invitation, on the practicability of an en masse emigration of colored Americans to the Canadas and other British Provinces, north of the United States, and will, at the same time, seek to extend the circulation of the "PROVINCIAL FREEMAN." Business letters addressed as usual.

The Black Swan.

We have inserted, this week, an article from the Providence Daily Journal, charging Miss Greenfield, the "Black Swan," with being direlect to her duty, and the cause of humanity, by not singing substantial songs, such as would interest the masses; not associating with colored people, &c. About what Miss Greenfield does, or what she does not, we know but little; neither do we know whether she professes to be a reformer or not; nor are we going to presume that she does, merely because she has a black skin and may have been a slave; for it is well known that many colored persons in the slave countries hold slaves after having themselves been considered as "goods and chattels." Self-interest, under the same circumstances, will develop itself in the same manner among both white and black, and any one who looks for a different result, shows himself deficient in a knowledge of the relations of cause and effect, as applied to human actions.

Miss G., we presume, during her course o musical studies, has been accustomed to sing the kind of songs with which she presents her audiences, and has been taught to consider the music to which they are set, of a high order, and well adapted to display her powers. Being accustomed to view the matter in this light, it is but natural that she should seek to have audiences capable of appreciating her, and who, at the same time, will forward the "needful." Such being the case, if she needs a "setting down," such as the Journal gives her, she needs it in common with the majority of popular singers the world over, who are not often noted as champions of human rights. The assertion that she "does not associate with colored people," is, we think, a mistake. However, should she court the favor of white people, and especially those of the States, merely because they are white, we would regard her as doubly servile.

Some of the suggestions of the Journal are good, and no doubt might be profitably considered by public singers, who would interest and entertain the greatest number of human beings in their power. S.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A son of Rev. H. J. Young, quite recently, Pastor of the Sayer Street Church, in this City, was drowned about two weeks since in Chatham. It appears that he was attempting to cross a foot bridge over a creek near his father's residence, when he fell in and was drowned. He was a promising child, seven years of age.

☞ A man was murdered near the corner of the Kingston and Markham roads, in the Township of Scarboro', on Sunday last. He was a laborer on the Grand Trunk Railroad.

☞ A lad, named John King, was killed on the Central Road near Niagara town, one day last week. He was driving over the track, when a train coming up suddenly, killed him instantly.

☞ A row of wooden buildings, on Dundas Street, London, C. W., was destroyed by fire, on Thursday of last week.

☞ A fire occurred in the village of Newboro', on the 31st ult., destroying several thousand dollars worth of property. It originated from the falling of a lighted candle among some hay, in a stable.

☞ Last Thursday was observed as a day of fasting and prayer by the Presbyterian Church of Canada.

☞ The Cholera is raging in St. Johns, Newfoundland.

☞ A great fire occurred in Cleaveland, Ohio, last week.

☞ It is estimated that the valuation of the Agricultural produce of Ireland, this year, will be ten million pounds more than that of 1853.

☞ The New Era, on her passage from Breman, with 400 passengers, mostly German emigrants, was stranded between Deal and Long Branch, on the 13th; only about 140 were saved.

☞ One hundred and sixty thousand square feet, have been allotted to English Exhibitors in the Paris Exhibition, being more than one-third larger than the space allotted to France, in the London Exhibition in 1851.

☞ The Emperor of France has refused to allow Mr. Soule, the American Minister to Spain, to pass through France on his way back to Madrid.

Arrival of the Asia.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.

The Asia left Liverpool on the morning of the 4th inst., and reached her dock shortly after 9 this morning.

She brings 144 passengers.

The following telegraphic despatch was received at the Foreign Office, from Lord Stratford DeRedcliffe, just before the Asia's departure:—

"CONSTANTINOPLE. Oct. 28—Midnight.

"The Captain of the English steam transport, which left Balaklava on the evening of the 26th, confirms, in a great part, the information brought this morning by a French ship.

It appears that the Russians attacked the forts in the vicinity of Balaklava on the 25th, their number being about 30,000. The attack was unexpected. The Cossacks preceded the infantry. To resist them at first there were Ottoman troops and Scotch. The Turks gave way, and even left their guns, which being seized by the Russians were turned against them. The Scotch remained firm in their position. Other forces advanced and the Russians were forced to yield. The Russians remained, nevertheless, masters of two forts, from which they fired on the allies. Three Regiments of English light cavalry exposed to the fire of the Russian batteries suffered immensely.

The French took part in the affair with admirable bravery; and next day their position was attacked by 8,000 Russians, as well from the side of the town as from that of Balaklava. They repulsed the enemy with great slaughter.

The loss of the Russians must have been very great It is affirmed that the fire of the batteries of the town had much slackened, and according to the report of the wounded officers, some of whom have arrived at Balaklava, the belief continued that Sebastopol would soon be in the hands of the Allies.

Up to the 25th October, the siege and bombardment of Sebastopol were going on with regularity and success, and the loss of life in the town was so great that the air was said to be tainted by the number of the unburied dead.

Admiral Nachimoff had been killed by a bombshell.

The loss of the Allies is comparatively small, and Lord Raglan was understood to be favourable to a prolonged bombardment in preference to an immediate assault.

The Wiener Zeitung publishes the following despatch:—

BESSARABIA, Oct. 29.

On the 25th, General Liprandi attacked the detached camp of the English, and took the four redoubts which protected their position.

The assailant also took 11 guns.

At the same time such a powerful cavalry attack was made that it probably cost the English half their light cavalry.

Lord Cardigan, who commanded, escaped with difficulty.

Lord Dunkellin was taken prisoner.

Greek accounts from Odessa confirm this, and say that the English cavalry lost five hundred men.

It is evident that the Russians have received a considerable reinforcement, and a still stronger corps was expected from Perekop.

At the recent attacks upon the forts at the mouth of Sebastopl harbour, the vessels were much damaged. The British were said to be within 200 yards of the Russians' works, but the French works were not strong enough, and had been much injured. A deserter stated that the Russian loss was very great. The French division from——had passed the Bosphorus as a reinforcement to the besieging army. Official despatches make no mention of Liprandi's alleged victory. The affair is understood to have taken place in Eupatoria, where the Allies were on the look out for the Russian reinforcements. English accounts say the British cavalry were attacked, but the French advanced to their assistance, and the Russians retired.

Water was beginning to fail in Sebastopol.

Lord Raglan's chief interpreter, a Greek, had been sent to Constantinople as a Russian spy, Menschikoff reports officially the loss of the Russians at the Alma to be 4,500 and that fort Constantine had been much damaged, the Bastion having 33 guns dismounted.

Gortschakoff was apparently strengthening his position on the Danube.

Contradictory rumours were current regarding the progress of negotiations, and Austria will not certainly, unless compelled, come to an open rupture with Russia until she is confident of the support of Prussia and the Germanic Powers.

There is some talk of a note from Count Nesselrode, stating that Russia is prepared for all contingencies and will, under all circumstances, maintain her traditional policy to the last.

EVIDENCE

Of Sir Cusack Roney, Kt., in reference to the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, RAILWAY COMMITTEE ROOM,
3rd November, 1854.

Sir Cusack Roney, Kt, Managing Director of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, called in and examined:

1. Have you a copy of the amalgamation agreement of the Grand Trunk Railway Company? I have.

2. Does it contain the contracts with the English and Canadian Contractors for the several sections of the Railroad?—It does.

3. How many sections are there referred to in the agreement that have reference to contracts? Describe them.—There are four sections, one from Quebec to Trois Pistoles, one from Montreal to Toronto, one from Belleville to Peterboro,' and one from Toronto to Sarnia, and there is also the Victoria Bridge included in the agreement.—[We leave out the question when the sense is clear without them in order to save space, Ed. Leader.]

4. The length of the Montreal and Toronto section is 345 miles, and the total cost is £3,000,000. (All members that I shall give to the Committee to-day referring to figures and accounts are in sterling.)

5. The Provincial guarantee on this section is £1,035,000.

6. The contracts prove that the line and all its appurtenances shall be equal to any first-class English Railway, and superior to any now known or used on this Continent. The Bridges are to be of masonry or brick work with iron tubes across the spans. All these Tubes are on the principle of the well known Britannia Bridge across the Manai Straits in Wales. The Stations and all other Buildings, such as Engineer Repairing Shops, &c. are to be of brick or stone covered with slate or metal.

7. The contracts include a supply of Engines, freight and passenger cars, snow ploughs, work-shops, &c. There is a specification which gives in detail the number of Engines, Cars, both Passenger and Freight, as well as Gravel Cars, Snow Ploughs, Repairing Shops, Water Houses, Wood-Sheds, in short every article required for efficiently working the Railway.

8. The Contractors are bound to pay the entire interest on the Capital Stock as well as debentures of all kinds until the delivery of the Railway to the Company.

9. The contract price for the Belleville and Peteboro' line is to be £400,000. It is fifty miles in length. The works on this section, and indeed I may say upon every other section of the Grand Trunk line are to be of the character described in my answer, having reference to the works of the Montreal and Toronto section. The line between Belleville and Peterborough is not yet commenced; it is one of the portions we propose to postpone for the present, that is, until the money and labor markets are in a more favorable condition far carrying on great undertakings in Canada.

10. The contract price of the Victoria Bridge is one million four hundred thousand pounds, with a power to the Engineer-in-Chief of the Company to certify for the payment of another £100,000 if, at the completion of the work, he is satisfied that that additional sum should be paid. Messrs. Peto & Co.

11. There will be about £200,000 expended on the Bridge this year, and it is intended to expend from £200,000 to £260,000 each year during its construction. All the preliminary arrangements for carrying out the works have been organized; and of actual work done, what we call Pier No. 1, that is the pier next to the northern abutment, is finished. The Pier No. 2 is progressing very satisfactorily, and if the weather continue open, it may be nearly finished this season. The northern abutment will be brought about as high as the winter level of the St. Lawrence. The amount of masonry in this abutment may be judged by the fact that it is 242 feet long, 90 feet wide, and about 24 feet above the bed of the river. The solid stone embankment of 1200 feet long, leading from the north shore of the St. Lawrence to the north abutment, is in active progress, and will be carried on during the winter. With reference to next year's works, I beg to state that they will, in addition to being carried on from the north shore, be advanced from the south shore, so that under favorable circumstances, by this time twelve months, both the abutments, the solid banks leading to them, and seven or eight piers may be finished. Some progress has already been made in prepairing the tubes, and this work will be carried on energetically during the winter, and I believe a couple of them will be put in their places next summer. With reference to the enquiry of an honorable Member (Mr. Merrit,) I am unable to say whether the space between the under surface of the Bridge and the summer level of the St. Lawrence is in conformity with the first Act. I only know that there will be an interval of 60 feet between the one and the other.

12. The line from Montreal to Brockville, about 125 miles, will be opened in September, 1855. The line from Quebec to St. Thomas, 40 miles on the Trois Pistoles section, will also be opened in September, 1855. The section from Brockville to Kingston, about 50 miles, and from Kingston to Whitby, about 140 miles, in September, 1856. The line from Whitby to Toronto, about 36 miles, will almost certainly be opened in September, of next year. It is intended to open it, but I do not wish to speak of this length so confidently as I do of the other sections that I have stated will be opened in September of next year. The section from Toronto to Stratford, 90 miles, will be opened on the 1st of October, 1855.

13. The Committee then are to understand that it is expected that 390 miles of the Grand Trunk Railway, exclusive of the Montreal and Portland line, will be opened for traffic by next autumn? Yes, the Quebec and Richmond, which will be opened within three weeks, and the foregoing, will make 390 miles.

14. The Toronto and Sarnia section is 172 miles long. The contract price is £1,376,000. The character of the works, and the supply of stock, are precisely the same as on the other sections of the Railroad. The contractors are Messrs. Gzowski & Co.

15. How much has been expended on the works of the Toronto and Sarnia section to the present date?—£576,758.

16. The contract price for the Quebec and Richmond section is 650,000*l.*, and the Provincial guarantee is 250,000*l.*, or at about the rate of 2,500*l.* a mile, the length of the line being about 100 miles. The contract for this line is less than for the other sections of the Grand Trunk. The masonry of the bridges is of the same character, and the bridges themselves are tubular, the iron being of the same proportions as in the other sections of the Grand Trunk, but the station houses are to be of wood, and the surface width of the Railway is two feet less than the other sections. It is, I think, sixteen feet and the others are eighteen. The foundations of all large structures are for a double track.

17. The length of the Trois Pistoles line is 154 miles. The contract price is 1,224,000*l.*, and 469,000*l.* is the amount of the Provincial guarantee.

18. Before the amalgamation of the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Company with the Grand Trunk, 400,000*l.* of Provincial debentures had been issued to that Company. Since the amalgamation, 605,800*l.* of Provincial debentures have been issued to the Grand Trunk Company, of which 67,500*l.* have been given in right of the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Company, 250,000*l.* on the Quebec and Richmond, and 288,300*l.* in right of the Grand Trunk proper. This last is up to the latest date of our returns from London, namely, the 31st of August last. The sections from Montreal to Toronto, and from Quebec to Trois Pistoles are the sections entitled to the Provincial guarantee.

12. Are any of the Provincial debentures issued directly to the Contractors?—No, the Contractors receive all their payments from the Company in money.

20. Are the Company restricted from selling the debentures of the Province below par?—They are not sold by the Company, they are issued by the Agents of the Province to the Shareholders of the Company at par, on their paying for them in full, and they are then subjected to the control of the holders, like any other description of property.

21. Describe the process by which payments on account of works are made by the Company?—The Engineer-in-Chief of the Company, Mr. Alexander Ross, receives at the end of each month from his different sub-engineers, accounts of the progress of each and every work. These several statements are considered and arranged in his office, and he submits to each monthly meeting of the Board of Directors, certificates, detailing under the several heads of Expenditure the amounts to which the contractors are entitled for the previous month. This process is adopted for each of the sections which I have named in a previous answer. The certificates having been considered by the Board, resolutions authorizing the payments of the sums to which the contractors are entitled, are passed and recorded. Payment is, in the following week, made to the contractors under the authority and superintendence of the Finance Committee of Directors. This practice is strictly in accordance with the English practice, and was adopted on the Railway of which I was Secretary for eight years in England, during which period we expended upwards of eight millions sterling on works.

22. Describe the proceedings adopted to entitle the Company to the money paid in London by the shareholders on account of Provincial debentures?—When we are aware that works on the sections of the Railway entitled to the Provincial guarantee have been executed to the extent of 100,000*l.*, I write, by direction of the Board, to the Secretary of the Board of Works, and enclose a certificate from the Engineer-in-Chief of the Company, stating the amount of work done on each section. I also request that the Board of Works will issue orders to the Agents of the Province in London, Messrs. Glyn and Baring, to release from their charge, as agents, and to hand to the Company, the proportion that 40 per cent. bears to the amount certified by the Engineer-in-Chief. The Board of Works instruct their officer to put himself in communication with the Chief Engineer of the Company, and also personally to visit and report upon the works upon which the release is sought. The Railway Commissioners subsequently meet and authorize the Receiver General to instruct the London agents of the Province to release such amounts as they, on report of their officer, may consider proper. This amount, under authority of such order, is then handed over to the Company, and lodged to its credit at its banker's in London.

23. The total Capital of the Grand Trunk Company is 9,500,000*l.* The miles of Railway finished and under contract, are 1,112, viz.: Montreal to Portland, 292; Quebec to Trois Pistoles, 158; Quebec to Richmond, 100; Montreal to Toronto, 345; Belleville to Peterborough, 50; Toronto to Sarnia, 172. Of these, the section from Montreal to Portland, is open, the Quebec and Richmond about to be opened, and 290 miles will be opened next year,—in the following year, 297. The Company temporarily suspends 233 miles. The number of miles entitled to the garantee is 724; and those not entitled to the guarantee. 388. The amount of the guarantee is 1,811,500*l.*

24. Can you state the amount of money paid by the Shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, on account of Shares, Provincial Bonds, and Company's Bonds, up to the latest period to which you have an account?—3,721,900*l.*

25. Can you state the amount expended by the Company, on the Montreal and Toronto, and Quebec and Trois Pistoles sections of the Grand Trunk Company, and how much has been received on account of the guarantee from the Government?—The amount expended is 1,296,423*l.* The amount released by the Province, 310,000*l.*

26. The names of the English Contractors are Messrs. Brassey, Peto, Betts and Jackson. The Canadian Contractors are Messrs. Gzowski, Galt, Holton and Macpherson.

27. The total Capital subscribed on the Grand Trunk proper is 8,083,600*l.*, and the amount paid on such capital is 2,171,900*l.*, of which a very small proportion is paid in Canada. On 6,246,000*l.* of this capital, the shareholders receive share certificates at the rate of one share for each 25*l.*, and they also receive debenture certificates which specify on the face of them the amount paid up. The debenture certificate also contains an undertaking on the part of the Company that when calls on certificates are paid in full, the holder will be entitled to exchange it for a Province Debenture or Company's Debenture, as the case may be. The proportion which each Share subscribed entitles the holders to, is, that each 25*l.* of share capital carries with it a right of 25*l.* of debentures, of which 12*l.* 10s. is Province debentures, and 12*l.* 10s. is Company's debentures. The 826,600*l.* capital remaining to make the 8,083,600*l.*, does not carry Province debentures.

28. The total capital is 9,500,000*l.* Of this, as I have already stated, 8,083,600*l.* was the portion required to be raised in London in April, 1853. This capital consisted of stock, 4,181,400*l.*, Company Bonds, 2,090,700*l.*, and Province Debentures, 1,811,500*l.*; of this capital there has been paid up on stock, 883,156*l.* Company's Bonds, 553,327*l.*, and Province debentures, 735,417*l.*, 605,800*l.*, of Bonds have been issued, viz., 67,500*l.* on account of the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Section, 250,000*l.*, on account of the Quebec and Richmond, 288,300*l.*, on account of the Montreal and Toronto, and Quebec and Trois Pistoles Sections, in all 605,800*l.* The balance which is in the hands of the Agents of the Province, is 425,416*l.* The remaining portion of the 9,500,000*l.*, consists of capital raised prior to the amalgamation, by the following Companies: St. Lawrence and Atlantic: Share, 246,000*l.*, Bonds of the Province, 400,000*l.*, and other Bonds, 233,000*l.*, total 879,100*l.*—Quebec and Richmond Shares 305,000*l.*, Bonds 100,000*l.*; Toronto and Guelph Shares, 132,300*l.*

29. Approximately I can inform the Committee that 430,000*l.* have been expended on the section between Toronto and Sarnia (in addition to the amount paid on the Toronto and Guelph Shares, which is about 126,000*l.*) On the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Line 315,000*l.* On the Richmond 50,000*l.* On the Victoria Bridge 150,000*l.* I can give the precise sums spent on the Montreal and Toronto, and on the Quebec and Trois Pistoles are the sections that are entitled to the Provincial guarantee. Toronto and Montreal 1,131,063*l.* Quebec and Trois Pistoles, 165,350*l.*

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Monday, Nov. 6, 1854.

Among the petitions received and read were the following:—

Of Ann H. Booth, and other females, of the village of Fergus,—of George Pirie and others, of the counties of Wellington and Grey,—and of James Bogg and others, of the township of Roxborough,—of Wellington Square Division, No. 103,—of Oakville Division, No. 61,—of Acton Division, No. 242,—of Troy Division, No. 244,—and of Spikes' Corners Division, No. 331,—all of the Order of the Sons of Temperance,—of Joseph Anderson and others, of the county of Welland,—of James Tweddell and others,—of Joseph Parkin and others,—of J. R. Ardagh and others,—of James Hill and others, of the village of Mitchell, county of Perth,—of Peter Sinclair and others, of the township of Bruce, county of Bruce,—of Samuel Whaley and others, of the township of Mornington, and other places in the county of Perth,—of the Municipality of the township of West Oxford,—of Leonard M. Mathews and others, of the township of Crowland,—of Thomas Lowersby and others, of the village of Port Robinson,—of A. Page and others, of the township of Thorold,—of J. W. Berney and others, of the township of Augusta,—of Warren Lyman and others, of the township of Augusta,—of Isaac Foster and others, of the township of Elizabethtown,—and of William London and others, of the township of Elizabethtown, praying for the passing of a Prohibitory Liquor Law.

Of John Cameron, Esquire, and others, praying an Act of incorporation for the construction of a Railway to connect Port Perry on Lake Scugog with the Ontario, Simcoe and Huron Union Railroad.

THE CLERGY RESERVES.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition from the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, now in Synod assembled, against the Clergy Reserve Bill. With the permission of the House, Mr. Brown read the petition.

THE SUFFERERS BY THE WAR.

Hon. Mr. HINCKS said the subject he was about to bring under the consideration of the House, he felt assured, would be deemed of sufficient importance to excuse him for taking the unusual course of introducing it without notice. He need not remind the House that the two nations from which the inhabitants of this country were respectively sprung were engaged in a conflict of no ordinary character. That war had been undertaken, not for the purpose of aggrandizement by the acquisition of territory, but for the purpose of defending an ally whose territories were invaded by a power which for many years had been shewing a lust for the acquisition of territory. It was a war of civilization against barbarianism, and there could be little doubt that if in that contest Russia had been successful, she would have gone on extending her dominions over Europe until the liberties of the whole of Europe were endangered. Therefore every lover of the human race had watched the progress of that contest with the most intense interest, and much more should the people of this country sprung from the two nations which had shewn such a generous feeling in defending an ally, much more should they enter into such a feeling. Public opinion in England and France had sustained the two Governments in the war by cheerfully assuming the extraordinary burdens of increased taxation. But they had gone beyond that, and funds were being raised for the support of the widows and orphans of those who had fallen in the struggle, and they found by the last mail that her Majesty, to meet public opinion on the subject, had appointed a Royal Commission with a view to furnishing a proper organization for receiving and dispensing the funds to be raised—a Commission which embraced some of the highest names in the realm, and having Her Majesty's Royal Consort at its head. He believed that public sympathy existed strongly on this subject throughout Canada. He believed there was every desire on the part of the people of Canada to their utmost in this matter. This was one of those occasions on which the ministry ought rather to follow than to lead public opinion, and he hoped there would be such a unanimous manifestation of feeling on the part of the independent members of the House, as would warrant the Government in coming down with a proposition for a vote in aid of this patriotic fund. If the feelings he has expressed were generally shared in, as he believed they were, he had no doubt that such a proposition would be responded to in a generous and handsome manner. He need scarcely add that of course anything that was done should be for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the allied armies of France as well as England.

Mr. GALT concurred in every word that had fallen from the hon. member for Renfrew in regard to the efforts now being made by the two countries from which they derived their origin in the great cause of civilization and general liberty. He trusted the Government would give the proposition that consideration which was due to it, and that this country would evince the sympathy it felt with those who were struggling for the rights of man.

Hon. Mr. ROBINSON supported the proposition, and had no doubt that the House would aid they might ask the House to grant, would cheerfully be given.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG concurred in the remarks which had been made by the hon. members who had proceeded him. He believed that a Parliamentary grant would be a much better mode of giving aid, than the taking up of individual subscriptions, for by the former mode every man, woman, and child would feel that they had contributed to the fund.

Mr. Gamble, Mr. Dorin of Montreal, Mr. Cauchon, and Mr. Ferrie, also briefly supported the proposition.

Mr. Loranger opposed it. At a time when the country required funds for carrying out internal improvements, and for furnishing the Seigniorial indemnity, he did not think the hon. members would be justified in putting their hands into the public chest in order to shew their generosity.

Mr. Larwill also opposed the proposition. He did not think that this Legislature was called upon to shew any sympathy with the objects of the war. Hon. members talked about fighting for liberty, but he would like to know where at the present moment a greater despotism was to be found than in France. When the liberties of Hungary were crushed where were England and France then? When the people of Italy rose to claim their liberties, what was the conduct of France in that case?

Hon. Mr. Merritt said it would be an easy matter for hon. members to vote any sum of money out of the public chest, and then vaunt about their liberty, and the effect it would have in England. But he (Mr. Merritt) was no hypocrite, and he could not express his sympathy in what his heart did not concur. He had no sympathy whatever in the war between the Turks and the Russians, two of the most tyrannical despots in the world. The hon. member for Renfrew talked about the rights and liberties of the world. The rights and liberties of the world! When he should see England and France unite to restore Kossuth to Hungary, Mazzini to Italy, and nationality to Poland, then their alliance would have his sympathy, which was not called forth by the present war. If hon. members wanted to shew their patriotism, let them get up a subscription out of their own private purses.

Mr. Bowes, and Mr. Pouliot supported, and Mr. Masson opposed the proposition of the member for Renfrew.

Sir Allan McNab hoped that hon. members opposite, the leaders of the opposition, would not leave the House in ignorance of their views. He alluded to the members for Lambton and—

Mr. Brown said that after the appeal just made by the hon. and gallant Knight, he felt that he could not with propriety continue silent. In regard to the war itself, he thought there could be but one opinion that England and France had won for themselves undying honour by the manner to which they had came forward to preserve the liberties of the world. (Hear, hear.) A more righteous or a more disinterested war the world had never seen. (Hear, hear.) It might be alleged that England and France had a view to their own interests in resisting the occupation of Stamboul by Russia,—but however this might be averred in regard to the Statesmen of these countries, it certainly could not apply to the masses of the people who were now so readily and so nobly pouring forth their blood and their treasure in defending a weak and oppressed nation against the rapacity of a remorseless tyrant. When, in the history of the world until now, have we seen great nations going to war, without one thought of conquest or self-aggrandizement, but simply to maintain justice? And if there have been times and events in the past, and these not long gone by, when we may have deplored that a blow was not struct in defence of the down-trodden Europe—is that a reason why we should withhold our sympathy now? The widows and orphans of the men who have fallen in such a cause were entitled to the warm sympathies of the freemen of the world, and were an appeal made to the people of Canada for individual contributions, he (Mr. Brown) was persuaded it would be most generously responded to. As regards a vote by Parliament towards the fund, he thought it would be a most becoming act on the part of Canada, at such a moment, and he would cordially sustain it. (Hear, hear.) The reason why he did not rise at an earlier moment, to state his opinion, arose from the manner in which the proposition had been brought forward. No notice, no hint, had been given that the subject would be mooted. A vote like this should be acceded to unanimously and he was quite sure a little previous consultation would have secured unanimity. (Hear, hear.) Suddenly thrust on the house, as it was, he had thought it expedient not to encourage debate until hon. gentlemen who might now have doubts had time for reflection. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Hincks said he had communicated with certain members of the opposition, and had expected that the hon. member for Lambton would have learned his intentions through them. He regretted, however, that he had not communicated with that hon. member personally. But this was a matter, in which previous notice was scarcely necessary, having originated with the public themselves, and being one on which the feeling out of doors had already been strongly expressed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald [Glengary] said that, so far from having been informed that the subject was to be brought forward, he was at a loss to know what the subject was until after the hon. member had gone on for some time with his remarks. He hoped, however, it would not be supposed, because he had not expressed his opinion at an early stage of the conversation, that he was opposed to this movement. He would be the very last to oppose a movement for a public vote towards so charitable and humane an object, and with the exception of one or two members who had expressed themselves unfavorably, he believed the whole house would support a liberal grant. But he concurred in the remarks of his hon. friend on his left [Mr. BROWN], that this was not a matter in which the House should have been taken by surprise, instead of allowing members time to consider the matter, before being called upon to speak upon it.

Sir Allan McNab said he had no communication till a very late period of the intention of the hon. member for Renfrew to bring the matter up, but he could say for himself, and he thought he could speak also for his colleagues, that they most fully entered into the feelings which had been so well expressed by honourable members of this House. He thought it well that his hon. friend from Glengary had an opportunity of expressing his views. Representing as he did more than 2000 McDonalds, and looking at the recent exploits of the gallant Highlanders commanded by Sir Colin Campbell, it would be strange indeed if he did not give his cordial support to the proposition now before the House. The Government would be ready at the earliest possible moment to bring down such a measure as they hoped would be received with satisfaction by the House, so that although they could not lend their brethren of France and England a hand in the struggle in which they were now engaged they might at least by contributing their mite for the relief of the sufferers, shew their cordial feelings of sympathy with them.

Two Fires in Kingston.

Last night, about 11 o'clock, a fire broke out in a small building in the rear of the storehouses connected with the "Chequered Store," corner of Princess and Bagot streets, which was not checked until a large space of ground had been burned over and much property destroyed. The wind was blowing half a gale at the time, and the flames were urged forward with surprising rapidity. The buildings occupied by Messrs. Sullivan (of the chequered store) Cridiford, Hanlan, Cone, and others whose names we do not know, were destroyed, while the large stone building occupied by Delaney & Bowes, and by Haldenby, was only saved by the strong exertions of the firemen, chiefly of No. 2. St. Paul's Church also fell a prey to the flames, the roof having been ignited by the thickly falling cinders fanned into action by the prevailing high wind, and no means being at hand to avert the catastrophe. The building was insured, but we have not ascertained in what amount. The buildings on the corner of Pricess and Bagot streets, owned by Dr. Jickson, were partially covered. Mr. Slivan and Delaney & Bowes were also insured, but the loss sustained is chiefly that occasioned by the damage incident to the hurried removal of their goods. We have not had time to obtain further particulars.

Hardly had this fire been checked and the rain which began to fall relieved the tired firemen from the labour of guarding against further damages in this quarter, when a second alarm of fire was sounded. This was between 3 and 4 o'clock. A fire had broken out in what was formerly known as the "St. George's Assembly Room," a large wooden building, off Wellington street, and surrounded by other buildings of like character, forming the corner of Wellington and Barrack streets. This fire rapidly progressed under the influence of the gale. The National Hotel, opposite, was seriously threatened by the intense heat emitted by the burning masses, but escaped; the fire passed over to the opposite corner, taking in its course what is known as the Meagher Buildings, two of the stone houses owned by Mrs. Benson, and forced its way through the block to Rideau street, where it will probably be stayed. At the time we pen this the flames are still at work, but it is improbable much further damage will be done.

A large number of persons have by these conflagritions been deprived of their places of business, and rendered homeless, while a still larger number have suffered from the hasty removal of their goods or household stuff, or partial injury to their buildings, but we cannot now prepare a list of the sufferers.

One-third of the block bounded by Princess and Queen, Montreal and Bagot streets; one half of that bounded by Queen and Barrack, Wellington and King streets, and one half of that bounded by Wellington, Rideau and Barrack Streets, have been destroyed by these fires, besides the loss of St. Paul's Church, which stood in the old churchyard, yet the value of the property swept off is, with the exception of three or four of the buildings which fell a prey to the flames, of comparatively little value, and much of it uninsurable. We shall endeavour to publish full particulars in our next issue.

Another fire was prevented by timely discovery. The steamer Prince Albert, lying at A. & D. Shaw's wharf, was discovered to be on fire during the night by the watchman on the premises, and the fire at once checked. Had this gained headway and laid hold of the large warehouses there, the consequences would have been most serious.

English Correspondence of the Wesleyan.

Manchester, Oct. 20, 1854.

Dr. Cumming, and the story about his having preached before the Queen—The Doctor as an Author—Mr. Vincent—Mr. Young—The Congregational Union—The Evangelical Alliance and the American Board.

I have been somewhat amused by an extraordinary story which is told in a sketch of Dr. Cumming, written by a correspondent of yours, who rejoices in the non de guerre of Septimus. He says that the Queen invited the great Anti-"man of sin" Doctor, to preach before her at Balmoral; that the Bishop of London reproved her for so doing; that she retorted; and I don't know what besides. Now this is a very interesting narrative, and makes Dr. Cumming appear a great man—a very great man—in fact a much greater man than he is. Unfortunately, however, this story is true only in this respect, viz:—that Dr. Cumming did preach before her Majesty. But it came to pass in the following manner:—Dr. Cumming is very fond of popularity—there can be no question about that—and he aspired to the honour of offering the Bread of Life to Royalty itself. It so happened that he knew the minister of the church at Balmoral which the Queen was accustomed to attend. Being in Scotland on one occasion at the same time as Her Majesty, he paid a visit to his friend at Balmoral, and obtained permission from him to preach in his church on the following Sunday morning. The Queen, according to custom, attended the service quite in ignorance of the fact that the pulpit was to be occupied by Dr. Cumming. I need scarcely say that the Doctor's conduct was a gross breach of etiquette, and that he is not likely to have a second chance of denouncing Romanism in the ear of Majesty. On his return to the South, he published the sermon "preached before the Queen," which, of course, increased the belief that he had been invited to do so, and which I understand, very much annoyed our Sovereign. These facts were told me by an eminent literary man—the Editor of an influential metropolitan journal—with whom I recently had tea. Dr. Cumming's reputation as an Author is not worth much. His wholesale plagairisms are notorious. Edward Miall in the Nonconformist has been very active in the exposure of some of the more glaring of his literary pilferings. I mention those facts in order to show that great, and good, as he may be, and doubtless is, he is not the archangel that your correspondent describes him as being.

Mr. Vincent, the Agent of the American Reform Tract, and Book Society, informs me that he has challenged the Rev. C. C. Young, the champion of the American Board of Foreign Missions, to a public discussion on the connection existing between that body, and American Slavery. I am glad he has taken this step, for there is nothing like a fair platform-fight to decide questions of fact. Mr. Young in his reply to Mr. Vincent makes the extraordinary statement that the American Board is an Anti-Slavery body! and in proof of this monstrous assertion, he refers to the "Treat Letter," which has never received the sanction of the Board† and which names so many exceptional cases in which Christians may hold slaves as to cover the whole ground of slavery. In the meanwhile the American Board is gaining power in this country. The Congregational Union is pledged to support its missions in the East. Mr. Young is to read a paper on the subject at the meetings of the Union, which are now being held in Newcastle. Mr. Vincent asked permission to reply, but he received a polite refusal. He, I am glad to say, is quite equal to the emergency, and is creating no small stir by his plain, matter of fact letters. Josiah Conder, one of the Committee of the Congregational Union, and Editor of the Patriot, opposes him in that journal; while Dr. Campbell insultingly excludes his letters altogether from the British Banner. But they have appeared in the Nonconformist, the Patriot, the Manchester Examiner, and Times and the Leeds Mercury. The Evangelical Alliance, I believe, is pledged to sustain the American Board in its Eastern missions. Sir Culling Eardley eulogised them at the last meeting of that body; and moreover, hinted that a union of the missionary societies of this country with those of America had been the subject of consideration. This is important as showing the tendency of events, and as exhibiting the little practical value of the Anti-Slavery sentiments of this country.

The World's Exhibition at Paris.

The following is the Report of the Committee appointed at the meeting of the Commissioners held on the 31st ultimo, at Quebec, to suggest the course to be adopted to secure a proper representation of Canadian Products at the Paris Exhibition next year:—

The Committee appointed at the Meeting of the Commissioners held on the 31st ultimo, to suggest the course to be adopted to secure a prompt representation of Canadian Products at the Paris Exhibition next year, have the honour to report:—

That after much consideration and discussion they have arrived at the conclusion that it is absolutely necessary, in order to ensure a successful representation of the Province of Canada at the Exhibition, that authority should be given to the Commission to purchase such articles as they deem essential to that object.

They are of opinion that any attempt to induce voluntary effort by means of Local Fairs would be fruitless. The experience of all who were actively engaged in promoting the Canadian Exhibition at the World's Fair in London in 1851, is, that the success of the present effort must depend entirely upon the energy and judgment to be displayed by an efficient Executive, to be appointed by the Commissioners.

They would strongly recommend that the Commissioners should delegate their power to an Executive Committee, to be composed of twenty-one members, fifteen of whom should be in a position to give their attendance at Quebec; two should be resident at or near Montreal, the remainder to be gentlemen specially connected with the industrial resources of Upper Canada.

The Executive Committee should appoint their own Chairman and Secretary or Secretaries; such Chairman and Secretaries to be the permanent Chairman and Secretaries of the Commission

They recommend the immediate selection of such Executive Committee, and with a view to aid the judgment of the Commissioners, they have ventured to suggest the name of twenty-one gentlemen, who would, in their opinion, be efficient members of it, to wit:

The Hon. T. McKay, the Hon. N. F. Belleau, the Hon. F. Hincks, the Hon. J Young, Mr. Gamble, M. P. P., Mr. Langton, M. P. P., Mr. Cartier, M. P. P., Mr. Tache, M. P. P., Mr. Stevenson, M. P. P., Mr. Brown, M. P. P, Mr. Rhodes, M. P. P., Mr. A. A. Dorion, M. P. P., Sir Cusack Rooney, Mr. Street, Mr. E. W. Thomas, Mr. Hullowell, Mr. Archamboult, Assomption, Mr. Matrie, Mr. Legare, Artist, Mr. R. L. Dension, Mr. Leeming.

They further recommend that in communicating the appointment of each Member, enquiry should be made from him, whether he is prepaired to give his active services to the Committee, and in case he declines doing so, or after accepting he neglects three successive meetings of the Committee without furnishing a satisfactory excuse, his seat may be considered vacant, and the Committee may fill up the vacancy.

They recommend that the quorum of the Executive Committee shall be five.

The Committee do not deem it necessary to go into a detailed statement of their views as to the steps to be taken by the Executive Committee, to carry out the important objects which it is proposed to trust to them.

They would, however, probably in the first instance, determine as to the classes of Canada products which it would be expedient to offer for exhibition.

Sub-Committees might take charge of the various classes, and ascertain through the Local Committee, to be formed in all sections of the Province, what articles it may be desirable to obtain, and what may be the best means of procuring them.

While the Committee are of opinion that it is unnecessary for them to enter into any detailed exposition of their views regarding the action of the Executive Committee, which can best be determined by that body after appointment, they desire to call especial attention to the importance of securing the publication of a work fully illustrative of the Province of Canada in its various points of view, to be accompanied hy a map exhibiting the geographical features of the Country, and having a table showing the several routes to the great fields of emigration on this continent, the cost of transport, &c. Such work to be gratuitously distributed at the Exhibition, and to be published in the English, French, and German languages for circulation in different parts of Europe.

They suggest for the consideration of the Executive Committee, that competition should be invited for such work by the offer of one or more adequate prizes.

It has not fallen within the province of this Committee to enter into the consideration of the means which will be required, to effect the objects contemplated by the Commission.

They entertain no doubt, however, that such a sum as will suffice to carry out efficiently the plan which they have suggested above, will be expended to the advantage and to the best interest of the Province.

The whole, nevertheless humbly submitted.

T. McKay, Chairman.

Why Woman was made of a Rib.—A young lady having asked a surgeon why woman was made from the rib of a man in preference to any other bone, he gave the following gallant answer:—"She was not taken from the head, lest she should rule over him; nor from his feet, lest he should trample upon her; but she was taken from his side, that she might be his equal; from under his arm, that he might protect her; from near his heart, that he might cherish and love her.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C. W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

Poetry.

From the Dublin University Magazine.

Beyond the River.

Time is a river, deep and wide,
And while along its banks we stray,
We see our loved ones o'er its tide
Sail from our sight away, away.
Where are they sped—they who return
No more to glad our longing eyes?
They've passed from life's contracted bourne,
To land unseen, unknown, that lies
Beyond the river.

'Tis hid from view; but we may guess
How beautiful that realm must be;
For gleamings of its loveliness,
In visions granted, oft we see,
The very clouds that o'er it throw
Their veil, unraised for mortal sight,
With gold and purple tintings glow,
Reflected from the glorious light
Beyond the river.

And gentle airs, so sweet, so calm,
Steal sometimes from that viewless sphere;
The mourner feels their breath of balm,
And soothed sorrow dries the tear.
And sometimes list'ning ear may gain
Entrancing sound that hither floats;
The echo of a distant strain,
Of harps and voices blending notes.
Beyond the river.

There are our loved ones in their rest;
They've crossed Time's River—now no more
They heed the bubbles on its breast,
Nor feels the storms that sweep its shore;—
But there pure love can live, can last—
They look for us their home to share;
When we in turn away have passed,
With joyful greetings wait us there,
Beyond the river.

RECIPES, &c.

To Make Apple Custard.—Select good, sweet apples, such as will cook well; pare, cut, and stew them; when thoroughly done, stir them briskly, till the pieces are all broken fine. Allow the apples time to cool, and thin down to the proper consistency with good milk, and bake with one crust, as you would bake a common custard, or a pumpkin pie. If a richer pie is wanted, a few eggs may be added. If the apples are totally sweet, but little sugar or other sweetening will be required. If desirable, spices may be added.

Salt Your Chimneys.—In building a chimney put a quantity of salt in the mortar with which the inner course of bricks are to be laid. The effect will be, that there never will be any accumulation of soot in that chimney. The philosophy is thus stated: the salt in the portion of mortar which is exposed absorbs moisture every damp day. The soot thus becoming damp, falls down to the fireplace. This appears to be an English discovery. It is used with success in Canada.

Baked Hams.—Most persons boil hams. It is much better baked, if baked right Soak it for an hour in clean water and wipe it dry, next spread it all over with thin batter, and then put into a deep dish with sticks under it, to keep it out of the gravy. When it is fully done, take off the skin and matter crusted upon the flesh side, and set it away to cool. You will find it very delicious, but too rich for dyspeptics.

Spotted Dick.—Put three-quarters of a pound of flour into a basin, half a pound of beef-suet, half ditto of currants, two ounces of sugar, a little cinnamon, mix with two eggs and two gills of milk; boil in either mould or cloth for one hour and a half; serve with melted butter, and a little sugar over.

Beet Vinegar.—Take a bushel of sugar beets, fresh from the ground, wash and grate them. Press out the juice, which will amount to about six gallons, and put it in an empty and perfectly sweet barrel. In a fortnight you will have an excellent article of vinegar, and as pleasant as that from cider or even wine.

Veal Pudding.—Cut two pounds of raw veal, four ounces of ham, or lean bacon; season delicately with a teaspoonful of salt, the half of pepper, a little flour and chopped parsley, a gill of water; proceed as for the other puddings, boil two hours, and serve.

Light Dough Dumplings.—Get one pound of dough, make it into small balls the size of eggs, boil in plenty of water, and use it for roast or boiled meats, or serve with butter and sugar, or with gravy.

Gingerbread.—Mix together three and a half pounds of flour; three quarters of a pound of sugar; one pint of molasses; a quarter of a pound of ginger, and some ground orange-peel.

CURING HAMS.

The following are the recipes for curing hams, which received the first and second prizes at the late annual show of the Maryland State Agricultural Society:

To every 115 pounds of Hams take 3 ounces saltpetre, 1½ do. saleratus, 8½ pounds of alum salt, 6 gallons pure water, 2 pounds of ground spice. When the meat is perfectly cold, pour in the above combination until the meat is entirely covered, let it remain 6½ weeks, then remove and bang it up with hock down; when dry, smoke it well with green hickory wood; take the advantage of a clear and dry day for smoking, and on the occasion of wet weather, open the smoke house door, to prevent skippers, &c. Should bag about the middle of February.—Ex.

For 1,000 pounds of hock meat, half a bushel of fine salt, half a gallon of molasses, three pounds of brown sugar, two and half of saltpetre, ground very fine. Mix all the ingredients together in a large washing tub, and rub the meat therewith until the whole quantity be absorbed. The meat must be taken out of the cask once a week and rubbed with the pickle it makes. The first two times you take it out, add at each time a plate full of alum; it ought to remain in the pickle five or six weeks, according to the size of the meat.—Wm. H. Harriot, in Chickopee Journal.

You are a Brick.—A certain college Professor had assembled his class at the commencement of the term, and was reading over the list of names to see that all was present. It chanced that one of the number was unknown to the Professor, having just entered the class.

"What is your name, sir?" asked the Professor, looking through his spectacles.

"You are a brick," was the startling reply.

"Sir," said the Professor, half startled out of his chair at the supposed impertinence, but not quite sure that he had understood him correctly, "Sir, I did not exactly understand your answer."

"You are a brick," was again the composed reply.

"This is intolerable!" said the Professor, his face reddening. "Beware, young man how you attempt to insult me."

"Insult you!" said the student, in turn astonished. "How have I done it?"

"Did you not say I was a brick?" returned the Professor with stifled indignation.

"No, sir, you asked me my name, and I answered your question. My name is U. R. A. Brick—Uriah Reynolds Anderson Brick."

"Ah, indeed!" murmured the Professor, sinking back into his seat in confusion. It was a misconception on my part. Will you commence the lesson, Mr.—ahem—Mr. Brick."

In a jolly company, each one was to ask a question; if it was not answered, he paid a forfeit. Pat's question was, "How the little ground squirrel digs his hole without showing any dirt about the entrance?" When they all gave up, Pat said, "Sure, do you see, he begins at the other end of the hole." One of the rest exclaimed, "But how does he get there?" "Ah," said Pat, "that's your question—can you answer it yourself?"

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

Published Weekly, at $2 a Year,

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The Arts, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of Mechanical Industry, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. The Markets will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. The Children will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

CONSTITUTION

OF THE

Provincial Union.

Article I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing for the one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

Art. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

Art. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

Art. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

Art. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specfic object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

Art. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

Art. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

Art. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

Art. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

Art. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

Frederick Douglass,
John D. Peck,
Amos G Beman,
John Jones,
J. D. Bonner,
J. McCune Smith,
} Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "The American Industrial School."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Committee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. Ward, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B Gribble, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. Thomas James, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on their arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number

Provincial Freeman.

DEVOTED TO ANTI-SLAVERY, TEMPERANCE, AND GENERAL LITERATURE.

"Self-Reliance is the True Road to Independence."

VOLUME I. } TORONTO, CANADA WEST, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1854. { NUMBER 36.

PROSPECTUS
PROVINCIAL FREEMAN,

The Provincial Freeman will be devoted to Anti-Slavery, Temperance and General Literature. The organ of no particular Political Party, it will open its columns to the views of men of different political opinions, reserving the right, as an independent Journal, of full expression on all questions or projects affecting the people in a political way; and reserving, also, the right to express emphatic condemnation of all projects, having for their object in a great or remote degree, the subversion of the principles of the British Constitution, or of British rule in the Provinces.

Not committed to the views of any religious sect exclusively, it will carefully observe the rights of every sect, at the same time that a reservation shall be made in favor of an existing difference of opinion, as to the views or actions of the sects respectively.

As an advertising medium, as a vehicle of information on Agriculture,—and as an enemy to vice in any and every conceivable form and a promoter of good morals, it shall be made worthy of the patronage of the public

BRING BACK THE CHAIN.

BY THE HON. MRS. NORTON.

It was an aged man, who stood
Beside the blue Atlantic sea:
They cast his fetters by the flood,
And hailed the time-worn captive free!
From his indignant eye there flashed
A gleam his better nature gave,
And while his tyrants shrunk abashed,
Thus spoke the spirit-stricken slave:

"Bring back the chains, whose weight so long
These tottered limbs have vainly borne:
The word of Freedom on your tongue
My weary ear rejects with scorn!
'Tis true, there was—there was a time
I sighed, I panted to be free;
And panting for my sunny clime
Bowed down my stubborn knee.

"Then I have stretched my yearning arms,
And shook in wrath my bitter chain;—
Then, when the magic word had charms,
I groaned for liberty in vain!
That freedom ye at length bestow,
And bid me bless my envied fate:
You tell me I am free to go—
Where?—I am desolate!

"The boundless hope—the spring of joy,
Felt when the spirit's strength is young,
Which slavery only can alloy,—
The mockeries to which I clung—
The eye, whose fond and sunny ray
Made life's dull lamp less dimly burn—
The tones I pined for, day by day,—
Can ye bid them return?

"Bring back the chain! its clanking sound
Hath then a power beyond your own;
It brings young visions smiling round,
Too fondly loved—too early flown!
It brings me days, when these dim eyes
Gazed o'er the wild and swelling sea,
Counting how many suns must rise
Ere one might hail me free!

"Bring back my chain! that I may think
'Tis that which weighs the spirit so,
And, gazing on each galling link,
Dream as I dreamt of bitter woe!
My days are gone: of hope, of youth,
These traces now alone remain,
Hoarded with sorrow's sacred truth,
Tears, and my iron chain!

"Freedom! though doomed in pain to live,
The freedom of the soul is mine;
But all of slavery you can give
Around my steps must ever twine.
Raise up the head which age hath bent;
Renew the hopes that childhood gave;
Bid all-return kind Heaven once lent,—
Till then—I am a slave!"

Miscellaneous.

From the National Anti Slavery Standard.

Extracts from the Diary of an Abolitionist down South.

IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Sept. 28.—Same place as before. I took a walk in the woods. Suddenly I came upon the regular road. A colored man, driving a horse and waggon was approaching. I accosted him and got into the waggon.

We soon began to talk about slavery.

He said that he had often seen me within the last few days; and that the people in this district were very much afraid of the Abolitionists coming down here and advising the negroes to run away. Whenever a stranger came here, they asked one another who he was and used every means in their power to discover his business. He advised me not to trust the free coloured population, because many of them were mean enough to go straight to the white people and tell them that a stranger had been talking to them about freedom. He advised me, also, to be cautious with many of the slaves, because there were many of them who would go and tell. But there are many, too, who would rather die than betray an Abolitionist.

He said that he would run the risk of capture if he had a compass or a friend to direct him to the North. Ignorance of the way, he said, was the chief obstacle in preventing the slaves in this district from escaping to the North. Dozens were ready to fly.

We came up to a colored man who was chopping in the woods. "Now there," said the waggoner, "there is a man who would not tell what you said to him, and would like very much to get the chance of being free."

We had previously met a boy driving oxen drawing logs to town. This man was chopping the trees for him. They both belonged to the same master—who is described by his slaves, as well as by other coloured people, as a perfect Legree.

We met, also, two waggons laden with cotton. "These," said the waggoner, with whom I was conversing, "these come from right away up in the country, and very likely these boys have travelled all night."

I bid the waggoner farewell and went up to the axeman.

He was a powerful, resolute-looking negro, and a caste in one of his eyes gave him an almost savage dogged appearance.

"Good day, friend."

"Good day, mass'r."

"You are a slave?"

"Yes, sir."

"Who do you belong to?"

"Mr. D——."

"I am told he is a pretty hard master."

A pause, during which I am examined physiologically.

"I come from the North."

"Yes, sir," said the slave, who seemed to be satisfied with my appearance, "he is a very hard master."

"Have you ever run away?"

"Yes; I have run away twice."

"Did you run North?"

"No," he replied, "I am told no one can get to the North from here without being taken. Besides, I don't know the way."

"How far did you run?"

"I just went round to the next county."

"If you knew the way to the North, would you try to get there? Would you run the risk of being captured and brought back?" I asked.

"Yes, mass'r," said the slave, in a manly tone, "I would try—but they would never bring me back again alive."

I explained the nature and uses of a compass.

"If I gave you one of these things, would you risk it?"

"Yes, mass'r, I would; but I would like to have a pistol and a knife too."

He said that he did not care about the hardships a runaway must endure; for they could not be greater than the hardships he endured with his present owner.

"Would you be afraid, or would you hesitate for one moment, to shoot a man if he tried to capture you?" I asked.

"No, sir," he said, as if he meant what he said; "I would shoot him rather than be taken again; for they would kill me anyhow if they got me back again."

"Good—you deserve to be free. Has your boss ever killed any of his slaves?"

"He killed one. They boy ran away; and when they got him back, they lashed him and kicked him about so that he only lived a week."

"Does he often lash them?"

"Oh, very often," said the slave.

"How many does he give them at a time?"

"Fifty and seventy-five, and a hundred sometimes. I saw three men get seventy-five a-piece last Sunday. He drives them very hard; and if they don't work like beasts, he lashes them himself; or if he is too tired to do it, he gets his son or a colored man to do it for him."

"I should think," said I, "that seventy-five lashes would be enough to kill a man."

"Oh," said the slave, "it is very bad, but they have to go to their work again the same as ever. He just washes their back down with salt water and sends them back to work again."

"Washes their sore backs with salt water!" I exclaimed in horror—for although I knew that this operation is frequently performed in South Carolina, I cannot hear of it without a shudder—"What do they do that for?" I added.

"To take the soreness out of it," he replied. (it is to prevent it festering, I believe.)

"But," I repeated, "is it not very painful to be washed in that way?"

"Yes, sir, very," said the slave, "but that doesn't make any difference. He (the boss) does not care for that."

"What are your working hours?"

"From two hours before daylight to ten o'clock at night."

"Do you think that the slaves are more discontented now than they used to be?"

"Yes, sir," said he, they are getting more and more discontented every year." The times is getting worse and worse with us, 'specially," he added, "since these engines have come in here."

"What difference do they make?" I asked, thinking that he alluded to the Indians.

"Why," said he, "you see that it is so much easier to carry off the produce and sell it now; 'cause they take it away so easy; and so the slaves are druv more and more to raise it."

"I see. Do you think that if we could give the slaves these things I told you about, that lots of them would run away?" I asked, alluding, of course, to pocket compasses.

"Lots and lots of them," said he, emphasizing every syllable.

"Would you run away even without a pistol?"

"Yes sir," said he, "I would risk it; but I would rather have a pistol and knife, if possible, too."

"How did you live before, when you ran away?"

"I walked about at night, and kept mighty close all day."

"Yes; but where did you get food?"

"I went to the houses of my friends about here, and they gave me something to eat."

"I suppose you would like to have some money, too, if you were going to the North?"

"Yes, mass'r," said he, "I would like to, 'cause if a man has money, he can get food easily anywhere, and he can't always without it. But I would try it, even without money."

"Are you married?"

"Yes, sir."

"Any children."

"No, sir."

"What would you do with your wife, if you were to run away?"

"I would have to leave her. She would be very willing," he added, 'cause she knows she can't help me, and I might help her, if I was once free."

"How old are you?"

"Thirty-five."

"How many suits of clothes do you get in the year?"

"Two."

"Only one shirt at a time?"

"Yes!"

(The shirts of the slaves in this State—of course I alluded to rural slaves—appear to be a cross between a "gent's underclothing" and a potato bag. The cloth is very thick.)

"Does the boss allow you anything for yourself?"

"Nothing," said he; and looking at his blaze boots (!) he added:

"He hardly keeps us in shoes."

"Are you ready to run away as soon as I can give you one of the things I told you about?"

"I will run away to-night," he replied, firmly, "if you can give me one of them."

"You will see me again in a few months: I will get you one: good bye, old boy,"

A Strange French Story.

An abduction, accompanied with the greatest mystery, took place lately at a charming country house, situated in the neighbourhood of Paris. The owner had invited there several of his friends, and after dinner every one was seated on the grass near a wood, listening to the narration of a traveller who had just returned from an excursion to Italy, the north of Africa and Spain. He was narrating that one day he was near losing his life in defending himself against banditti, who after having killed his servant, took away his luggage, and every article of value which he had about him. The traveller was at the most interesting period of his narrative, and emotion had begun to gain his hearers, when all of a sudden a slight noise among the bushes caused them to turn around. A cry of terror issued from every mouth; a tall man having on a mask, appeared in the middle of the group, and with a speed of lightning, seized with a vigorous arm a young girl of seventeen, placed her on his shoulder, and disappeared in the obscurity, without any of the persons present having had time to rush after him. At the cries uttered by the ladies the servants ran up—torches were lit, and the wood and its environs were searched. A part of the night was spent in fruitless explorations of the neighborhood. Every one was thunderstruck at the audacity of such an abduction. The parents of the young girl were in the greatest consternation, as they looked upon their daughter as lost. But what was their joy when the next morning they beheld her return to her father's house with a smiling air. Pressed with questions, the young girl related that when she regained her senses she was in a carriage, the windows of which was closed, and travelling rapidly along a by-road—the man with the mask was by her side, but said not a word. At the end of half-an-hour, the carriage stopped before a small house, completely isolated, in the midst of the country. The man opened the door and requested her to alight. He conducted her through the darkness to the house; she was more dead than alive. The man called out, and immediately a woman wearing a veil came forward with a wax-light in her hand, and behind her was another man, whose face was disguised by a false beard. That person examined her for a moment, and then whispered something into the ear of the masked man, and with drew. The latter then said to her: "Fear nothing, Mademoiselle, to-morrow you will be restored to your parents." He then desired the woman to conduct her to a bedroom, where she remained till the hour of her departure. The young girl declared, besides, that no violence whatever, had been exercised on her. No one knows what to think of this strange adventure, but it is supposed that this young girl was not the one who was to be carried off. In the circle of her friends from whom she was carried off, was a young lady of rare beauty.—Paris Siecle.

The Golden Hand.

The police, on the 28th of May, arrested a notorious female pickpocket, who, from her extraordinary skill, had obtained among her fraternity the title of the "Golden Hand." On Saturday, this woman was tried by the Tribunal of Correctional Police. It was stated that she was sixty seven years of age; that for half a century she had been a regular porfessional pickpocket, and that the total amount of her thefts is estimated at the enormous sum of 20,000,000f. At the age of fifteen, she married a man named Vermousen, and shortly after began the career of pocket-picking. Her success was so great, that she and her husband lived in great style, and kept carriages and horses. In 1813 or '14, she and her husband were condemned at Liege, by default, to two years' imprisonment for picking pockets, and in 1826, she was sentenced at Ghent to five years' imprisonment for the same offence. In 1831, she purchased a splendid hotel at Lisle, but was shortly after arrested for picking pockets at Arras, and was sentenced to four years' imprisonment. About this time, her husband, finding that he had no longer the means of indulging in luxury, took life in disgust and destroyed himself. After her release from jail, she went to Belgium, and took up with a man named Juvenal. With him she committed extensive robberies. She has since gone by the name of Vandenberg, Juvenal, Marechel, Nongues, Montague, La Belle, Dencef, Beaugard, &c., and has practiced her calling in all parts of France, Belgium, Germany and Italy. She was always magnificently dressed, and drove about in carriages. She frequented all places of public resort, but principally railway stations and offices of public vehicles.

Informed in May last, that she had arrived in Paris, the police took measures for arresting her. Having discovered her residence, which was no easy matter, as she was constantly shifting about from place to place, they, on the 28th of that month, set officers to watch her when she went out. She proceeded to the office of the Passy omnibuses, Place du Palais Royale, and there they saw her make attempts to pick several pockets. At length she succeeded in possessing herself of the purse of a lady, and thereupon they arrested her. She loudly asserted that she was the victim of a mistake. To silence her, the officers searched her pockets, but to their astonishment, did not find the purse. When, however, they led her away, it fell to the ground. She had slipped it beneath her petticoats with such dexterity that, though they had kept a close watch on her, they had not observed the act. Her lodgings being searched, there were discovered considerable sums in gold and silver, twenty-two pair of ear-rings, eight shirt studs, a watch chain, eight crosses of different orders, four gold buckles, sixteen rings, four pins, one pearl necklace, one gold necklace, and other articles of value. She denied that she was the Golden Hand, but the sister of her first husband, a woman named Wever, recognized her, and gave a full account of her career. According to this woman, her proper name is Beaugard, she having married, some time back, a railway employee of that name at Brussels. Called upon for her defence, she vehemently protested that she was not the person she was taken for, and she threw herself on her knees, and implored mercy with clasped hands, and tried to weep. The Tribunal condemned her to five years' imprisonment, and five years' surveillence of the police.

A Man among the Woman.

A remarkable trial came off lately in Orange Co., New York, wherein a man named Ringland was plaintiff, and certain other brethren of the Methodist persuasion defendants. The suit was instituted by the plaintiff to recover damages from defendants for pitching said plaintiff out of meeting. The facts were these in brief. Ringland, in company with his wife and another female friend, went to an evening meeting at the Methodist Church at Gardentown, and took his seat in the rear of the room by the side of his wife and friend. An ancient custom in that Church forbids males and females from sitting together during service; and soon it was circulated through the congregation 'that a man was among the women.' The plaintiff was requested to go on the 'men's side,' but he remained seated. One of the trustees—after the plaintiff had explained that he was wont to sit with his wife,—consented that he might keep his seat, provided he would behave himself and keep quiet. One member, however, protested against such infraction of their time-honored rule, and five of them insisted that the plaintiff must 'go to the other side,' or go out of Church. The plaintiff would not leave the women, and thereupon commenced a free fight. Two defendants each grasped a leg, and other two each seized an arm, and another carried the head. Plaintiff squirmed and kicked the defendants, tugged and pulled, and the men and women got thoroughly mixed up, the lights were extinguished, the stove and pipe tumbled down, the plaintiff was carried out "feet foremost," and the defendants were decreed $51 for an assault and battery. But the man stuck to the woman.—Cleveland Herald.

Woman's Mission.

A distinguished preacher thus sums up the history of a woman who had been called to her long home:

"She ate, she drank, she slept, she dressed, she danced, she died."

The Lilly says that this is the history of the mass of women, but we think some important chapters are left out. The mass of women are born, go to a boarding school, get married, go to church, bring up a family, and die after that; and our opinion is, that any one who eats well, and drinks well, sleeps well, dresses well, dances well, and dies well, has done more for the world than many distinguished people succeed in doing. If, in addition to this, she is born well, goes to school well, marries well, goes to church well, and brings up a family well, she has been a public benefactor of no ordinary kind.

A woman who is well born—who has received from her parents a healthy mental and physical organization, and who conducts herself well in the ordinary relations of life—is a very great woman. To know how to eat, and drink, and sleep, and dress, and dance, and die, is the sum of knowledge; and he or she who does all these things well, is wise and prudent above the common order of Christians and philosophers.

Let no one speak lightly of eating, drinking, sleeping, dressing, dancing, and dying, for the catalogue embraces more than half the important business of life, and he who does these well, will do more, and is an honor and blessing to the race.—Mrs. Swisshelm.

Mrs. Stowe.

The only other book that has attracted much notice is Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe's Sunny Memmories. Such persons as can fix their attention on anything at all in this hot weather, have felt bound to read these volumes; but the critics have, with pretty considerable unanimity, 'pooh-poohed' the whole production. Perhaps they expected too much. Perhaps they feel inclined to revenge on Mrs. Stowe the fact, that they were carried away a couple of yeaas ago by popular enthusiasm into elevating her a good deal about her merits. Uncle Tom has taken a deserved place in our literature; but it is not the place which its admirers at first endeavoured to force it into. At any rate, Sunny Memories answers nobody's expectations; for the whole two volumes prove nothing but what might have been proved in a very few pages—namely, that the authoress egotises very agreeably, and was marvellously delighted with the reception she met with in England.—Chambers' Journal.

THE OLD NEGRO'S LOGIC.—A clergyman asked an old negro servant his reasons for believing in the existence of a God. "Sir," says he, "I see one man get sick The doctor comes to him, gives him medicine; the next day he is better; he gives him another dose, it does him good; he keeps on till he gets about his business. Another man gets sick like the first one; the doctor comes to see him; he gives him the same sort of medicine; it does him no good; he gets worse; he gives him more; but he gets worse all the time till he dies. Now that man's time to die had come, and all the doctor's in the world couldn't cure him.

"One year I work in the cornfield, plough deep, dig up grass, and make nothing but nubbins. Next year I work the same way; the rain and dew comes, and I make a crop.

"I have been here going hard upon fifty years. Every day since I have been in this world I see the sun rise in the East, and set in the West. The North Star stands where it did the first time I ever saw it; the seven stars in Job's coffin keep in the same path in the sky, and never turn out. It ain't so with man's works. He makes clocks and watches; they run well for a while, but they get out of fix, and stand stock still. But the sun, moon and stars keep on the same way all the while. There is a power which makes one man die, and another man get well—that sends the rain, and keeps everything in motion."

What a beautiful comment is here furnished by an unlettered African, on the language of the Psalmist: "The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth his speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."

THE CRYSTAL PALACE FETE.—The grand military fete given on Saturday "in aid of the several funds for the relief of the sick and wounded and widows and orphans of Her Majesty's forces engaged in the Russian war," has proved successful. The doors opened at ten, and the French Guides, who occupied a conspicuous platform in the great transept, played "God save the Queen," accompanied by the Palace band. A large trophy was erected in the centre of the building, composed of flags, cannon, and other arms from the Tower stores. Above the base were two brass cannons taken at Bomarsund; in the medal-striking establishment of Messrs. Pinches & Co., the die was changed, so that the medals bore a trophy composed of the flags of the three Allied nations. They were largely purchased throughout the day. Somewhere about half-past eleven o'clock, the "Guides" again struck up the "National Anthem." It was immediately answered by the 1st Life Guards, who were stationed in the gallery opposite to the "Guides," and played "Partant pour la Syrie." The various bands who were present (fourteen in all) stationed in various parts of the building, played in succession. The time at length came when music within the Palace was to cease, and the bands were to play in union on the lower terrace. Himmel's air to an English version of Theodore Korner's "Prayer" (Vater, ich rufe dich") was given with admiral precision, and the voices combined with the multitude of instruments produced a grand effect. A pot-pourri, consisting of divers national airs, was played shortly afterwards. One curious effect of the performance on the terrace is well worth notice. So sensible was the vibration of the glass, that every note played by the band was distinctly reverberated, and it seemed as if the band without was accompanied with miraculous precision by a band within. The most exciting moment of the day was when, shortly before four, the "Guides" returned to their station, and again played "God save the Queen," followed by "Partant pour la Syrie." All the galleries were crammed; a long perspective of waving hats and handkerchiefs reached into the furthest distance, and thunders of encore pealed through the vast edifice, to be promptly and vigorously answered by the willing band. The prudence of earlier dinner was now manifest. A reasonable hour for dinner had arrived, but comestibles were scarce. A gradual departure took place. The subsequent history of the day is a history of difficulties in securing homeward vehicles.

The Wounded of the Alma.

The following is an official return of the wounded admitted from the field into the General Hospital at Scutari, from the 22nd to the 28th September, 1854:—

Amputation, upper extremity, primary	18
Amputation, lower extremity, primary	43
Amputation, upper extremity, secondary	3
Amputation, lower extremity, secondary	8
Fractures of upper extremity	17
Fractures of lower extremity	24
Wounds of upper extremity	98
Wounds of lower extremity	295
Wounds in various parts of the body, viz:—
Head, face, and jaw	25
Neck	3
Back and buttocks	9
Chest	14
Abdomen	2
Groin	16
Miscellaneous	7
Total	582

Five hundred more have been admitted since the 28th. Four amputations at the hip joint were performed on the field of battle. On the 20th September there were in Scutari hospital 1,114 wounded British soldiers, 914 suffering from disease, and 150 wounded Russians. There were 41 British officers wounded, and 30 suffering from disease, with 12 Russian officers, making a total of 2,261 patients. Our exact loss at the Alma was 2,106 killed, wounded, and missing.—Medical Times and Gazette.

WHAT THE CZAR HAS TO ANSWER FOR.—The reign of Nicholas has been considered as a time of peace, and yet in the course of twenty-eight years, he has sacrificed the lives of 600,000 Russians in attacks upon the Circassians; 300,000 of his subjects fell from disease or in battle, against Turkey in 1828 and 1829; and in the present war he probably lost 500,000 or 600,000 more. Besides these losses must be added those which took place in Persia, Poland, and Hungary; and we should then have a grand total of considerale more than one million deaths among the Russian subjects only; and if to these we were to add the number of deaths inflicted upon the various races with whom those wars were carried on, we should have between two and three millions of lives sacrificed.—London Atlas.

WAR AND LITERATURE.—This, indeed, is one striking way in which the war operates on literature—that it sends out the national thought in new and unexplored geographical directions; consecrates names and spots never heard of before; makes new ground rich with great acts and associations. A week or two ago and there was a stream in the Crimea flowing on, night and day, quiet and unregarded; and at one place, where a road crossed this stream, high steeps rose above it over which day and night passed, too, disturbing nothing save, mayhap, a loose stone that would roll down into the gullies; and now that spot belongs to the imagination of Great Britain for evermore, and a perpetual allusion in literature will be made to the battle of the Alma. Does it not seem as if place and name had been alike predestined! Who would not wish to see a photograph of those Crimean steeps, that have waited six thousand years, and, at last, are famous?—London Leader.

AN ANGRY MAN.—As the whirlwind, in its fury, teareth up trees, and deformeth the face of nature; or as an earthquake, in its convulsions, overturneth whole cities; so the rage of an angry man throweth mischief around him. Danger and destruction wait on his hand.

Indulge not thyself in the passion of anger; it is whetting a sword to wound thine own breast, or murder thy friend.

If thou bearest slight provocations with patience, it shall be imputed unto thee for wisdom; and if thou wipest them from thy remembrance, thy heart shall not reproach thee.

Seest thou that the angry man loseth his understanding? Whilst thou art yet in thy senses, let the wrath of another be a lesson to thyself.

Do nothing in a passion. Why wilt thou put to sea in the violence of a storm.

If it be difficult to rule thine anger, it is wise to prevent it; avoid all occasions of falling into wrath; or guard thyself against them whenever they occur.

Temperance.

Maine Liquor Law.

A public meeting of the members and supporters of the United Kingdom Alliance Association, formed last year, for the purpose of promoting the total suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors in this country, was held in the Free Trade-hall, Manchester, on Wednesday evening. Several thousand persons were present. The Earl of Harrington, who presided, contended that the introduction of the Maine Liquor Law into this country would be no infringement of the liberty of the subject, as it merely withdrew the license to sell poison. Mr. Pope, the secretary, reported that £1,400 had been subscribed towards a fund of £10,000 for the next year's agitation. Sir Walter C. Travelyan moved the following Resolution:—"That this meeting regards the traffic in intoxicating drinks, as beverages, as a social nuisance, which, indefensible on any ground of public utility, and always and inavitably injurious to the physical and moral welfare of the community, ought at once and altogether to be removed." Mr. Bowley, of Glocester, seconded the Resolution, which was supported by Mr. George Cruikshank, and carried unanimously. The meeting was subsequently addressed by Mr. L. Heyworth, M. P., Mr. Alderman Harrison (Wakefield,) the Rev. Dr. Jabez Burns, Mr. Robert Gardner, the Rev. Owen Jones, Rev. James Bardsley, and Mr. Richard Allen.

Rum and the Main Law.

While the propriety of enacting a prohibitory Liquor Law for Canada is under discussion, the following narrative may prove interesting. It is related by Mr. C. F. Clarkson, who is now travelling in Tennessee, in a letter published in the Brockville (Ind.) Democrat:—

"Let me recite to you a true history of a man whose farm we passed over yesterday. About fifteen years ago a Presbyterian clergyman of Tennessee had a wayward son. We have his name and location, but choose to withhold it at present. Before he was seventeen he became so reckless and unruly that his father could no longer control him. He left for the corrupt city of New York, where he became a clerk in a drinking saloon; but his character was so bad to be there tetruded. He next was a bar keeper in the theatre, but was dismissed. He went lower and still lower, until he slept in empty cellars, and on the wharves of the city,—a perfect nuisance and disgrace to his race. At this stage of his career an old college mate—for our hero was a graduate of one of the best colleges in the State of New York—determined that he would hunt him up, and make one more effort to save him. He went to New York and after a week of diligent search, with the aid of the police, he found him. He washed and clothed him, and by every inducement that could be held out to him persuaded him to try to be a man. He made the effort, and was successful.

"The friend who sought him out, and who saved him, we are well acquainted with. They both determined to come to Tennessee to teach school. They soon reached here, and with the high recommendation they brought, soon obtained good places. The reclaimed son of the Presbyterian clergyman, within six months after his arrival, married an orphan girl worth $40,000 in cash. She had a young sister and brother, who each had equal amounts. The sister soon after died, leaving one-half of her estate to our hero and his wife, and the other half to her brother, and thus increased his estate to $60,000. When the Mexican war broke out, the brother enlisted, and made a will, leaving all his estate to his brother-in-law (our hero and his wife, in case he never returned from the war. He, like many more of our noble men was killed at Buena Vista. Thus our hero came into possession of the entire estate of the family, which at first was $120,000, but which has increased by advance of lands and increase of negroes to over $300,000. He is now one of the richest planters in Middle Tennessee, and does not live twenty-five miles from Nashville.

A Glance at New York.

We observe by the New York Papers, that there were 23,000 arrests by the police of that city during the last six months—rather a tall list of public malefactors. Of this number the Sixth Ward (the far-famed rum-hole precincts) contributes 3,000, about one eighth. If the other twenty one Wards counted out law breakers in the same proportion, the aggregate would swell to sixty-six thousand. In referring to the number of rummeries in that city, the Tribune says:

The semi-annual report of the Chief of the Police shows that there are twenty-nine hundred and seventy-eight unlicensed rum-shops in full blast averaging seven thousand persons in the daily practice of illegal rum-selling, openly and with the full knowledge of the Chief and his men. The Chief tells us that there are 6,895 public rum-holes in New York (to which should be added 2000 to 3000 kept in houses of prostitution and not recorded,) 2,878, or nearly half are unlicensed, and that more than 3000 are habitually and constantly open on the Sabbath. In one Ward 225, and in another 224 are in full operation, and not a single license has been granted for either Ward; in one Ward 352, in another 235, another 375, another 310, another 304, and in the Fourth Ward five hundred rum-shops are opened on Sunday—and in this last Ward only eleven out of 511 even pretended to close up on that day.

Rev. Dr. Cheever, of New York, is reported to have said in a recent address:—"There are seven thousand groggeries in this city, three thousand of them are open upon the Sabbath. There is a dramshop to every eighty-five inhabitants. It costs the city for rum and its fruits, one million dollars annually. Four-fifths of the committals and arrests according to the warden's testimony are from the intemperate. There has been an increase of committals from year to year. The year just ending shows fifty thousand Brandy and Bitters.—A bill was lately handed in to the authorities of San Francisco for payment for refreshments furnished to the grand jury of that city, while pursuing their investigations, which contained the following items: One dozen cherry wine, three thousand five hundred cigars, one dozen Martel's brandy, four gallons do., five baskets of Heidseick, one bottle of bitters, two tins of crackers, and one hundred and twenty three dollars worth of cherry wine. This would give to each of the 23 jurors, two and a half bottles of sherry, 150 cigars, 2½ bottle of champagne, and 1¼ quarts of brandy. In reply to some inquiries of the supervisors, the chairman of the jury replied, their deliberations were so intonse that they required some artificial stimulants!

The Slave Trade—Important Trial.

In the United States Circuit Court sitting in this City, one Captain James Smith has been convicted of having been engaged in the slave trade between the Coast of Africa and the Island of Cuba. The sentence of the law, which is death, was suspended in order that his counsel might take the necessary steps to move for a new trial. The facts which were proved in this case were substantially these: In January last, Capt. Smith went to Boston, where he purchased the brig Julia Moulton, cleared her in ballast for Newport, and on the 2nd of February brought her to this port. Here he engaged one James Wills as mate, telling him that he was going on a slave-trading voyage, agreeing to pay him $40 a month on the outward voyage, and from $1,200 to $2,000 for the passage back. A crew was shipped of about fifteen persons, mostly young men, and a large quantity of provisions, water, &c., with lumber, was taken on board. On the 11th of February the brig cleared from this port, and on leaving the dock, Captain Smith pointed out to the mate a Portuguese named Lemos, as the real owner of the vessel, and told him that the Secretary of the Portuguese Consul, at this port, had accompanied him to Boston and aided him in the purchase of the vessel. The ship was cleared by Captain Smith, and had regular papers for the Cape of Good Hope. After she had been out forty days, the timber on board was used to make a temporary deck or floor in the hold of the vessel, and all the other preparations necessary to receive a cargo of slaves were made. At the end of sixty days, they made land on the coast of Africa at a place called Cobra, where they were boarded by a boat which brought instructions, in accordance with which they cruised at sea for ten days longer, and then put in at a port further South called Ambrozzetta, well known as a depot for the slave trade. Here, in the course of two or three hours, six hundred and sixty-four negroes, including forty women, were brought on board and stowed away as cargo in the hold of the brig. They were placed on their sides, one lying in the lap of another—were taken out occasionally to be fed and aired, and, after a voyage of sixty-five days, were landed on the South coast of Cuba. They were sent on shore in lighters, under the orders of a person who said he was the consignee, and the American Consul at that port. The furniture of the ship was then taken on shore, and the ship herself burned. Wills, the mate, came to this city in the brig Marcellus where he again met Capt. Smith, who refused to pay Willis the balance due him on his contract, amounting to about $440, whereupon Willis imparted the nature of the voyage to a Mr. Donahue, by whom it was laid before the authorities. The result was the arrest, trial and conviction of Captain Smith.

We believe this is the first time in which a conviction of being engaged in the African slave trade has ever been had in this City—and this is due entirely to a disagreement between the captain and his mate about the payment of a trifling sum of money. Yet, as we have repeatedly stated in the Times, scarcely a month passes in which there are not one or more vessels cleared at this port, which embark at once in the slave trade and land their cargoes on the coast of Cuba. The facts given in evidence on this trial show how easily this is done, and with what perfect impunity, so long as all the parties engaged in it are satisfactorily paid for keeping silent. In order to a conviction, the vessel concerned must be, at the time, owned either in whole or in part by an American citizens, or else the party accused must himself be a citizen. The first provision is usually evaded by a sham sale: the last by procuring a foreigner, usually a Portuguese, as commander. The only defence attempted in this case turned upon this point. It was claimed that Mr. Smith was an unnaturalized German, and it was also asserted and partly proved that the ship was paid for by the Secretary of the Portuguese Consul at this port.

This last point is one that ought immediately to engage the attention of the Government. If the Portuguese Consul is engaged, directly or indirectly—or suffers his Secretary to be engaged—in so flagrant a violation of the laws of the United States, his exequatur ought to be instantly revoked.—N. Y. Daily Times.

Legislation of Indiana respecting Colored People.*

We propose a brief exposition of the legal disabilities of colored people in Indiana, a matter of general interest, and as having particular reference to the mitigation or removal of those disabilities, through the agency of an enlightened public sentiment. We shall confine our observations on this subject to the present time, merely by remarking that, with the exception of the 13th article of the Constitution, which, as we shall show, originated in a rather "abnormal" state of public feeling, there has, perhaps, been some mitigation of the rigors of our legislation in this direction, in the progress of the times. That it is yet sufficiently stringent, or most oppressive and unjust, will appear from the following enumeration of its principal provisions, bearing on this subject.

By article second, section fifth, of the Constitution, negroes and mulattoes are denied the right of suffrage.

By the thirteenth article of the same instrument, negroes and mulattoes are forbidden to come into or settle in the State; all contracts made with them contrary to the preceding provision are declared void; and a fine of not less than ten or more than five hundred dollars is imposed on any person who shall employ or otherwise encourage them to remain in the State. The same article further provides, that all fines which may be collected for a violation of the provisions of the same, or of any law which may be passed for the purpose of carrying the same into execution, shall be set apart for the colonization of such negroes and mullattoes, and their descendants, as may be in the State at the adoption of the Constitution, and will be willing to emigrate. Said article further enjoins legislation to carry out its provisions.

By chapter 74th, volume 1st, of the Revised Statutes of 1852, the General Assembly proceeded to obey this injunction. In addition to the re-enactment of the principal provisions of the 13th article, they provide for the registry, by the clerks of the several Circuit Courts in the State, of all negroes and mulattoes who were inhabitants of the same prior to the first day of November, 1851, and entitled to reside therein. The clerk is authorized to subpœna witnesses to prove the right of inhabitation of any such negro and mulatto, and if satisfied of such right, is required to register his name and issue him a certificate. The act also extends to the colored people coming into the State the same penalty which had been imposed upon persons employing them. The provisions of the 13th article in regard to colonization are carried out and "improved upon" by chapter 8th, 1st Revised Statutes, and chapter 16th, Acts 1853, which appropriate five thousand dollars annually for some years to that object—the purchase of lands in Africa, payment of salary of agent, &c.

By chapter 42nd, Act 1853, it is provided that "no person having one-eighth or more of negro blood shall be permitted to testify as a witness in any cause in which any white person is a party in interest."

By section 1st, chapter 106th, Acts 1853, it is enacted that "the property of negroes and mulattoes shall not be taxed for school purposes, nor shall any negro or mulatto, derive any benefits from the common schools of this State." But though, thus ostensibly exempt from taxation for the support of schools, colored people, in common with other citizens, are required to contribute towards the school fund, in the way of fines assessed for breaches of the penal law of the state, as also by escheats and other forfeitures. (See Constitution, article 8th, section 2nd; and Revised Statutes, chapter 98th, section 2nd.)

Lastly, colored, people are not exempt from a property tax, nor from labor on the public highways. (See Revised Statutes, chapter 6th, section 6th; and chapter 102nd, section 6th–9th.

The above, we believe, are all the legal provisions worthy of note, pertaining to this subject. For the sake of brevity, we have not set them out in full, but have been careful to give a fair rendering of their substance and spirit. We now propose taking them up in their order, beginning with the second, and making such remarks upon their origin and bearings as may conduce to a better understanding of the character of our legislation in the premises.

Comment, at this late day, on the enormity of this exclusion clause, would seem to be superfluous. Its unjust and unconstitutional character has already been fully exposed, so far as language is adequate to do so. But there is connected with it a feature of peculiar meanness, which should not pass unnoticed. The same body who thus shut out from our borders the colored people generally, and sought to banish those already here—all native American citizens—by the same instrument spread wide our gates, inviting to a participation of equal privileges with ourselves, on a very slight probation, all "the rest of mankind"—not merely Europeans, however degraded or infamous, but also inhabitants of Asia, Africa, and "the Isles of the sea"—in short, all moderately white foreigners, and no other exception whatever! Could anything short of the latent spirit and influence of the "peculiar institution" have inspired so peculiar an exception?

As to the effect of this exclusion clause, and the laws made in furtherance of its object—although it has not corresponded with the intention of their authors—although we have heard of but one case arising under them—although the statute requistion of registry is, we believe, very generally and very properly disregarded and contemned by our resident colored population—although, in short, this clause is to a good degree, simply as a proclamation, at once impotent, of the inhuman and anti-Christian spirit of our people—its latent influence upon the colored population, both within and without the State, is doubtless, nevertheless, very oppressive, though no overt manifestation of its power may indicate the fact.

The same observations are applicable to the colonization scheme. And yet, it has been far more inoperative. And who can doubt that it will remain so? The idea of sending our colored population to Africa, of "founding an empire" there, with the means provided by our Legislature—not to say by any practical means whatever—is too supremely ridiculous to be worthy of serious notice. That it is a most transparent deception, is known to all intelligent minds, and could readily be demonstrated, were this a proper place to do so. Yet it is but too evident, that on the shrine of this monstrous chimera, the right of the colored people have been offered up! It is true that the colonization scheme is ostensibly designed to operate only upon those "who may be willing to emigrate." But the whole series of oppressive acts with which we are now dealing seem clearly designed to coerce the desired degree of "willingness." To apply the language of another, "these or kindred enormities must extend over the land—persecution, abuse, barbarity at which the mind revolts, to induce the consent of these people to go to Liberia." "Willing to emigrate;" ay, the willingness of the convict, who—one or the other being inevitable—chooses transportation instead of hanging! Such is the mode by which our "Empire in Africa" is to be built up! Such the principle upon which the civilization and Christianization of that continent, of which we hear so much from the advocates of colonization, is to be effected.

TESTIMONY EXCLUDED.

Our new revised code failed to exclude the testimony of colored witnesses in our courts of justice, whether accidentally, or by design, we know not. But, as we have seen, by an act of the last Legislature, they are now expressly excluded, where a white person is a party in interest.

At a time like the present, when the spirit of legal reform, going upon the most rational idea that the object of all testimony is to get at the facts—the truth—in order to the furtherance of the ends of justice, is sweeping away all disabilities of witnesses; leaving the degree of their credibility, like any other fact, to the jury—in some of the States permitting even the parties to testify, and in our own State not excluding witnesses on account of crime or interest—what can be more absurd and short-sighted, even with reference to the true interest of our white population, than the enactment under consideration? Surely, the prejudice agaist color never exhibited itself in a more egregiously unjust and impolitic as well as foolish form! But, as respects the colored man, its folly is swallowed up in its atrocity. For it leaves his person and property, family and home, a prey to whatever abandoned white man may see fit to avail himself of this legislative act of impunity to Anglo-Saxon crime and outrage. And loudly and often have the wrongs of the hapless victims of this state of things borne "testimony," alas, how vainly! to the readiness of such "fellows of the baser sort" to avail themselves of such a license!

EXCLUDED FROM THE COMMON SCHOOLS.

As in the case of the testimony of colored people, their exclusion from the common schools was an after-thought of the Legislature, and sought to be effected by an amendment to the revised code as originally adopted. It is quite natural that the pro-slavery spirit, which seems to control our legislation, should adopt the policy of the slaveholder, of keeping in ignorance the victims of his oppression. But the most obvious considerations of shame, if not of honesty or honor, would, it might naturally have been supposed, have dictated to the Legislature the propriety of entirely relieving the class thus excluded from said schools, from the burden of sustaining them. Yet no such relief has been given. The colored people are made to contribute towards the education of the children of their oppressors not an inconsiderable amount, in the way of penalties to which they subject themselves chiefly in consequence of that ignorance which the law decrees shall be their portion!

The Constitution, however, seems to be more consistent on this subject—to contemplate no such exclusion. Section 1st of the 8th article of that instrument makes it the duty of the General Assembly "to provide, by law, for a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge, and equally open to all."

The law, therefore, would seem to be a clear violation of the Constitution. As, however, the framers of the 13th article were guilty therein of a plain violation of the Constitution of the United States, we need not be greatly surprised that the Legislature should, in cases of this kind, imitate their example with respect to the State Constitution. Such are but samples of the manifold gross inconsistencies in which our law-makers have involved themselves, in the atrocious attempt to trample under foot the rights of a portion of our citizens!

SUBJECT TO TAXATION.

In the fact indicated by this title we find a manifestation of the extremest point of infinitesimal littleness. That a great "sovereign State," while holding the colored man as an "outside barbarian," alien to all the rights and sympathies of humanity, registering him like cattle, refusing him a voice in public affairs, denying the protection of its laws to his person and property, and shutting him out from all the avenues of education and progress, should at the same time filch from him a portion of his hard-earned pittance for its own exclusive benefit—nay, worse—to aid in the sustenance of the very measures taken for his oppression, is certainly the superlative of all comparative degrees of meanness! What a falling off have we here from the wholesale villany of the 13th article—from land-piracy to petty larceny!

Such are the black laws of Indiana. We have not spoken—it not falling strictly within our province—of that other law, or rather that source of law, which, as has been truly said, is often more terrible and irresistible than express legislative enactments—we mean public sentiment. The colored people also suffer severely from this unwritten code. Under its rule, they are constantly subject to insult and annoyance in travelling and the other daily avocations of life, are practically excluded from all social privileges, and even from the Christian communion.

But enough. What better could be expected of a people guilty of such a series of iniquities, than that they should be found in political and social sympathy with the slave power, ready to obey "with alacrity" its negro-catching mandate? Verily, our first work of repentance, of reform, lies within our own borders—even at our very doors. May the spread of liberal education and of the spirit of Christianity hasten our preparation for it!

* A suit, it is said, has been commenced against a Methodist minister in the southern part of this State, for employing a colored clergyman of Kentucky to come over and preach for him!

From the New York Tribune.

The Slave Trade.

"Mr. McKeon, District-Attorney, addressed the jury. He contended that the transaction was a most flagrant violation of the laws. He little thought, he said, when he assumed the office he now held, that he should so soon discover that New York is the very depot of this nefarious traffic. The testimony in the case showed that the Julia Moulton was fitted out at this port expressly for the slave-trade, and that James Smith, the prisoner, was the master. The provisions taken on board, and other circumstances, were proof. They finally took on board, on the coast of Africa, what they designated cargo. There were 664 human beings crowded on board a small vessel, seated, in day time, on the deck, one within the extended legs of the other, as close as possible, and laid at night on their right sides, stowed also as closely as possible—the object of placing them on the right side being that the action of the heart would be more free. She made the coast of Cuba at a point directed by the instructions, and it is singular that a man-of-war has not been directed to cruise at such a point to prevent such landing. * * * As to the oaths at the Custom House, it has been said that they are lightly administered. It might have been said that they are lightly taken. Here is this man, who has solemnly sworn that he is a citizen of the United States, and has signed to that effect, and he must be holden to it. The indictment says that the vessel was owned by said Smith, a citizen of the United States, or by some other citizen to the jurors unknown. It has been shown by a witness that the Secretary of the Portuguese Consul was said to have been interested in the vessel. Mr. Figaniere, the Consul in order to do away with that, is called by counsel for defence, and he swears that he has no secretary Who is this man? He declined to answer questions put to him in relation to the vessel, and it is to be regretted, from the appearance, that there are slave traffickers among us, bearing the seals of a foreign power. The District Attorney alluded to a figure put forth by Mr. O'Connor in his argument, that the District-Attorney was groping about in the dark for a dagger with which to make his threats. There are real daggers, the District-Attorney said, in the hands of the persons engaged in this traffic in this City, and any man's life is in danger who attempts to expose them. But for myself, even if I should lose my life, I will fearlessly do my duty."

An examination of ship's papers at the Custom-House, for years past, proves that the oath of the owner or master of a vessel that he is a citizen of the United States, which by law he is required to be, is omitted—apparently with the design of shielding the wretches who, as captains and owners, are engaged in the slave-trade, and who almost weekly send out from this port vessels fitted out for that traffic. The law makes the punishment death, provided the master or owner is an American citizen. The Custom-House authorities in Philadelphia and Boston, where a like examination has taken place, were found always to have particularly followed the provisions of the law, and it is doubtful if slaves are fitted out at those ports, at least, to any such extent as is known to be the case here.

The water for ships leaving New York is supplied by persons who purchase the privilege from the Croton Water Department. These persons know that vessels built to sail with extraordinary rapidity, of from two to four hundred tons, for which any legitimate trade should carry a crew of from ten to sixteen men, are continually and openly supplied with from fifteen to forty thousand gallons of water, and they know that this water is for a slave cargo. The men, too who sell rice, and they who sell the shackles know likewise, for what these are intended. And yet, in the face of these facts, and of the belief of intelligent merchants that on an average, a slave ship, almost openly, send out as such, leaves the port of New York, about every two weeks throughout the year, our authorities take no cognizance of the matter.

Slavery in Illinois—Widening the Area.—A citizen of Illinois, Mr. D. J. Van Deren, writes to the Charleston Courier, that an enterprise is on foot in that state to repeal the clause of the state constitution which prohibits slavery, and to take a direct vote of the people on the question of establishing slavery. He says that many who have lived in Illinois long enough to test the comparative advantages that slaves and free systems present, are now prepared to pronounce openly their candid preference in favor of slave labor in all agricultural business. They have been endeavoring to learn the sentiments of the people upon this subject, and have been astonished to see with what unanimity they express themselves in favor of the introduction of slave labor.

He has conversed with many of the best farmers, who were raised in the eastern states, and they will give their hearty co-operation in effecting this object. He represents this prospect of success as better than the most sanguine friend could have anticipated. When the vote was taken before, it was lost by a small majority against slavery, and he is satisfied now that a better and more favourable opportunity for bringing this question before the people than the present cannot be expected.

We should be rejoiced at the success of such a movement. Establish slavery in Illinois, and it would give us the key to the great West. The South should not content herself with maintaining her ground; she should progress. She should expand her institutions wherever soil, climate, and productions are adopted to them. They are the balance-wheel of the republic—the preserver of our form of government—the Christianizer of the negro and the promoter of the white race. As philanthropists, it is our duty to remove the opposition which has been created for the want of proper information. If it be true that Illinois is adapted to slavery, economical considerations, if no other, must eventally carry it there.—Semi-Weekly Mississippian, Oct. 20.

A Star Chamber in New Orleans.

The Southern papers reveal constantly phenomena of Slavery, which are worse than the ordinary subjects of condemnation, selected by the friends of humanity from among its dark details. For example, take the following from the New Orleans True Delta of October 20, in rather an obscure part of the paper:

"Fiendish Outrage.—A woman named Fanny Smith was yesterday arrested on a charge of burning with hot irons, and otherwise cruelly ill-treating, two slave boys whom she owns, and who lived with her in a house on St. Louis street. It is said that Fanny's establishment is a brothel of the grossest stamp, and that her behaviour toward her slaves is the most fiendish that can possibly be imagined. It is to be hoped that such fiendishness will not be permitted to pass unpunished. It is a little strange that affidavits in relation to charges similar to that made against Fanny are generally hidden from the reporters in the Recorder's Office of the Second District. Fanny had recently returned from California with goodly stores of wealth, but surely her wealth cannot purchase impunity for so foul an offence."

Observe, the paragraph states that it is "a little strange"—only a little—it is not "passing strange," or monstrous. So the legal details of the infernal barbarities practiced toward the slave, in that quarter at least, seldom see the light! What Star Chamber or Inquisition Hall could be worse? No other paper but the True Delta noticed this circumstance on the 20th, but the next day the Picayune had the following respecting it:

"Charge of Cruelty to Slaves.—Fanny Smith, alias Mrs. Hickley, who keeps a house in St. Louis street, between Burgundy and Rampart streets, was charged on Wednesday last with torturing her slaves. It seems that on Wednesday morning, one of the policemen of the Second District was walking down St. Louis street, when he was startled by the sudden appearance of a negro woman, who rushed out of an alley-way perfectly naked, with the exception of a piece of blanket tied round her waist. Her back was bleeding in several places, and, on questioning her, she told the policemen that she had fled to escape the cruel treatment of her mistress, who had stripped her and was beating her when she broke from her and ran into the street. The policeman took her to the guard-house, and, on examining her, her body was found to be covered with lumps and scars, the effects of former whippings. She also stated that her mistress was in the habit of beating all the slaves in the most cruel manner, and mentioned a couple of slave boys, whom she was continually torturing by burning with red-hot irons and sticking forks and other pointed instruments into them. On hearing these statements, Lieut. Monde immediately made an affidavit, got out a warrant, and had the woman arrested. When brought to the police office, the accused indignantly denied these allegations, and produced a boy who she said was one of those she was accused of torturing, and upon whom no marks could be found. The slave woman first arrested, however, reiterated her statement, and said that the boys were kept locked up in the back yard, and no one permitted to see them. An officer was dispatched to her house, and soon returned with the two boys, who did not appear to be more than seven or eight years of age. On stripping them, they were found to be marked in a number of places with the scars of fresh and old burns, and punctured wounds were found in different parts of their bodies. The accused was ordered to give security in the sum of $1,000 for her appearance for examination, which she immediately gave. The slave boys and girl were sent to the Parish Prison."

Be it remembered, that a slave cannot give evidence against a white person. The arrest, we may safely affirm, is all that will ever be heard of this circumstance.—New York Tribune.

Conviction of Captain Smith.

Captain Smith is declared a pirate by the law, and worthy of death, because he has happened to live since the year 1808; had he lived previous to that time, he would no doubt have been considered an honorable gentleman. The framers of the Constitution of the United States were aware that slave trading was a crime, before the section declaring it so was inserted, and yet, for the sake of "filthy lucre," they consented to let it be carried on for a term of years, or until a good stock of negroes was procured. Acting on the same principle, they might have allowed pirates on the high seas, who, instead of stealing Africans, plundered ships, to pass unmolested until they had amassed vast quantities of ill-gotten booty. But it may be said that the cases are different, because men, commonly designated pirates, commit murder at the same time that they plunder.

So do slave traders. Every stolen African that dies from close confinement or being otherwise ill treated, is as verily murdered as if, without warning, stabbed to the heart.

Much surprise is being manifested at the disclosures that have been made during this trial,—and why is it? Need it be a matter of astonishment that New York merchants should engage in the African, when southern merchants engage in the coast trade. Matter of astonishment that no compunction of conscience is exhibited by northern ship builders when they sell vessels, knowing that they will be used to transport the uncultivated African to the plantations of Cuba, when the slave-breeders of Virginia send off ship load after ship load of their own sons and daughters, to replenish the broken ranks of toilers on the sugar fields of Louisiana, the whole of whom are swept off every seven years! Not stricken down by disease, but worked, driven to death by overtasking and the lash.

It may be a very fine thing for Governments to have Declarations of Independence and the like; beautiful truths to look at, but which are not intended to be practised; but let it be remembered, at the same time, that the greater the lie acted out, the deeper will its corrupting influences be felt on the people at large. The people of the United States have declared that all men have a right to life, liberty, &c.; but they have said also, by their actions, that they will withhold those rights whenever it is in their power and appears to conduce to their interest. That is the principle on which the present Administration is now acting; and the result is, corruption through all grades of society. The disgraceful conduct of their Soules, Borlands, and Hopkinses, is only a natural ebullitions of the schemes of wickedness generated at Washington.

Men will not be deceived by specious reasoning, and high sounding pretensions to a love of liberty, and honesty, in their rulers in a country where their actions are every day communicated to them by newspapers and telegraphic wires. They soon begin to get accustomed to the evil, especially if their pecuniary interests are involved, and regard liberty and honesty as but idle dreams.

We have heard of slaveholders who give their slaves a flogging every week, in order that they may remember their condition; and now, we suppose, Smith will be hung, or at least has been frightened by his conviction, into the knowledge that, although cabinets may concoct fillibustering expeditions, private citizens may not, without they will remember never to quarrel, so that the public can hear.

Colonial Church and School Society.

We are happy to find that, with the sanction of the Bishop, this excellent institution has taken up an important position in this Diocese. Under the able supervision of the Rev. M. M. Dillon, a Normal and Model School, in connection with this Society, has been opened in London, C. W. We are informed that the preparations are now complete for the reception of young persons of either sex to be trained as school teachers, without any charge, except for such books as they require; and these will be furnished at a very reduced rate. The excellent and devoted Mr. Ballantyne, under whose immediate superintendence the whole will be carried on, is (we heartily rejoice to be able to asure our readers) eminently qualified for the task which he has undertaken, from a pure and disinterested love to the best welfare of the rising generation for which he has so long been distinguished. We shall now have the happiness of seeing truly "Church Schools," in which the pure doctrines of the word of God will be inculcated.

We hope that since the Colonial Church and School Society has thus got a footing in the Diocese, it will be the means of increasing the number of true Gospel Clergy.—Echo.

Is this the same Rev. M. M. Dillion, who figured at meetings of the colored inhabitants of Toronto a short time since? Is this the school which he told a large audience, assembled in the Sayer Street Church, would have for its great object the training of Preachers and Teachers for Africa? If the same person, but not the same school, if his plans have undergone a radical change; if, in short, Mr. Dillon has abandoned his special mission to the colored people, and has taken the supervision of a school or schools for Canadians, without reference to color, for the training of School Teachers, whose powers shall be directed to dispelling ignorance and vice in Canada, as well as Africa, at least while there is such a demand for teachers here as at present, and has opened one which will be the means of increasing a true Gospel Clergy, we shall heartily wish it God speed. At the same time, we think that it is more needed in a locality where good schools and churches are not so numerous as there. Jamaica, for instance, according to reports from the different missions established there, presents a field in which laborers are much needed.

That Box.

Rev. (?) C. C. Foote, whose name appeared in the American Missionary, some months since, appended to a communication, in which he appealed to the sympathies of the public in aid of the "poor fugitives," settlers in the Bush, &c., and at the same time referred to a box of clothing which he had distributed at some unknown point, has not yet ceased talking about "the box," which we suppose is the same one.

We cut this slip from the Wesleyan, of last week, published at Syracuse, N. Y.:

"Seventeen fugitives, in one company, were handed up into the Canada depot, from the U. S. Railroad—men, women, and children, all hale and happy. Among these new comers the contents of the box were principally distributed.

C. C. Foote.

Is this the same box, and have the days of miracles returned again? We would speak reverently, but, as in both cases, it is "the box," and yet it has been twice emptied; our thoughts will revert to a certain meal barrel spoken of in the Scriptures. Why do not the people of Windsor speak out, as in days gone by, against the begging which is being revived again? That Foote has been distributing his goods in Chatham and Windsor, we were informed not long since by another source, and now his own statement confirms it. We shall have colored missions forced upon us, and lazy missionaries, both white and black, in our midst, eating the bread of idleness, obtained by means of highly exaggerated reports of our needs, industriously circulated abroad. So long as the people at the points from whence the reports emanate observe a profound silence in the matter.

Horrible Murder.

The people of his town were greatly shocked on hearing of the horrible murder of Mr. William Robertson, an old, respectable farmer of this neighborhood, on the evening of Wednesday last, who was brutally murdered when going home from the village of Mount Pleasant. An inquest is now being held by Dr Cooke, one of the coroners of this county, the result of which we have not yet ascertained. The following are the particulars of the bloody deed, as far as we can ascertain. In our next impression we hope to be able to announce the arrest of the murderer:—Mr. Robinson left home on the morning of Wednesday last for Mount Pleasant, to transact some business, where he remained the whole of the day. About half-past 7 in the evening, he left Rain's tavern for home; as soon as he got outside of the door, he met his son coming to meet him on foot. The father felt displeased with the boy for not bringing the waggon. They walked along together for about a mile, when he ordered the son to go immediately home, and fetch the team. The son started and walked about four rods ahead of his father, and would occasionally stop and listen to hear if his father was following, or if he could hear his footsteps, which he did distinctly, he also heard him talking to himself. When the boy reached the Mount Pleasant back street, immediately at the head of the road leading west from Rain's tavern, at the time when he supposed his father was crossing the ditch, he heard the report of a gun, the boy turned round facing the direction his father was coming, and stood for two minutes, he heard footsteps coming, different as he thought from those of his father, he then turned and run, and jumped over the fence, and made for William Edie's [junior] house, to whom he related the affair. Edie accompanied him home, where they secured two pistols and a cutlas, and returned in search of Mr. Robertson. When near the spot, they got Mr. Harris, who lived near by to accompany them. The three then started with a lantern [for the night was pitch dark] in search, and found the body of the unfortunate man, lying upon his face. His son turned him over on his back, and said "yes he is dead." Upon examination, they found a wound penetrating the chest, an inch and a half in depth, and supposed to be inflicted with some sharp pointed instrument. The instrument passed through his coat, vest, and two shirts, and penetrated the chest, at the right side of the breast bone. When found, his coat and vest were buttened up, and nothing was disturbed about his body, but merely the one thrust from the sharp pointed instrument from which he must have died almost instantly.—The body was found on the opposite side of the road from where the boy last heard him walking, and near where he jumped over the fence, so that he must have walked some little distance after having received the fatal stab.—Brantford Courier.

Bank Failures.

Of the Farmer's Joint Stock Bank of Toronto, the Buffalo Commercial, of Monday, says:

"The banking house of Hiram Johnston, at which the bills of the Farmer's Joint Stock Bank have hitherto been redeemed, suspended payment this morning. A good deal of excitement has been created in this city in consequence, but we are led to believe, from reliable sources, that the amount in circulation is not near so large as has been generally supposed. The following curd has been handed to us by those who are connected with the bank:—

"The agency of the Farmer's Joint Stock Bank, in this city, being unable longer to sustain the protracted run upon the institution, would beg leave to notify all parties interested that the bills of this bank will be fully redeemed in real estate, at fair prices, or otherwise, as parties may agree.'"

Among other failures, we notice the following:—The Farmer's Bank, of Chicago; Woodbury Bank, of Connecticut. The following Indiana banks have passed into disrepute: Wayne Bank, Logansport; State Stock Bank of Indiana, Peru; Upper Wabash Bank, Wabash; Perry County Bank, Cannelton; Steuben County Bank, Agola; Trader's Bank, Terre Haute; and Great Western Bank, Terre Haute.

We also learn that the Union Bank, and City Bank, of Chicago, closed on the 14th, amidst great excitement. On the same day, in Cincinnatti, the private banking house of George Miller & Co., stopped payment; and, on the following day, the Mechanics' and Trader's Bank, of Cincinnatti, also failed.

From the New York Herald, we learn that the following banks have also closed. Canadians, look well before taking American bills:

"Knickerbocker Bank, Eighth Avenue Bank, Suffolk Bank, Lewis County Bank, New York; Bank of Hallowell, Ship Builder's Bank, Brunswick Bank, Maine; Bank of Milford, Deleware; Bank of Connersville, Elkhart County Bank, Indiana; Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, Memphis; Erie and Kalamazoo Bank; Trust and Banking Company, Newport; Safety Fund Bank, Kentucky.—Prototype.

War Affairs.

CONVERSATION WITH THE RUSSIAN PRISONERS AT PLYMOUTH.

"A feeling of present well-being, mixed with anxiety for the future, has been expressed to me (says a Correspondent of the Daily News at Plymouth) by more than twenty soldiers, all of pure Russian blood, whom I have questioned on the subject. "I have seen thirty-three years of hard service," said a veteran decorated with a medal, "and it would be very painful to me to resume that service under the same conditions." "And I," added a young fellow of twenty, "I have served the Czar during three years, and I think it is quite enough." "To return to what we have been, would not please any of us," remarked another prisoner, and this remark was unanimously approved by a group of one hundred and fifty men who surrounded us. "I hope, my friends," said I to them, "that none of you will be obliged to resume your chains against your inclination. There is a question of sending you to Australia, should you desire it; there you will be free, as you have never been." This project, however, I am bound to confess it, did not at all seem to the taste of my auditors, and many of them did not even understand it. "What should we do?" said one of the most intelligent among them to me—"What should we do in a strange and distant country, we who are unable to perform any kind of pacific work? Why do not the English and French rather enrol us among their troops?" "Is it possible." I observed, in reply, "you would fight against the Emperor Nicholas, your Sovereign?" "He would no longer be our Sovereign; and his quarrel would no longer be ours?" At least one-third of the prisoners at Plymouth are not Russians, but Poles, Finlanders, and Jews. Under the coarse cloak of the Russian soldier there is concealed among the prisoners at Plymouth a Pole, degraded from his rank as a nobleman, and despoiled of his property for having taken part in the Revolution at Warsaw in 1830. During four-and-twenty years he has expiated, under the stick of the military despot, the guilt of this devotion to his country. His name is Tarasiewicz. "Has Silistria been taken?" asked one of the defenders of Bomarsund. "How taken? The siege of that place is raised, and the army of the Czar has recrossed the Pruth." "We have been told, on the contrary, that it was marching victoriously towards Constantinople." "So far from its being so, Omar Pasha might attack Odessa in a few days if he were permitted. But who has given you all this false information?" "Our chiefs at Bomarsund." Two officers, no doubt dupes themselves of systematic deception, came up at this moment, and I had a short conversation with them. They expressed a doubt as to the correctness of the official accounts of the battle of the Alma, and one of them added: "But even if it were so, and that the fall of Sebastopol should follow, the war will not therefore be at an end." "Why not?" "Because the Emperor Nicholas does not care how many men fall, and he will always have troops enough to fight new campaigns with." This officer had the savage feeling of patriotism of which the soldiers are devoid, be it said to their honour, and he prided himself upon serving a Sovereign who took no heed of the number of lives sacrificed for his glory. "What do you think of the French and English?" I asked of my interlocutor. "I know the French only through the means of the guns of their ships, which threw their bombs with admirable precision. As for the others, they are veritable devils. Nothing can resist them." "You admit, then, that they can beat even Russians?" "I admit it. But the population of Russia is numerous, and the Emperor Nicholas will not avow himself vanquished as long as one soldier remains to him." "But he must have money to equip his troops." The officer smiled, and his knowledge of financial matters being not very deep, he refused to believe it possible that so powerful a Monarch could be in want of money. This officer being free on parole, and enjoying in right of his rank 7s. per day, in spite of his prejudices, paid homage to England and to civilization. "Really," said he to me, "I do not look upon myself as a prisoner of war, but as the guest of an hospitable and generous nation." "Acknowledge, then," said I to him, "that this nation and his glorious Ally are not making war against the Russian people, but only against its ambitious rulers." "I am willing to acknowledge it, although I cannot allow myself to criminate the conduct of my Sovereign." Although the pay allowed to the officers is higher than the appointments which they received at Bomarsund, they have lost all authority. What follows is the latter part of a dialogue between an officer and a soldier, overheard in the prison at Plymouth: Officer—Hold your tongue. Soldier—It pleases me to answer you. Officer—You are a miserable good-for-nothing. Soldier—You are a thief. We know full well how you used to pinch the rations allowed to the poor soldiers in the fortress. Officer—This complaint is out of season now. You and your fellows might at the proper time and in the proper place have submitted your griefs to the Emperor. Soldier—That's a good joke! The Emperor was too far off, as God is too high up. Officer—You have grown very bold to reason in this manner with your superior. Soldier—There is no difference of rank here. My superior here is not you, but the English Government. The soldier had the last word, and his comrades laughed at the officer, who remained silent.

The armament now building to operate against the Russians in the Baltic at the opening of the spring campaign, includes 35 vessels; namely, five floating batteries, the decks covered with iron plates, eight inches thick, and their exterior with 100 plates, four inches thick, rendering them perfectly ball and bomb proof (these vessels will be armed with six of the long range guns on the Lancaster principle;) 10 bomb-vessels, to be armed with from two to three mortars of the most powerful description; and 20 gunboats, drawing about four feet of water, the latter being specially intended for service in the River Neva.

Arrival of the Canadian.

The Siege of Sebastopol!!

THE WORK PROGRESSING.

PORTLAND, Nov. 22, 1854.

The Canadian Co.'s steamer Canadian, Captain McMaster, arrived here to-day.

The official despathes from Admiral Dundas, Gen. Canrobert, and Admiral Hamelin, of the 17th, the first day of the bombardment, states that the Admirals of the fleets, with the whole of the fleets, assisted the land batteries South and North of the harbor. The French squadron took up a position about 7 cables' length from 350 guns of the Quarantine battery.

From the two batteries of Fort Alexander, and from the Artillery battery, the English squadron faced the 130 guns at Fort Constantine. The Telegraph Battery and the Maxillian Fort, to the north of the land forces, played from the heights of Sebastopol in a formidable and advantageous position. The actions, so far as the fleets are concerned, lasted from about half-past 1 to half-past 6 p. m., when, it being quite dark, the ships were hauled off.

The English loss on ship-board is two lieutenants—Chase and Madden—killed, and 16 officers wounded; in all, 44 men killed, and 266 wounded. The ships are considerably damaged by shot and shell.

The French loss is 30 killed, and 164 wounded.

Accounts also have been received of an attack made by the Russian troops, numbering about 30,000, upon the forts in the vicinity of Balaklava, a town in the rear of the allied main position.

Admiral Heliman states in his despatch, that if the Russians had not closed the entrance of the harbor, by sinking 5 vessels and 2 frigates, the allied squadron could, after the first 5 hours, have successfully run in, and placed themselves in communication with the land army, without, perhaps, a greater loss than they have now actually suffered.

At the commencement of the action the enthusiasm was extreme, and also during the action. Before opening fire, Admiral Hamelin made the signal—"France Observes you,"—which was replied to by shouts of "Vive l'Empereur."

The enemy succeeded in capturing three batteries manned by Turkish troops, and in drawing away the latter, who, it must be remembered, are mostly raw levies of young men. The English Light Cavalry, the Scotch Greys, and the 5th Dragoon Guards, aided by the French troops, speedily came to the rescue, and though the Light Cavalry suffered most severely, the Russians were repulsed with great loss, and driven behind two of the batteries.

On the evening of the 26th, the Russians, 8,000 strong, made a sortie from the town as well as from the direction of Balaklava, but were repulsed with great slaughter—3,000 men being left dead on the field.

The latest telegraphic advices say the bombardment from the heights was still vigorously continued, and the Qarantine Fort, and Fort Constantine had been razed, while the southern tower and other forts had been demolished.

The town, it is also stated, is on fire in three different places. It was evident that Sebastopol could not hold out much longer, and according to an account, the assault was to be made on the 2nd November.

A telegraphic despatch was received in Liverpool, from a Greek house, stating that the place had been positively captured, but it requires confirmation.

Telegraphs of Nov. 7th, state the Town is a mass of ruins; that the French Chasseurs killed all the artillery men who showed themselves at the embrasures; and that all night, shells were poured into the forts, leaving the enemy no possibility of repairing disasters.

The Russian fleet had sought shelter under the buildings alongside the quays, but the allies were about to fire upon them from new batteries with red hot balls.

The Gazette extraordinary was published this morning, with further despatches from Lord Raglan.

Prince Menschikoff is not in Sebastopol, but with the main body of the army on the plains, north of Bachiserai.

It is stated that the French have lost 200 men, principally by explosions,—while the English loss is understood at 100 men killed and wounded.

On the land side, as both the British and French forces have been much cut up by disease and by loss in engagements, reinforcements are urgently called for, and both from England and France they are forthcoming.

Among the last, the present week, about 4000 men have been sent out from England; these include those of the detachment which have arrived from Canada. The men of which are in a state of fine health and efficiency.

The bounty for each soldier enlisted has been raised to £6.

The standard height throughout the service has been reduced by one inch. The British force in the Crimea will then amount to 50,000.

Supplies of winter cloth have been forwarded to the troops.

13 out of 24 iron cylinders, which have been ordered at Woolwich, for conveyance to Sebastopol, to blow up the sunken ships, have been completed, and shipped. Each of the cylinders will contain 1000 pounds of powder. 120 gun boats, together with 40 floating batteries and 70 guns, making a total of 2800 guns, to be ready for an attack on Cronstadt.

A camp of 10,000 men is to be formed at Alderhol, to be ready for spring campaign in the Baltic.

AUSTRIA AND PRUSSIA.—It appears very doubtful whether Austria and Russia will not, after all, have resource to the bloody arbitrement of arms in the Kingdom of Poland.

Russia has gathered 20,000 men facing the Austrian frontier, and Austria has embattled along her frontier, from Cracow to the Danube 20,000 men, and 25,000 in the Principalities; both sides show great activity.

The Latest News with regard to Prussia is that on the 27th the Czar refused an enterance to the Prussian Ambassador at St. Petersburg.

ASIA.—Gen. Arcolias is reported to have gained a victory over Schamyl, near Grosnia, on the frontier of Circassia.

Mr. Soule, the American Ambassador at Madrid, though at first refused permission to travel through France, on the ground that he had coalesced with Revolutionists, Spanish and French, has now had this refusal withdrawen.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public

Poetry.

At thy Peril.

FROM DICKENS' "HOUSEHOLD WORDS."

"Am I thy brother's keeper?"
Awake from dreams to-day!
Arouse thee, careless sleeper,
Cast not the thought away,
Thou from a golden chalice
Dost drink the ruby wine,
Thine home a stately palace,
Where wealth and splendor shine.

"Art thou thy brother's keeper?"
Life's page to thee reads fair,
But gaze a little deeper,
And other tales lie there.
With sullen look and stolid;
Mid wretchedness and strife,
Beneath yon root-tree squalid,
How drags thy brother's life?

"Art thou thy brother's keeper?"
Swift as the viewless wind,
Speeds on thy mighty Reaper,
His harvest sheaves to bind;
His earliest prey find shelter
These sordid roofs beneath,
Where vice and misery shelter
In hot-beds ripe for Death,

"Art thou thy brother's keeper!"
Such homes are but on thine,
The dim eyes of the weeper
Mocked by thy banquet's shine.
Say thou, "Such ills nameless,
They touch not such as we!"
Alas! cans't Thou be blameless,
That things like This should be?

"Art thou thy brother's keeper?"
One course the foe doth run,
Nor Volga's stream nor Dneiper
Bars out this ruthless Hun.
Who shall the myriads number,
This "Scourge of God" may kill?
While sunk in selfish slumber
Securely dream ye still?

Thou art thy brother's keeper,
This charge thou canst not flee,
The path of right grows steeper
Daily to him, to thee.
A reckoning shall be taken,
A reckoning stern and deep,
Woe! unto those who waken
Then first from careless sleep.

Thou art thy brother's keeper,
War, pestilence, and dearth,
These besoms of the Sweeper
Invade the homes of earth,
A blackened path and sterile
Conducts them to the door,
And at thy proper peril,
Dost thou neglect the poor!

Agricultural, &c.

The "Economical Manure."

For some time past there has been used to some extent in England and Scotland, an artificial manure, to which the above title has been given. If testimonials are to be relied upon at all, this manure must be possessed of very desirable properties. In the month of May last it was analyzed by a competent chemist in Edinburgh, and found to be composed mainly of, 1st. protosulphate of iron, or green vitriol, about 35 per cent; 2nd. of sulphate of lime, or gypsum, about 16 or 17 per cent; and 3rd, of chloride of sodium and other alkaline salts, about 26 to 34 per cent In one specimen analyzed the chloride of sodium amounted to 16.31 and the other alkaline salts to 10.66, or in all 25.97 per cent, and in another specimen to 17.43 and 16.88 respectively, or in all to 34.37 per cent.

Now, as a manure of such a composition might be easily and cheaply got up by any agriculturist, we subjoin a specimen or two of the testimonials which have been given of its fertilizing properties. One testifies that on that portion of a field of barley on which this manure was sown broadcast, mixed with ashes, the growth of the barley was wonderfully thick and luxuriant to what it was on the other portion of the field. Another testifies to its having most beneficial effects on his garden crops, and to his cattle being very partial to a part of a field of grass to which it had been applied. "Your manure," says Mr. John Davenport of Staffordshire, "improved the wheat very much, and the grass it sweetened, and the cows eat it off very bare all the summer." "Your manure," says one "was sown with clover, and it is most luxuriant."

It is called the "economical manure," because ¼ to ½ cwt., per acre fully equals in effect 3 cwt., of the best Peruvian guano, and because the saving in cost is thus at least 50 per cent. It is applied with two or more times its bulk of light earth or peat-mud, or ashes or sawdust, or anything of that kind, broadcast. In this state we presume it was applied to some apple and pear trees, of which it is said to have improved both the foliage and the fruit. We may close by stating that it is sold in Great Britain at about or a little over the price of the best Peruvian guano, that is about £12 per ton.—Country Gentleman.

Wintering Cabbage Plants.

Any method, simple and inexpensive, for preserving autumn sown cabbage plants through the winter, is a valuable consideration. We know of none better adapted to the great bulk of people, than the following, practiced to a considerable extent by market gardeners, and in dry, sandy, or upland soil, with good success.

Towards the end of October prepare some rich, well dug ground; draw some deep drills 18 inches apart, and plant the cabbage one foot apart in these, on the sunny side of the drills, so that the plant may have all of the benefit of the sun before the severe frost sets in fairly, place some straw or rather light materials cross-ways of the rows, which will effectually keep the sun's rays off during the winter, which is a great point to be attended to. At the approach of spring, remove the covering, and as the plants grow, draw a little of the soil to their stems.

If they stand the winter well, they will be in advance of those planted in the spring. The strongest of the plants from the sowing made last month, should be selected, while those weaker will do to winter as recommended in a previous paper.—Ibid.

Time for Curing Buckwheat.

It is hard to given a precise rule for the best time to cut buckwheat. The grain continues to ripen successively, and while most of the stalks remain green or succulent, these grains will not drop off. It is therefore best to let the crop remain as long as the amount continues to increase, by successively ripening portions. But as soon as the plant loses its fresh appearance, and the first ripened portions are found to separate easily, no time should be lost in cutting. The rule with some farmers in the north, is to allow the crop to stand till the first light frost, and then cut as quickly as possible, before the shelling process commences. But when frosts do not come early, it is cut before. As soon as the stalks are dead or dry, buckwheat threshes with great ease, but not before; hence the reason that when but partly dried, it is often found so difficult to thresh. At the north it is usually sown during the early part of summer, sometimes nearly as late as midsummer; if sown too early, the grain does not set well.—Ibid.

Apparatus for Transplanting Large Trees.

The Glasgow (Scotland) Commonwealth gives an account of McGlashen's Patent Transplanter, an apparatus that is likely to be of signal service in ornamental planting and other operations connected with rural improvements, enabling a gentleman to buy an estate, build a mansion house, and embosom it in woods and groves, all in the space of a year or two. The operation of transplanting is effected by driving into the ground large spades or cutters around the trees; these are held together by a light framework of iron, and extension rods being attached to the upper part of the spades, the tree is lifted out of the earth (by lever or screw power, according to size) with a large adherent ball of earth, so that the roots are not at all disturbed; nor is it necessary to dig a trench around the tree. In this state the tree, with its adherent ball, can be transported to any distance in safety.—Life Illustrated.

Storing Winter Vegetables.

Next to growing, the proper preserving of winter vegetables, claims our attention. It is possible that so far as sorts and growth are concerned, the stock may be unexceptionable, which, when wanted for the table, they may be, if roots, dried and shrivelled up—if the cabbage tribe, rotton. This is all for the want of proper storing. A good dry cellar is the best place for storing roots, such as carrots, beets, ruta bagas, parsnips, scorzonera or oyster plants, and turnips. If stored after the following manner, they will come out as wanted, and plump as when taken out of the ground.

The tenderer, such as carrots, beets and scorzoners, require taking up as soon as the leaves exhibit a yellow appearance, or before any very sharp frost, while parsnips may remain longer as the frost does not injure them; in fact, except for use during hard weather, many leave them in the ground all winter. In taking up, care should be taken to get them out with the roots entire, or they are much more liable to rot, while some, as the beet, are materially injured in the cooking if mutilated. The tops should be trimmed off just above the crown, and the roots allowed to become dry before storing.

ONE OF THE COLLECTORS.—An exchange tells a good, though rather long-winded story of a certain Yankee collector. The bill to be collected was for one hundred dollars—of which the collector, it being a hard case, was to have half. Some weeks after, the creditor was accosted by his Yankee agent:

"Look o' here, squire," said he, "I had considerable luck with that bill o' yourn. You see, I stuck to him like a dog to a root; but for the first week or so 't want no use—not a bit. If he was at home, he was 'short;' if he wasn't home, I couldn't get no satisfaction. By-and-bye, says I, after goin' sixteen times, 'I'll fix you,' says I. So I sat down on the door-step, and sat all day and part of the evening, and I begun early next day; but about ten o'clock he 'gin in. He paid me my half, and I 'gin him up the note!"

THE TWO BLESSINGS.—He that loses his conscience has nothing left that is worth keeping. Therefore be sure you look to that. And in the next place, look to your health; and if you have it, praise God, and value it next to a good conscience; for health is the second blessing that we mortals are capable of, a blessing that money cannot buy; therefore value it, and be thankful for it.—Isaac Walton.

THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and the Brotherhood of Man, on comprehensive and liberal principles, and in opposition to all sectarian bigotry and party despotism, tending to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and more especially on the ground of the complexional distinction of the human race, we pledge ourselves [illegible] to co-operate, in our respective capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch tower to notify the citizens of this country of any infringement, direct or indirect, as well as those of many in the United States of this country, who would direct our policy for evil purposes, and thereby divert from white emigrants who may and do settle here, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as regards that of Great Britain, to check its progress in America, by all legitimate means and 5th To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and moral efforts. 6th As a means of operating, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. curry.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &

ART. X.—Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS,
JOHN D. PECK,
AMOS G. BEMAN,
JOHN JONES,
J. D. BONNER,
J. MCCUNE SMITH,
Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affiuavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G Beman the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq. of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all such donations to the Treasurer by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of laborers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain ablebodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted.

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number

WATER.

Where does the water spring gladsome and bright?
Here in the leafy grove,
Bubbling in life and love;
Born of the sunshine up-opening to light,
Waked in its pebbly bed,
When the still shadows fled,
Gushing, overflowing, down tumbling for flight

Where does the water flow? where glides the rill?
Now 'neath the forest shade,
Then in the grassy glade,
Dancing as freely as child of the hill,
Bright cascades leaping,
Silver brooks creeping,
Wearing the mountains and turning the mill.

Where does the water dwell, powerful and grand?
Here where the ocean foam,
Breaks in its rock-ribbed home,
Dashing and lashing, up-bounding, wrath spanned,
Anon, sweetly sleeping,
Soft dimples o'er creeping,
Like a babe on its mother's breast, soothed by her hand.

Where smilo the dew drops that night shadows woo?
Where the young flow'rets dip,
Leaving each perfumed lip,
Close in the rose's heart, loving and true;
Pois'd on an em'rald shaft
Where never sunbeam laughed,
Deep in the dingle—the beautiful dew!

Where glows the water pledge given of old?
'Tis drooped from God's throne,
When the shower is gone,
A chain of pure gems, linked with purple and gold;
In Eden's hues blushing,
With infinity gushing,
A line from the book of life, its love half untold.

The bright bow of promise, the signet of power,
The crown of the sky,
The pathway on high,
Whence angels bend to us, when darksome clouds lower;
Breathing so silently,
Kindly and truthfully,
Of their wings for a shield in the wreath-bearing hour.

Then we'll love the threads lacing our beautiful world!
Tangling the sunbeams,
Laughing in glorious gleams;
The wavelets all dimpled, and spray tresses curled;
The tear on the flow'rets breast
The gem on the ocean's crest—
And the ladder of angels by rain-drops impearled.

THE WAR.

From the Special Correspondent of the Times.

Cavalry Action at Balaklava.

OCT. 25.—If the exhibition of the most brilliant valour, of the excess of courage, and of a daring which would have reflected lustre on the best days of chivalry, can afford full consolation for the disaster of to-day, we can have no reason to regret the melancholy loss which we sustained in a contest, with a savage and barbarian enemy. It will be remembered, that in a letter sent by last mail from this, it was mentioned that eleven battalions of Russian infantry had crossed the Tchernaya, and that they threatened the rear of our position, and our communication with Balaklava. Their bands could be heard playing at night, by the travellers along the Balaklava road to the camp, but they "showed" but little during the day, and kept up among the gorges and mountain passes, through which the roads to Inkerman, Simpheropol, and the south-east of the Crimea, wind towards the interior. It will be recollected also, that the position we occupied in reference to Balaklava, was supposed by most people to be very strong—even impregnable. Our lines were formed by natural mountain slopes in the rear, along which the French had very formidable entrenchments. Below those entrenchments, and very nearly in a right line, across the valley beneath, are four conical hillocks, one rising above the other, as they recede from our lines; the furthest, which joins the chain of mountains opposite to our ridges, being named Canrobert's Hill, from the meeting there of that General with Lord Raglan after the march to Balaklava. On the top of each of these hills, the Turks had thrown up earthen redoubts, defended by 250 men each, and armed with two or three guns—some heavy ship guns—lent by us to them, with one artilleryman to each redoubt to look after them. These hills cross the valley of Balaklava at the distance of about two and a half miles from the town. Supposing the spectator, then, to take his stand on one of the heights forming the rear of our camp before Sebastopol, he would see the town of Balaklava, with its scanty shipping, its narrow strip of water, and its old forts on his right hand. Immediately below he would behold the valley and a plain of coarse meadow land, occupied by our cavalry tents, and stretching from the base of the ridge on which he stood to the foot of the formidable heights at the other side; he would see the French trenches lined with Zouaves a few feet beneath, and distant from him, on the slope of the hill; a Turkish redoubt lower down, then another in the valley; then, in a line with it, some angular earthworks; then, in succession, the other two redoubts up to Canrobert's Hill. At the distance of two or two and a half miles across the valley there is an abrupt rocky mountain range of most irregular and picturesque formation, covered with scanty brushwood here and there, or rising into barren pinnacles and plateaux of rock. In outline and appearance this portion of the landscape is wonderfully like the Trosachs. A patch of blue sea is caught in between the overhanging cliffs of Balaklava as they close in the entrance to the harbor on the right. The camp of the marines, pitched on the hill sides more than 1,000 feet above the level of the sea, is opposite to you as your back is turned to Sebastopol and your right side towards Balaklava. On the road leading up the valley, close to the entrance of the town and beneath these hills, is the encampment of the 93rd Highlanders. The cavalry lines are nearer to you below, and are some way in advance of the Highlanders, but nearer to the town than the Turkish redoubts. The valley is crossed here and there by small waves of land. On your left the hills and rocky mountain ranges gradually close in toward the course of the Tchernaya, till, at three or four miles from Balaklava, the valley is swallowed up in a mountain gorge and deep ravines, above which rise tiers after tiers of whitish rock, garnished now and then by bits of scanty herbage, and spreading away towards the east and south, where they attain the Alpine dimensions of the Tchatir-Dagh. It is very easy for an enemy at the Belbek, or in command of the road to Mackenzie's Farm, Inkermann, Simpheropol, or Baktchi Sarai, to debouch through these gorges at any time upon this plain from the neck of the valley, or to march from Sebastopol by the Tchernaya, and to advance along it towards Balaklava, till checked by the Turkish redoubts on the southern side, or by the fire form the French works on the northern side, i. e. the side which, in relation to the valley to Balaklava, forms the rear of our position. It was evident enough that Mentschikoff and Gortschakoff have been feeling their way along this route for several days past, and very probably at night the Cossacks had crept up close to our pickets, which are not always as watchful as might be desired, and had observed the weakness of a position far too extended for our army to defend, and occupied by their despised enemy, the Turks. I say "despised," because we hear from prisoners and other sources that, notwithstanding all the drubbings received on the Danube from the Osmanli, the Russians have the most ineffable contempt for the champions of the crescent.

At half-past 7 o'clock this morning, (Oct. 25) an orderly came galloping in to the headquarters camp from Balaklava, with the news that at dawn a strong corps of Russian horse, supported by guns and battalions of infantry, had marched into the valley, and had already nearly dispossessed the Turks of the redoubt No. 1 (that on Canrobert's Hill, which is farthest from our lines,) and that they were opening fire on Nos. 2, 3, and 4, which would speedily be in their hands, unless the Turks offered a stouter resistance than they had done already. Orders were despatched to Sir Geo. Cathcart, and to H. R. H. the Duke of Cambridge, to put their respective divisions, the 4th and the 1st, in motion for the scene of action, and intelligence of the advance of the Russians was also furnished to General Canrobert. Immediately on receipt of the news that general commanded General Bosquet to get the third division under arms, and send a strong body of artillery and some 200 Chasseurs d'Afrique to assist us in holding the valley. Sir Colin Campbell, who was in command of Balaklava, had drawn up the 63rd Highlanders a little in front of the road to the town at the first news of the advance of the enemy. The marines on the heights got under arms; the seaman's batteries and marine's batteries close to the town, were manned, and the French artillerymen and the Zouaves prepared for action along their lines. Lord Lucan's little camp was the scene of great excitement. The men had not had time to water their horses; and they had not broken their fast from the evening of the day before, and had barely saddled at the first blast of the trumpet, when they were drawn up on the slope behind the redoubt in front of their camp to operate on the enemy's squadrons It was soon evident that no reliance was to be placed on the Turkish infantry or artillerymen. All the stories we had heard about their bravery behind stone walls and earthworks proved how differently the same or similar people fight under different circumstances. When the Russians advanced, the Turks fired a few rounds at them, got frightened at the distance of their supports in the rear, looked round, received a few shots and shell, and then "bolted," and fled with an agility quite at variance with common-place notions of Oriental deportment on the battle field. But Turks on the Danube are quite different beings from Turks in the Crimea, as it appears that the Russians of Sebastopol are not at all like the Russians of Sillistria.

Soon after eight, Lord Raglan and his staff turned out and cantered towards the rear of our position. The booming of artillery, the spattering roll of musketry, were heard rising from the valley, drowning the roar of the siege guns in front before Sebastopol. As I rode in the direction of the firing over the thistles and large stones which cover the undulating plain that stretches away towards Balaklava, on a level with the summit of the ridges above it, I observed a French light infantry regiment (the 27th, I think,) advancing with admirable care and celerity from our right towards the ridge near the telegraph house, which was already lined by companies of French infantry, while mounted officers scampered along its broken outline in every direction. General Bosquet, a stout, soldier-like looking man, who reminds one of the old genre of French generals, as depicted at Versailles, followed with his staff and a small escort of hussars at a gallop. Faint white clouds rose here and there above the hill from the cannonade below. Never did the painter's eye rest on a more beautiful scene than I beheld from the ridge. The fleecy vapours still hung around the mountain tops, and mingled with the ascending volumes of smoke; the patch of sea sparkled freshly in the rays of the morning sun, but its light was eclipsed by the flashes which gleamed from the masses of armed men below.

Looking to the left towards the gorge, we beheld six compact masses of Russian infantry, which had just debouched from the mountain passes near the Tchernaya, and were slowly advancing with solemn statelines up the valley. Immediately in their front were a regular line of artillery, of at least 20 pieces strong. Two batteries of of light guns were already a mile in advance of them, and were playing with energy on the redoubts, from which feeble puffs of smoke came at long intervals. Behind these guns in front of the infantry were enormous bodies of cavalry. They were in six compact squares, three on each flank, moving down en echelon towards us, and the valley was lit up by the blaze of their sabres and lance points and gay accoutrements. In their front, and extending along the intervals between each battery of guns, were clouds of mounted skirmishers, wheeling and whirling in the front of their march, like autumn leaves tossed by the wind. The Zouaves close to us were lying like tigers at the spring, with ready rifles in hand, hidden chin deep by the earthworks which ran along the line of these ridges on our rear, but the quick-eyed Russians were manœuvring on the other side of the valley, and did not expose their columns to attack. Below the Zouaves we could see the Turkish gunners in the redoubts, all in confusion as the shells burst over them. Just as I came up the Russians had carried No 1 redoubt, the farthest and most elevated of all, and the horsemen were chasing the Turks across the interval which lay between it and No. 2. At that moment, the cavalry, under Lord Lucan, were formed in glittering masses—the light brigade, under Lord Cardigan, in advance; the heavy brigade, under Brigadier-general Scarlet, in reserve. They were drawn up just in front or their encampments, and were concealed from the view of the enemy by a slight "wave" in the plain. Considerably to the rear of their right, the 93rd Highlanders were drawn up in line in front of the approach to Balaklava. Above and behind them on the heights, the marines were visible through the glass, drawn up under arms, and the gunners could be seen ready in the earthworks, in which were placed the heavy ships' guns. The 93rd had originally been advanced somewhat more into the plain, but the instant the Russians got possession of the first redoubt they opened fire on them from our own guns, which inflicted some injury, and Sir Colin Campbell retired his men to a better position. Meanwhile the the enemy advanced his cavalry rapidly, To our inexpressible disgust we saw the Turks in redoubt No. 2 fly at their approach. They ran in scattered groups across towards redoubt No. 3, and towards Balaklava, but the horse-hoof of the Cossack was too quick for them, and sword and lance were busily plied among the retreating herd. The yells of the pursuers and pursued were plainly audible. As the Lancers and light cavalry of the Russians advanced they gathered up their skirmishers with great speed and in excellent order—the shifting trails of men, which played all over the valley, like moonlight on the water, contracted, gathered up, and the little peloton in a few moments became a solid column. Then up came their guns, in rushed their gunners to the abandoned redoubt, and the guns of No. 2 redoubt soon played with deadly effect upon the dispirited defenders of No. 3 redoubt. Two or three shots in return from the earthworks, and all is silent. The Turks swarm over the earthworks, and run in confusion towards the town, firing their muskets at the enemy as they run. Again the solid column of cavalry opens like a fan, and resolves itself into a "long spray" of skirmishers. It laps the flying Turks, steel flashes in the air, and down go the poor Moslem quivering on the plain, split through fez and musket-guard to the chin and breast belt. There is no support for them. It is evident the Russians have been too quick for us. The Turks have been too quick also, for they have not held their redoubts long enough to enable us to bring them help. In vain the naval guns on the heights fire on the Russian cavalry; the distance is too great for shot or shell to reach. In vain the Turkish gunners in the earthen batteries which were placed along the French intrenchments strive to protect their flying countrymen; their shot fly wide and short of the swarming masses. The Turks betake themselves towards the Highlanders, where they check their flight and form into companies on the flanks of the Highlanders. As the Russian cavalry on the left of their line crowd the hill across the valley, they perceive the Highlanders drawn up at a distance of some half mile, calmly waiting their approach. They halt, and squadron after squadron flies up from the rear, till they have a body of some 1,500 men along the ridge—Lancers and Dragoons and Hussars. Then they move en echelon in two bodies, with another in reserve. The cavalry who have been pursuing the Turks on the right are coming to the ridge beneath us, which conceals our cavalry from view. The heavy brigade in advance is drawn up in two lines. The first line consists of the Scots Greys and their old companions in glory, the Enniskilleners; the second of the 4th Royal Irish, of the 5th Dragoon Guards, and of the 1st Royal Dragoons. The light cavalry brigade is on their left in two lines also. The silence is oppressive; between the cannon bursts one can hear the champing of bits and the clink of sabre in the valley below. The Russians drew breath for a moment, and then in one grand line dashed at the Highlanders. The ground flies beneath their horses' feet; gathering speed at every stride, they dash on towards that thin red streak topped with a line of steel. The Turks fire a volley at 800 yards, and run. As the Russians come within 600 yards, down goes that line of steel in front, and out rings a volley of Minie musketry. The distance is too great, the Russians are not checked, but still sweep on with the whole force of horse and man, through the smoke, here and there knocked over by the shot of our batteries above. With breathless suspense every one awaits the burning of the wave upon the line of the Gaelic rock; but ere they come within 150 yards, another deadly volley flashes from the levelled rifle, and carries death and terror into the Russians. They wheel about, opened files right and left, and fly back faster than they come. "Bravo, Highlanders! well done," shouted the excited spectators; but events thicken. The Highlanders and their splendid front are soon forgotten, men scarcely have a moment to think of the fact, that the 93rd never altered their formation to receive that tide of horsemen. "No," said Sir Colin Campbell, "I did not think it worth while to form them even four deep!" The ordinary British line, two deep, was quite sufficient to repel the attack of these Muscovite cavaliers. Our eyes were, however, turned in a moment to our own cavalry. We saw Brigadier-general Scarlett ride along in front of his massive squadrons. The Russians—evidently corps d'elite—their light blue jackets embroidered with silver lace, were advancing on their left, at an easy gallop towards the brow of the hill. A forest of lances glistened in their rear, and several squadrons of gray-coated dragoons moved up quickly to support them as they reached the summit. The instant they came in sight the trumpets of our cavalry gave out the warning blast which told us that in another moment we should see the shock of battle beneath our very eyes. Lord Raglan, all his staff and escort, and groups of officers, the Zouaves, French generals and officers, and bodies of French infantry on the height, were spectators of the scene as though they were looking on the stage from the boxes of a theatre. Nearly every one dismounted and sat down, and not a word was said. The Russians advanced down the hill at a slow canter, which they changed to a trot, and at last nearly halted. Their first line was at least double the length of ours—it was three times as deep. Behind them was a similar line equally strong and compact. They evidently despised their insignificant looking enemy, but their time was come. The trumpets rang out again through the valley, and the Greys and Enniskilleners went right at the centre of the Russian cavalry. The space between them was only a few hundred yards; it was scarce enough to let the horses "gather away," nor had the men quite sufficient for the full play of their sword arms. The Russian line brings forward each wing as our cavalry advances, and threatens to annihilate them as they pass on. Turning a little to their left so as to meet the Russian right, the Greys rush on with a cheer that thrills through every heart—the wild shout of the Enniskilleners rises through the air at the same instant. As lightning flashes through a cloud, the Greys and Enniskilleners pierced through the dark masses of Russians. The shock was but for a moment. There was a clash of steel and a light play of sword blades in the air, and then the Greys and the red coats disappear in the midst of the shaken and quivering columns. In another moment we see them emerging and rushing on with diminished numbers, and in broken order, against the second line, which is advancing against them as fast as it can to retrieve the fortune of the charge. It was a terrible moment. "God help them! they are lost!" was the exclamation of more than one man, and the thoughts of many. With unabated fire the noble hearts dashed at their enemy. It was a fight of heroes. The first line of Russians, which had been smashed utterly by our charge, and had fled off at one flank and towards the centre, were coming back to swallow up our handful of men. By sheer steel and sheer courage Enniskillener and Scot were winning their desperate way right through the enemy's squadrons, and already grey horses and red coats had appeared right at the rear of the second mass, when, with irresistible force, like a bolt from a bow, the 1st Royals, the 4th Dragoon Guards, and the 5th Dragoon Guards, rushed at the remnants of the first line of the enemy, went through it as though it were made of pasteboard, and, dashing at the second body of Russians, as they were still disordered by the terrible assault of the Greys and their companions, put them to utter rout. The Russians horse in less then five minutes after it met our dragoons was flying with all its speed before a force certainly not half its strength. A cheer burst from every lip—in the enthusiam officers and men took off their caps and shouted with delight, and thus keeping up the scenic character of their position, they clapped their hands again and again. Lord Raglan at once despatched Lieutenant Curzon, aid-de-camp, to convey his congratulations to Brigadier-general Scarlett, and to say "well done." The gallant old officer's face beamed with pleasure when he received the message. "I beg to thank his lordship very sincerely," was his reply. The cavalry did not long pursue their enemy. Their loss was very slight, about 35 killed and wounded in both affairs (the second will be detailed subsequently.) Major Clarke was slightly wounded, and had a narrow escape from a sabre cut on the back of his head. Lieut-colonel Griffiths retired after the first charge, having been wounded on the back of his head. Cornet Prendergrast was wounded in the foot. There were not more than four or five men killed outright, and our most material loss was from the cannon playing on our heavy dragoons afterwards, when covering the retreat of our light cavalry. In the Royal Horse Artillery we had a severe, but I am happy to say a temporary loss. Capt. Maude, who directed the service of his guns with his usual devotedness and dauntless courage, was struck in the arm by a shell which burst at his saddle bow and killed his horse. To the joy of all the army it is ascertained he is doing well on board ship. After the charge, Capt. the Hon. Arthur Hardinge came galloping up to Lord Raglan with the news of what the cavalry had done. He had been sent with orders to Lord Lucan, and at the moment of the charge he had joined the Greys and dashed with them into the Russian columns. He was an object of envy to all his friends on the staff while he described in animated language the glorious events of those brilliant five minutes.

At ten o'clock the Guards and Highlanders of the first division were seen moving towards the plains from their camp. The Duke of Cambridge came up to Lord Raglan for orders, and his lordship, ready to give the honor of the day to Sir Colin Campbell, who commanded at Balaklava, told his royal highness to place himself under the direction of the brigadier. At 10.40 the fourth division also took up their position in advance of Balaklava. The cavalry were then on the left front of our position, facing the enemy; the light cavalry brigade was on the left flank forward; the heavy cavalry 'en echelon' in reserve with guns on their right; the 4th Dragoons and 5th Dragoons and Greys on the left of the Brigade, the Enniskilleners and 3rd Dragoons on the right. The fourth division took up ground in the centre; the Guards and Highlanders filed on towards the extreme right, and faced the redoubts, from which the Russians opened on them with such guns as had not been spiked. At 10.50 Gen. Canrobert, attended by his staff, and Brigadier-General Rose, rode up to Lord Raglan, and the staffs of the two generals and their escort mingled together in praise of the magnificent charge of our cavalry, while the chiefs apart conversed over the operations of the day, which promised to be one of battle. The Russian cavalry, followed by our shot, had retired in confusion, leaving the ground covered with horses and men. In carrying an order early in the day, Mr. Blunt, Lord Lucan's interpreter, and a son of our consul in Thessaly, had a narrow escape. His horse was killed; he siezed a Russian charger, as it galloped past riderless, but the horse carried him almost into the Russian cavalry, and he only saved himself by leaping into a redoubt among a number of frightened Turks, who were praying to Allah on their bellies. I should mention here that the Turks who had been collected on the flanks of the 93rd, fled at the approach of the Russians, without firing a shot! At 10.55, a body of cavalry, the Chasseurs d'Afrique, passed down to the plain, and were loudly cheered by our men. They took up ground in advance of the ridges on our left.

And now occurred the melancholy catastophe which fills us all with sorrow. It appears that the Quartermaster General, Brigadier Airey, thinking that the light cavalry had not gone far enough in front, when the enemy's horse had fled, gave an order in writing to Captain Nolan, 15th Hussars, to take to Lord Lucan, directing his lordship "to advance" his cavalry nearer to the enemy. A braver soldier than Captain Nolan the army did not possess. He was known to all the arm of the service, for his entire devotion to his profession, and his name must be familiar to all who take interest in our cavalry, for his excellent work, published a year ago, on our drill, and system of remount and breaking horses. I had the pleasure of his acquaintance, and I know he entertained the most exalted opinions respecting the capabilities of the English horse soldier. Properly led, the British Hussar and Dragoon could in his mind break square, take batteries, ride over columns of infantry, and pierce any other cavalry in the world as if they were made of straw. He thought they had not had the opportunity of doing all that was in their power, and that they had missed even such chances as they had offered them—that, in fact, they were in some measure disgraced. A matchless horseman, and a first-rate swordsman, he held in contempt, I am afraid even grape and canister. He is now dead and gone. God forbid I should cast a shade on the brightness of his honor, but I am bound to state what I am told occurred when he reached his lordship. I should premise that as the Russian cavalry retired, their infantry fell back towards the head of the valley, leaving men in three of the redoubts which they had taken, and abandoning the fourth. They had also placed some guns on the heights over their position, on the left of the gorge. Their cavalry joined the reserves, and drew up in six solid divisions, in an oblique line, across the entrance to the gorge. Six battalions of infantry were placed behind them and about thirty guns were drawn up along their line, while masses of infantry were also collected on the hills behind the redoubts on our right. Our cavalry had moved up to the ridge across the valey on our left, as the ground was broken in front and had halted in the order I have already mentioned. When Lord Lucan received the order from Capt. Nolan and had read it, he asked, we are told, "Where are we to advance to?" Captain Nolan pointed with his finger to the line of the Russians, and said, "There are the enemy, and there are the guns, sir, before them; it is your duty to take them," or words to that effect, according to the statements made since his death. Lord Lucan, with reluctance, gave the order to Lord Cardigan to advance upon the guns, conceiving that his orders compelled him to do so. The noble earl, though he did not shrink, also saw the fearful odds against him. Don Quixote in his tilt against the windmill was not so rash and reckless as the gallant fellows who prepared without a thought to rush on almost certain death. It is a maxim of war, "that cavalry never act without a support," that "infantry should be close at hand when cavalry carry guns, as the effect is only instantaneous," and that it is necessary to have on the flank of a line of cavalry some squadrons in column, the attack on the flank being most dangerons. The only support our light cavalry had was the reserve of heavy cavalry at a great distance behind them, the infantry and guns being far in the rear. There were no squadrons in column at all, and there was a plain to charge over, before the enemy's guns were reached, of a mile-and-a-half in length. At 11.10 our light cavalry brigade rushed to the front. They numbered as follows, as well as I can ascertain:—

	Men.
4th Light Dragoons	118
8th Irish Hussars	104
11th Prince Albert's Hussars	110
13th Light Dragoons	130
17th Lancers	145
Total	607 sabres.

The whole brigade scarcely made one effective regiment, according to the numbers of continent armies; and yet it was more than we could spare. As they passed towards the front, the Russians opened on them from the guns in the redoubt on the right, with volleys of musketry and rifles. They swept proudly past, glittering in the morning sun, in all the pride and splendour of war. We could scarcely believe the evidence of our senses! Surely that handful of men are not going to charge an army in position? Alas! it was but too true—their desparate valour knew no bounds, and far indeed was it removed from its so-called better part—discretion. They advanced in two lines, quickening their pace as they closed towards the enemy. A more fearful spectacle was never witnessed than by those who, without the power to aid, beheld their heroic countrymen rushing to the arms of death. At the distance of 1,200 yards the whole line of the enemy belched forth from thirty iron mouths, a flood of smoke and flame, through which hissed the deadly balls. Their flight was marked by instant gaps in our ranks, by dead men and horses, by steeds flying wounded and riderless across the plain. The first line is broken, it is joined by the second, they never halt or check their speed an instant, with diminished ranks, thinned by those 30 guns which the Russians had laid with the most deadly accuracy, with a halo of flashing steel above their heads, and with a cheer which was many a noble fellow's death-cry, they flew into the smoke of the batteries, but ere they were lost from view the plain was strewed with their bodies and with the carcasses of horses. They were exposed to an oblique fire from the batteries on the hills on both sides as well as a direct fire of musketry, Through the clouds of smoke we could see their sabres flashing as they rode up to the guns and dashed between them, cutting down the gunners as they stood. We saw them riding through the guns, as I have said: to our delight we saw them returning, after breaking through a column of Russian infantry and scattering them like chaff, when the flank fire of the battery on the hill swept them down, scattered and broken as they were. Wounded men and dismounted troopers flying towards us told the sad tale—demigods could not have done what we had failed to do. At the very moment when they were about to retreat, an enormous mass of Lancers was hurled on their flank. Colonel Shewell, of the 8th Hussars, saw the danger, and rode his few men straight at them, cutting his way through with fearful loss. The other regiments turned and engaged in a desperate encounter. With courage too great almost for credence, they were breaking their way through the columns which enveloped them, when there took place an act of atrocity without parallel in the modern warfare of civilized nations, The Russian gunners when the storm of cavalry passed returned to their guns. They saw their own cavalry mingled with the troopers who had just ridden over them, and to the eternal disgrace of the Russian name, the miscreants poured a murderous volley of grape and cannister on the mass of struggling men and horses, mingling friend and foe in one common ruin. It was as much as our heavy cavalry brigade could do to cover the retreat of the miserable remnant of that band of heroes as they returned to the place they had so lately quitted in all the pride of life. At 11.35 not a British soldier, except the dead and the dying, were left in front of those bloody Muscovite guns. Captain Nolan was killed by the first shot fired, as he rode in advance of the Hussars, cheering them on. Lord Lucan was slightly wounded. Lord Cardigan received a lance thrust through his clothes. Mr. Wombwell, of the 17th had a narrow escape. He was dragged off his horse by the cap, and taken prisoner by some Cossacks. A Russian officer addressed him, and told him not to be afraid, for that he would be well taken care of, though ces gens la were rather rough in their manners. However they were saved the trouble of guarding him, for in the last charge he made his escape, and got back to his lines.

While our affair was going on, the French cavalry made a most brilliant charge at the battery on our left, which was firing on our men, and cut down the gunners: but they could not get off the guns without support, and had to retreat with the loss of two captains and 50 men killed and wounded, out of their little force of 200 Chasseurs. The heavy cavalry, in columns of squadrons, moved slowly backwards, covering the retreat of the broken men. The ground was left covered with our men and with hundreds of Russians, and we could see the Cossacks busy searching the dead. Our infantry made a forward movement towards the redoubts after the cavalry came in, and the Russian infantry in advance slowly retired towards the gorge; at the same time the French cavalry pushed forward on their right, and held them in check, pushing out a line of skirmishers, and forcing them to withdraw their guns. The Russians from the redoubts still harassed us very much by shell and shot, and our infantry (first division) were ordered to lie down in two lines to escape their effect. The forth division, covered by the rising ground and two regiments of French infantry, which had arrived in the valley followed by a strong artillery, moved onward to operate on the Russian right, already threatened by the French cavalry. The Russians threw out skirmishers to meet the French skirmishers, and, as it would be madness to attack them as our light horse had done, the French contented themselves with keeping their position. At 11 a. m. the Russians, feeling alarmed at our steady advance, and at the symptoms of our intention to turn or cut off their right, retired from No. 1. redoubt, which was taken possession of by the allies. At 11.15 they abandoned redoubt No. 2, blowing up the magazine; and, as we still continued to advance, they blew up and abandoned No. 3, at 11.45, but, to our great regret, we were not in time nor in force to prevent their taking off seven out of nine guns in these earthworks. At 11.48 the Russian line of infantry all began to retire slowly, and a strong portion of it crept up the hills behind the 1st redoubt, which still belongs to them, in hope that we would attack them in that position; but it was not our desire to risk a battle, and we had already found out that our position was too large to be readily defended. We made up our minds therefore to let the Russians have the redoubts Nos. 1, 2, and 3, and even 4 if they liked, and to content ourselves with keeping Balaklava and the communication with it open by the westerly and southerly heights behind our camp. The artillery on the right of the first division fired shot and rockets at the 1st redoubt, but could not do much good, nor could the heavy guns of the batteries near the town carry so far as to annoy the Russians. At twelve o'clock the greater portion of the French and English moved on more rapidly, and an accession to the strength of our artillery was made by the two French batteries, who pushed on towards the front of our left in support of their cavalry. The first division remained still in line along the route to Balaklava. From 12 to 12.15 not a shot was fired on either side, but the Russians gathered up their forces towards the heights over the gorge, and, still keeping their cavalry on the plain, manœuvred in front on our right. General Canrobert, who had gone off a short time previously to inspect the position of his troops from a telegraph station near us, returned, and had an animated conversation with Lord Raglan. At this moment the bugles of the French below sounded, and General Canrobert, shouted to the Zouaves in the trench, asked what this sonnerie signified: "C'est garde a nous, mon General!" was the reply. We all looked for a renewal of the action. At 12.28 the whole of the allies again got into motion towards the enemy, with the exception of the first division, which moved en echelon towards the opposite hills, keeping their right wing well before Balaklava. At 12.40 Captain Calthrope was sent by Lord Raglan with orders to the troops, which seemed to have the effect of altering the disposition of our front, for the French at 1 p. m. showed still further up on our left. When we got to the ridges they took possession of redoubts Nos 1, 2, and 3. But the Russians evidently intended to keep No. 4, and to draw us after them if possible into the gorge, where they had retired their guns. As our object was solely to keep Balaklava, this was not our game; and as the Russians would not advance, but kept their cavalry in front of the approach to the mountain passes, it became evident there would be no further engagement to-day.—The cannonade, which began again at 12.15 and was continued with little effect, ceased altogether at 1.15, and the two armies retained their respective positions. Our men and horses were alike tired and hungry, and the French were no better. Lord Raglan continued on the hill-side all day, watching the enemy. About 4 o'clock Sir Colin Campbell, Sir G. Cathcart and Lord Cardigan had interviews with Lord Raglan, who evidently listened to their recitals with great interest. General Bosquet joined General Canrobert, and there was a long conversation between the French and English generals, after which all moved down to the valley together, and examined the enemy's position. It was dark ere Lord Raglan returned to his quarters. With the last gleam of day we could see the sheen of the enemy's lances in their old position in the valley, and their infantry gradually crowned the heights on their left, and occupied the road to the village which is beyond Balaklava to the southward. Our Guards were moving back as I passed them, and the tired troops, French and English, were being replaced by a strong French division, which was marched down to the valley at five o'clock. All our operations in the trenches were lost sight of in the interest of this melancholy day, in which our light brigade was annihilated by their own rashness, and by the brutality of a ferocious enemy.

FOUR P. M.—In our cavalry fight to-day we had 13 officers killed or missing, 156 men killed or missing: total 169; 21 officers wounded, 197 men wounded, and missing, 387. Horses killed or missing, 394; horses wounded, 126: total 520. Nearly 200 men were not present with the cavalry, as they were sick or had not turned out, being engaged in the camp.

SHIPS v. FORTS.—It is now established beyond doubt that the greatest defence of the sea forts of Sebastopol is the shallow water, which does not allow a close enough approach to make ships' broadsides really formidable to them. The fact is very simple—a ship's broadside can produce a more formidable concentrated fire than any fort in the world; but ships' sides cannot resist fire so long. The closer, therefore, a ship comes to the battery, the greater becomes its advantage; whereas its own danger decreases, from the forts not being able to depress their guns enough to hit the hull. An excellent proof of this latter fact—namely, that the danger of a vessel decreases by nearer approach, was furnished by the Agamemnon and the Sanspareil on the 17th ult. Although not more than 200 yards from each other, the Agamemnon, which was closer in, suffered much less, vessel as well as crew; and then most of the shots fired into the Agamemnon damaged the rigging, while the Sanspareil suffered chiefly in her hull.

(From an Officer of Distinction.)

"CAMP, NEAR BALAKLAVA, Oct. 27.—You will be glad to hear I am alive after our tremendous affair of the 25th.

"We were ordered to charge some Russian batteries and cavalry, and the light brigade went down, the 17th and 13th leading in line; the 11th were ordered to hang a little back as a support, and the 4th and 8th followed, in a sort of third line.

"We all knew that the thing was desperate before we started, and it was even worse than we thought.

"In our front about a mile and a half off, were several lines of Russian cavalry and nine guns; to get at which we had to pass along a wide valley, with the ground a little falling, and in itself favourable enough for a charge of cavalry; but the sloping hills on each side gave the enemy an opportunity (which they used) of placing guns on both our flanks as we advanced; and not only, guns, but infantry, with Minie rifles.

"However, there was no hesitation; down our fellows went at the gallop, through a fire in front and on both flanks, which emptied our saddles and knocked over horses by scores. I do not think that one man flinched in the whole brigade, though every one allows that so hot a fire was scarcely ever seen. We went right on, cut down the gunners at their guns (the Russians worked the guns till we were within ten yards of them;) went on still broke a line of cavalry in rear of the guns, and drove it back on the third line. But here our bolt was shot; and the Russians formed four deep, and our thin and broken ranks and blown horses could not attempt to break through them, particularly as the Russian cavalry had got round our flanks, and were prepared to charge our rear (with fresh men.) We broke back through them, however, and then had to run the gauntlet through the cross-fire of artillery and Minie rifles back to our lines, with their cavalry hanging on our flank. The heavy brigade which had made a good charge of its own in the morning, covered our coming out of action and lost some men from the artillery.

"There is no concealing the thing—the light brigade was greatly damaged, and for nothing; for, though we killed the gunners and the horses of nine 12-pounders, we could not bring them away.

"Nolan (who brought the order) is dead. The first shell that burst hit him in the breast. He gave a loud cry, his horse turned, trotted back (with him in the saddle) between the first and second squadrons of the 13th, and carried him so for some way, when he fell dead. He was hit in the heart.

"In the two leading regiments, including Lord Cardigan (who led in person) and his staff, we had 19 officers. Only three came out of the action untouched both men and horse; all the others were killed, wounded, or prisoners, or had their horses hurt. The 17th had no field officers, but five captains. They came out of action commanded by the junior captain, I believe. Morrison is severely wounded; Winter is supposed to be killed; Webb is shot through the thigh; White through the leg; Thompson is supposed to be killed, &c. One of Lord Cardigan's aides-de-camp is wounded—Maxse; the other, Lockwood, is missing, and supposed to be killed. We have lost about 335 horses (exclusive of officers' horses,) out of little more than 600 which we (the light brigade) had in the field. Besides that, a great number are wounded with gunshot wounds, and about twenty-five have already been destroyed and more will. * * It was a bitter moment after we broke through the line of cavalry in rear of their guns when I looked round and saw there was no support beyong our own brigade, which, leading in the smoke, had diverged and scarcely filled the ground. We went on, however, and hoped that their own men flying would break the enemy's line and drive them into the river. When I saw them form four deep instead, I knew it was 'all up,' and called out to the men to rally. At this moment a solitary squadron of the 8th came up in good order. This saved the remnant of us; for we rallied to them, and they, wheeling about, charged a line which the Russians had formed in our rear. You never saw men behave so well as our men did. As we could not hold our ground, all our dead and badly wounded were left behind, and we know not who are dead or who are prisoners, All this makes me miserable, even to write; but it is the naked truth. Our loss in men is not so great as that in horses; for men whose horses were shot in the advance got back on foot. I hear from a man who dined with Lord Raglan to-day that they do us justice at head-quarters, and say that our attack was an unheard-of feat of arms, and that Lord Raglan says that the moral effect has been wonderful. The Russian prisoners, since taken at Sebastopol, say that the Russians were petrified at the audacity of the attack, and the energy that could, after such a fire, break through their lines. These prisoners were taken in a very successful affair by Sir De Lacy Evans, who is a first rate division leader."

Lord Dunkelin, who is exceedingly near-sighted, started during the night of Saturday (19th) with a party of the Guards for one of the batteries, missed his road, and walked into the hands of the Russian out-lying picket. He must have been well in advance; for his men, when they discovered their error, rushed at once from the danger and escaped. Being unarmed and few in number, all assistance to their officer was out of the question; moreover, it was quite dark. As Prince Menschikoff is one of the old Russian party, he will, I doubt not, direct the greatest attention to be paid to his noble prisoner. And there is a further reason why Lord Dunkillin should be well cared for—his father was once Ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburgh, and necessarily personally acquainted with the Prince.—Morning Post.

LEAD.—Such is the scarcity of this article in Russia, that its price, formerly one ruble and a half per pound, has now risen to six silver rubles. It is the same with sulphur, that has become quite scarce, on account of the blockade, and as the material is peculiarly a contraband of war, it can no longer be conveyed into the empire from neutral countries.

THE PRESENTATION OF COLOURS to the 1st Somersetshire Militia took place at Plymouth Hoe, on Tuesday, by Lady Paulett, mother of the Colonel, Viscount Hinton. The Bishop of Exeter being prevented attending through illness, Mr. Langmaid performed the consecration service. Lady Paulett addressed the Regiment in the following words: "It has fallen to my lot this day to present new colours to your regiment; and prond I am of the office which devolves upon me. The tie which connects a regiment, constituted as yours is, with its native country, must necessarily be of the strongest; more especially must I feel a deep interest in your welfare, commanded as you are, by my own son. You are all Somerset men; you have lived more or less in intimacy with each other from childhood; born on the same soil with your officers; they, your natural protectors, are enrolled under the same banner. Soldiers of the 1st Somerset, it is impossible to say what the tide of events may bring about, and should those colors ever be unfurled in the battle-field, the men of Sumerset, the men of the villages and hamlets which surround my native home, will, I doubt not, serve our most gracious Queen and country as faithfully and as bravely as the heroes who have distinguished themselves so nobly on the heights of Alma. (Cheers.) But I trust the blessings of peace may be restored, and that you, having done your duties as soldiers at the call of your country, will return to your English homes and firesides. Officers and soldiers of the 1st Somerset, accept at my hands these colours presented to you by the ladies of the county of Somerset; and when you carry them in front of battle, the best prayers of your country woman and neighbours follow your steps." Colonel Lord Hinton, when the cheering had subsided, rode to the front of the platform, and replied to Her Ladyship's speech in becoming terms.

From the Times

The Greeks in England.

It has been represented to us that many of the Greek merchants resident in London, who probably owe their lives and certainly their fortunes to the protection they have enjoyed under the British flag, have so far forgotten themselves and their true position as to give vent to their satisfaction at the result of the late foray of the Russians in a most indecent manner. We have no desire that these gentlemen should be exposed to any injury in consequence of their political opinions; they are as free to cast in their lot with the Czar Nicholas as with Queen Victoria; but, if such be their resolution, let them at once betake themselves to the territories of their friends, and evacuate the capital of their enemies. They would do well to draw a comparison between their present position and what it would have been had they been enrolled in the merchant guilds of Muscovy. They have, no doubt, as perfect a right as we have ourselves to political sympathies and opinions. One thing, however, let them remember. England will tolerate no avowed enemy in her capital at the moment she is spending her life's blood in contest with her inveterate foe. The sea is open to them, if they would be gone from our shores. They may depart without let or hindrance from us; but, if they remain, they must remain as sojourners in the land, and occupy themselves with their own private matters not with public affairs of the British nation, save in a friendly spirit. They would do well to reflect with themselves upon what the conduct of the Russian Autocrat would have been had he caught them at Moscow or Nishni Novgorod expressing publicly their satisfaction at the result of the battle fought on the Alma's banks. Now, if we English do not resemble the Russian Czar in any other particular, at least we equal, perhaps surpass him in our jealousy for our country's honour. We will not bear to hear a scream of triumph in our own capital city raised over the fate of our bravest sons by a hybrid rabble who are indebted to us for the wealth and security they enjoy. Setting all ideas of decency and propriety out of the question, at least for their own sakes, it would have been as well had the Greeks waited to ascertain the real foundation upon which their expressions of satisfaction reposed. We feel a very sure confidence that ere many days have elapsed the sympathizers with the Czar—the men who rejoice that some two or three hundred Englishmen have been slaughtered in the Crimea,—will find that their joy was not a little premature. This, however, is not the point. Whether one Englishman or 10,000 Englishmen have been killed, it matters not; the Greeks here in London cannot be permitted to triumph in the destruction of a single British soldier, though he be but one. If any Quaker gentleman—Mr. John Bright, for example—thinks the moment a well-chosen one for blaming the policy of his countrymen and writing up the Muscovite, at least he is an Englishman; but let no foreign merchant attempt to follow suit. With Englishmen the country can settle its quarrels another way, but to the foreigners who enjoy the protection of our laws—who of their own choice, have settled in our country, there can be but one of two courses open, if they disapprove the policy of action of the British nation,—let them keep silence, or begone.

From the Philadelphia Correspondent of the Globe.

Republican Sympathies.

"You may perceive that the sympathies of the press in this Republic are decidedly manifested on behalf of the Czar; various causes combine to produce such an extraordinary result. There is in the first place the chronic hatred of England which is characteristic of the Yankee, and which seems on the increase from year to year. The feeling has to some extent been inflamed by the efforts of the Mitchell and Meagher clique, who speak and write so as to carry the Irish Romanists along with them. This cause would be insignificant were it not that political and party reasons conspire to render it needful that England must be represented as the patron of tyrants and oppressors. It is well known that the chief cause of alarm relative to Cuba arises from the dread that any violation of the law of nations in seizing this island is sure to be resented by both England and France. It was hoped and it was most earnestly desired by large masses of the people here who long to carry American institutions into Cuba, that England may have her resources so entirely occupied in the East, that she shall have neither time nor means to notice so trifling an event as the seizure of Cuba. Hence nothing would please this party more than to hear of a ruinous disaster overtaking the allies; and the more serious the reverses which the Western Powers have to bear, the more confident are these lovers of freedom that they would have a free course to obtain their desires.

So also in relation to the Isthmus; there is no doubt whatever but that the policy of the leaders in the Union, is to drive things to such a state that the road over the Isthmus shall be in the hands of Americans, and totally under their control. They therefore dread any vigorous attempt on the part of Great Britain to demand redress for the depredation at Greytown; and they are continually insisting that Great Britain is so tied by the Bulwer and Clayton treaty, that from every part of Central America even from Balize, she is bound to retire.

Then again, the Sandwich Islands, which are required for a half-way station on the passage from San Francisco to China and Japan, becomes another subject of dread and consequent antipathy to Britain.

The feeling is so wide-spread, so decided, and meets one so offensively everywhere, that people who did not understand the existing causes, would think, from the tone of conversation, the joy expressed in the cheap papers, by parties in the streets, and excited enquirers as they devour the bulletins from the telegraph, that Nicholas was the President of a great Republic, and an aggrieved friend of civil and religious liberty."

The recent Meeting of American Ambassadors in Europe.

It is now said that the report from Mr. Soule was, that Spain would not sell Cuba at any price. And that, upon consultation as to the state of republican feeling in Europe, all the Ambassadors agreed that it was decidedly below par. Even in Italy, the people are said to be tired of Mazzinism.

This report is somewhat corroborated by a recent letter from Paris, in the N.Y. Times, generally credited to Ik. Marvel, author of the Reveries of a Bachelor. He says, that the public sentiment of Europe seems to be turning against America. It is generally asserted, and believed, that the Americans are a rapacious and unprincipled people.—The fillibuster forays upon Cuba and Mexico, the bombardment of San Juan, &c., are upon every one's lips when America is mentioned. And when it is urged that European governments also are by no means scrupulous, the ready answer comes, but are you no better than they?—Sat. Eve. Post.

Kidnapping of Free Negroes in Kentucky —a Free Girl taken from Ohio and Sold into Slavery—Desperation of the Gang —Negro Traders Implicated.

The last few days unfolded to the public such thrilling facts as to create a spirit of indomitable determination to purge this community of a class of desperadoes now infesting this section—as to inspire such enthusiastic excitement, seldom, if ever, witnessed in any city. Kidnapping free negroes in Ohio, and deluding our slaves from their masters, to recapture and sell them, is an established profession of a gang located upon the borders of the Ohio, combining with negro traders in the interior of this State, thereby boldly conducting a villianous system of piracy, heretofore unknown in the annals of crime in Kentucky.

On Friday morning this community was apprised of the fact, through the agency of colored persons, that a free negro girl was forcibly taken from Ohio and brought to Kentucky. Suspicion or the statements of the negroes (which is not evidence in Kentucky) proved that Lewis, Allen and Henry Young, of this county, were the individuals in whose possession she was found.

Arrests were made, our best and prominent citizens turning out to capture the rogues. Lewis and Allen Young were forcibly taken by the people, from prison, and delivered to the authorities of Ohio, where they will be disposed of as the aggravating merits of this case deserve. Henry Young is detained for trial at this side. Thus this suffering community is to be rid of three brothers, whose bold career of crime was a terror to the peace and safety of the public.

Lewis and Henry Young openly boast of their determination to burn the city. They confess it to be their source of livelihood to steal a free negro or decoy our slaves, and sell them to negro traders. Let me here apprise the slave owners of Kentucky, that negro traders are more to be feared, and require a closer watch than the incendiary abolitionists secretly insinuating themselves among us.

It is justly estimated that two-thirds of the slaves that escape from their masters are transported, through the agency of slave dealers, to the South. Let the loser of slave property examine the negro pens of the State, and throughout the South, before offering rewards or looking towards Canada. Now, I here fearlessly charge, that any man or set of men, who deal in slaves as a business or profession, will not hesitate from conscientious scruples to receive stolen property, or assist in deluding a contented slave from home for the sake of gain.

Let the citizens of this State frown down these offensive characters, destroy their inhuman pens, and the condition of our slaves will be much improved.

I have strayed, Mr. Editor, from my subject. The City Council met on Monday morning, and ordered a meeting of the people to protect their rights and property, for within five days the city has been fired in various portions, and the alarm bell ropes cut; in the meantime, seven or eight of our slaves were missing. This is intolerable. The meeting above was presided over by Mayor Dobyns. Resolutions were passed, vigilance committees were appointed, exciting scenes transpired, which would not be in place to name here, and an iron will of determined reform seems to inspire one and all, under the brief and enthusiastic administration of Mayor Dobyns, who is untiring in enforcing the law maintaining our rights; and wherever his judicial talents and legal experience is wanting, he declares the city in the hands of the people. The law is somewhere in the books, and the people must rule and protect themselves, to the best of their knowledge and belief, on the first principles of nature's self-defence. May his reign of terror never end!

Startling disclosures were made to-day, regarding the late terrible powder explosion, with other acts of violence, known in the calendar of unhappy events in Marysville.

Your readers will be duly apprised of new discoveries and coming important news. Permit me to subscribe myself under the synonym, long familiar to the readers of the Kentucky Yeoman. LEGATION.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NEW REPUBLIC.—An expedition of Americans, from New Orleans, Texas and other parts of the Union, is said to be on the point of starting to establish a republic in the territory purchased in the Mosquito country, embracing some twenty-five millions of acres. Colonel Kenney, of Texas, is to lead the expedition, and to be President of the New Republic.

IRISH JOURNALS.—There are in Ireland 90 newspapers, with extent of circulation varying from 100 to 5,000 copies, averaging to each about 900 subscribers, and, consequently, giving 81,000 as the total of subscribers to journals in Ireland. In Dublin are published 26, in Limerick 4, in Cork 4, and in Belfast 8 journals.—Liverpool Journal.

Temperance.

Prohibitory Song.

From every fertile prairie,
From forest spreading wide,
From town and crowded city,
From every river side.
Hark! how the shout is rising!
One universal strain—
Hurrah for Prohibition!
Give us the Law of Maine.

Too long the licensed dealer
His liquid fire has sold;
Too long have we been burdened
That system to uphold!
No longer shall we bear it;
Blot out the damning stain
From Indiana's statutes,
Give us the Law of Maine:

No legalized rum-selling,
Our country's curse and shame;
Down, down, with every groggery,
Quench every still-house flame.
A different legislation
We must and will obtain,
Hurrah for Prohibition!
Give us the Law of Maine.

"How long, O Lord!" the orphan
And mourning widow cry;
"How long?" the worse than widow
With upraised tearful eye.
The would-be sober drunkard,
Who would but can't refrain,
Sighs, "Oh! for the Prohibition,
Give me the Law of Maine!"

Then up, ye Temperance heroes,
The scabbard throw away,
Nor lay aside your armor
Till victory crown the day;
Till over Indiana,
(By law enacted) reign
Search, seizure and destruction,
As in the State of Maine.

Prohibitory Liquor Law League.

We have received three Essays from the Secretary of the League on the subject of legal suasion against intemperance; they are creditable productions and should be widely circulated. One of these is a Prize Essay for which the Sons gave £25, and the others were written for the same subject. They were procured from the authors by the Executive Committee of the League and published for distribution at $5 per thousand. No friend of the cause could lay out $5 to a better purpose than by ordering a thousand of these Tracts and seeing that every house in his township, town or village, is supplied with one. Temperance men need not imagine that the work is done—that because the principle of a prohibitory law has been adopted by a large majority in the Lower House, it is likely to find a place on the statute book without further agitation and a fierce struggle. The Hincks, McNabs and Cayleys, who now control an obedient majority, openly laugh at the idea of a Maine Law being passed in this country, and treat their vote for the second reading as a capital joke! At the same time that these tricksters are voting for a prohibitory law to humbug their constituents, they introduce a bill setting apart and pledging the License Fund for the payment of the Tenure claims for the next quarter of a century at least, and also reduce the duties on Wines to such an extent as to encourage their importation ad libitum! These things look like prohibition over the left.—North American.

THE WHISKEY TRADE.—One of the last Dublin trade reports announces that the "recent decree of the French Government, prohibiting the distillation of spirits from grain, is likely to prove a measure of no small importance to the interests of Ireland—primarily to the distillers, and indirectly to the farming interest. Already a large quantity of Dublin-made whiskey had been contracted for: one house alone, Messrs. Henry Roe & Sons, it is said, has shipping orders to the extent of between 300 and 400 puncheons, and there seems every probability that the trade will be a permanent one. At a recent meeting of the Dublin distillers the price of new whiskey was fixed at 3s. 6d. per gallon 25 O. P., at which figure it is anticipated that the trade will buy freely, inasmuch as the quantity bonded in the past season has been small. Patent still whiskey gradually creeps up."

HOW THE MAINE LAW WILL WORK.—I can stop a hundred groggeries under the Maine Law, while any man can stop one under this partial licensing law. [Cheers.] We should know exactly where to look for them. Now we do not know. We cannot tell where the licensed and unlicensed shops are. We cannot find them. I like the good rule with regard to the grog-shop given by an Irishman to his son, when going to a fair; handing him the shillelah, he said: "Here, Teddy, my boy, whenever you see a head, hit it?" [Loud laughter and applause.] When we have a law upon that plain platform, it will be all right. And so when I see bottles in the window, and the sign of "Porter, Gin, Brandy, or Ale," then I shall know that there is the place to get to work, and then I tell you we will go to work, and effectually too. [Applause.]—Horace Greeley's Speech at the Tabernacle.

WHAT RUM MAKING COSTS.—From the last census, the Tribune gleans the following important facts, relative to the quantities of grain malted or distilled, per annum, in the United States:

Bushels of Corn distilled	11,067,661
" " Rye "	3,143,927
" " Oats "	56,517
" " Apples "	526,840
" " Barley "	3,787,195
Tons of hops malted	1,204
Hogsheads of Molasses distilled	61,675

The aggregate value of these products, at average prices, will not vary much from $14,643,717. What a waste!

The capital employed in the entire country in liquor manufacture is $8,334,254; number of morkmen employed, 5,487. Ratio of distilled grains, compaired with the quantity grown. Of Corn, there is distilled one bushel in fifty-four; of Rye, one bushel in five; of Oats, one bushel in 2,610; of Barley, there is malted three bushel in five. From these products are manufacturad, 42,133,955 gallons of whiskey; 6,500,500 of rum; 1,777,-924 of ale.

The aggregate value of these liquors, at wholesale prices, will be about $19,946,897. Besides the above, there are made 221,221 gallons of wine, and an inconceivable amount of "bad liquors," that draw heavily for their constituents upon domestic and foreign drugs in their manufacture, which are not counted in their manufacture, though their effects are felt, sadly felt, in the use. A large portion of the "fighting rum" comes from workshops of the city manufactories, but which is not included in the above estimates. Awful as these figures look on paper, they fall below the real facts, and only show the domestic devil—the foreign one is still uglier.

"Old Winter has come again, alack!"

The Fall has been quite pleasant, and even November, until the last, seemed willing, by a goodly supply of calm and hazy days, to lull us into the belief that the king of the frosts would long defer his coming; but with December he came with a sudden awakening. On Saturday night, snow commenced falling, and continued, with little intermission, until Monday morning, when we had quite a storm. Snow has fallen some every day since, and, as a consequence, the City presents quite a wintry appearance. The jingle of bells is giving place to the rumbling noise of wheeled vehicles, and the bright eyes of the belles, peering out above the ample folds of fur, show that though the rigors of winter may surround us, the art of man stands ready at all times to lighten them.

The improvements and inventions to promote the comforts and conveniences of mankind, increase around us every day; and yet, the "poor never cease out of the land," The inventor and manufacturer must be paid; the furrier and clothier must receive a just recompense; but woe "woe's the day" to the very poor, when the first snow storm heralds the coming winter. To their hearts the merry bells convey no music; the costly furs and rustling silks, like the sad memories of their youthful hopes, pass by almost unheeded, because not to be attained. Thoughts akin to these which we have penned, will arise when viewing the blue and pinched looking children of poverty passing and repassing their more favoured brethren, who, rejoicing in the feeling of security, produced by a consciousness of their elevation above want, are too much in danger of thinking that each and every one is alike fortunate. THE FEMALE EMIGRANT'S GUIDE, AND HINTS ON CANADIAN HOUSEKEEPING; Part First. By Mrs. C. P. Traill.

This work, intended more immediately to cheer up the woman who has left her childhood's home to find a new one in a strange land, and to guide her to the most effective means of banishing her regrets forever, will also be found to contain much information of value to the man, who is, for the first time, called to contend with the "giants of the forest." The writer, having been for many years a resident of this Province, has had ample opportunity of seeing Canadian life in all its phases, and being possessed of large practicality, united to a love of home and social life, as evinced by the work, is peculiarly adapted to the task of prepairing such a book as the Guide. Now that the advantages of Canada are being discussed so much more freely in the Old Country than formerly, and also among the colored people in the United States, the sale will, no doubt, be rapid.

For sale by Maclear & Co., Toronto, and the principal Booksellers in Canada and the States. Price 1s. 3d. S.

THE LITTLE PILGRIM:

This little monthly, edited by Grace Greenwood and Leander H. Lippincott, came into existence last January, and has had a success almost unprecedented. Its articles, while adapted to the comprehension of every intelligent child, are always such as will repay a perusal by the parents. The subscription list now numbers thousands. Longfellow, Tupper, Whittier, Mary Howitt, Mrs. Sigourney, and Eliza L. Sproat, are among the contributors. The terms are 50 cents per year, or ten copies for four dollars.—Communications should be addressed to Leander K. Lippincott, Philadelphia.

From the Anti-Slavery Reporter.

Circassian Slave-Trade Abolished.

In the August Number of the Reporter we recorded a conversation in the House of Lords, on the 14th of the previous month, on the subject of the revival of the slave-trade between the ports of Circassia and Gorgia and Constantinople. In our Annual Report we also referred to the fact; and in our publication we have more than once alluded to the shameful connivance in this traffic of the Austrian Lloyd's line of packets. In August last, the subject was urged upon the attention of the Earl of Clarendon, by a deputation from the Committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, and the strongest representations appear to have been since made to the Sultan of Turkey, through the British Ambassador, the result of which has been communicated to the public through the correspondent of the Times in the Crimea, under date of the 3rd October. The total abolition of the Circassian and Gorgian slave-trade has been decreed by an imperial firman, under the severest penalties. In recording this fact with satisfaction, we cannot refrain from reminding our readers, that so far back as 1846 the Sultan had already abolished the slave-trade throughout his dominions, and closed the slave-mart at Constantinople. The new decree seems, therefore, to be, to some extent, an act of supererogation. It is clear that the traffic was prosecuted contrary to law, and that those found engaged in or conniving at it, were already liable to punishment. However, provided it be effectually suppressed, we have, perhaps, no right to criticise too severely the manner in which things are done in Turkey; but we should have felt more satisfied had the prohibition included the African slave-trade.

We append the extract relating to this interesting fact:

"While the work of war goes on prosperously, those who look forward to the future will be glad to learn that the more lasting strength to be derived from internal reforms does not pass unnoticed by the advisers of the Ottoman Porte. When the Russians abandoned their forts on the Circassian coast, there was a cry from their partisans that the slave-trade, which the Czar had laboured to suppress, would now be carried on with renewed vigour and deeper iniquity. This apprehension was also felt even by the supporters of the Turkish cause, who dreaded to see any success in this just war result in misery and demoralization to even an obscure and barbarous race. The Russians, from Anapa to Redout Kaleh, had always declared that the exportation of woman was prohibited by the Czar, and the open traffic was attended with difficulties, which at least lessened the numbers of the victims. All those sent from the country were conveyed away by false pretences or secret means, and few would have reached Trebizond but for the corruption of the Russian commanders, who received an addition to their wretched incomes as the reward of their connivance. The evacuation of the forts has not caused any great increase of the trade, since the demand is limited; but the traffic has become more easy, and would in a short time grow up to its old dimensions. The Austrians have directly aided in the iniquity by receiving the living freight on board their steamers; an instance of cupidity which has called forth remonstrances on the part of those eager for the suppression of the traffic. The attention of the British Ambassador has been especially directed to this subject, and, after many representations, he has succeeded in obtaining firmans, worded in the most stringent language, for the total abolition of the Circassian and Georgian slave-trade. Not only may the women be taken and set at liberty, so far as a Mossulman female can be free, but the dealer will be subject to the punishment of a grave offence. Whether the extinction of white or concubine slavery will follow this edict, it is difficult to say. Turkey is the country of high-sounding reforms never carried into practice, and Imperial orders executed only where a foreign representative is present to urge on their enforcement. But no doubt the Porte and its advisers are in earnest, and the trade will cease for the present, as far as Constantinople is concerned. To discuss the question of polygamy, and the results to the Turks themselves of the practice of buying odalisks in any number they may desire, is useless. No one can doubt but that the harem is one of the chief causes of the sloth and cowardice of the Turkish governing class. Putting aside other considerations, it is well known that the great household expenses, which keep even the most successful plunderer among the Pashas poor arise mainly from the crowd of woman and servants which are supposed to be due to his state. The more enlightened and Europeanized of the Turks have generally but one wife, and a stranger might be apt to think polygamy rather a thing of the past—a practice permitted indeed, but looked upon as disreputable by all but a few of the old school. But even one wife must have a host of slaves to support her dignity, and the great body of the rich Turks are not like the few eminent individuals to whom Englishmen are generally introduced. Among the minor class of officials, the indulgence and waste of a large establishment are almost universal. There are secretaries and clerks at the Porte with incomes of about £100 a year of our money. How one of these can live at all in a place so expensive as Constantinople is surprising; but he not only lives, but keeps up a state fit for an English Cabinet Minister. He has probably two wives, each with one or two white and three or four black attendants; each wife has a carriage of her own, in which she jolts over the stones of Pera, or sits eating creams at the Sweet Waters. The functionary himself has a couple of horses for his own use, a groom to walk by his side when he rides in leisurely state to or from the Porte, and a man behind to carry his long and well-cleaned pipes. The means by which this magnificence is supported are well known to the initiated. Each man in office, from the Pasha downwards, has transactions with some one who has a cause to gain or a favour to demand. The secretary represents to his superior that he is in debt, that the money-lender will wait no longer, and that he must give up his post unless the request of some individual be granted who has promised so many thousands piastres to the speaker for the successful use of his influence. The matter is arranged, and the happy official receives for one corrupt transaction a sum equal perhaps to five years salary. The discontinuance of a supply of white slaves may perhaps cause no small change in the domestic habits of the Turks; that it will tend to discourage polygamy cannot be doubted. In former times, when the whole Mediterranean coast was swept by the Turkish fleets and the Algerine corsairs, and the wives of the Sultans were not Gorgians or Circassians, but Spaniards, Neapolitans, and Venetians, many an inferior satrap possessed a household as large as that of the present Sultan. With the scarcity of the supply the manners of the people have somewhat mended, and there is reason to hope, that with the utter extinction of the trade, polygamy itself may perhaps fall.

In Liberia, it appears, there is a marked distinction of social mark between the natives and the emigrants, though both are colored. A letter from Liberia states. "The natives are humble, subdued, and servile creatures. They are employed in all families as domestic drudges, literally 'hewers of wood and drawers of water.' * * * Nearly all wear nothing but a filthy rag, the size of a common cotton handkerchief, about their loins, or occasionally a dirty, greasy shirt; and in this state they perform all duties about houses. In some families they are allowed per day a quart of rice, some palm oil, and otherwise well fed. In other families they are poorely fed from mere scraps of rice and cassada. In others again they are not only worked nearly naked, but half starved. And in nearly all families it is customary to keep a rawhide or cat-o'-nine-tails handy, to flog them when they please And this flogging, kicking, and cuffing is done to a shameful extent by upstart boys, scolding brainless women, and gentlemen of rank and standing, calling themselves Christians. Not only the poor, but the rich, do the greatest part of this castigation with impunity."

Yet the same letter asserts that these belabored natives are docile and improvable.—Life Illustrated.

More news of the Franklin Expedition.—By telegraph from Albany, it is stated that the Lake Superior Mining News of the 21st ult., says: "By private letters we learn that the bodies of Sir John Franklin and party, have been found by Dr. Kane's exploring expedition, frozen, perfectly preserved. From our authority, we have every reason to believe it to be true."

Provincial.

Quebec, Wednesday, Nov. 22, 1854.

The weather has put on a wintry appearance at last. Till now it has been quite as mild as it usually is in Upper Canada at the same season of the year. Nearly the whole of the fall fleet of vessels have taken their departure from the harbor, and the few that remain are hastening to get ready for sea. Forty miles below this, the sheltry parts of the river have been frozen up for some time; the main body of the river being of course still open.

Small pox is pretty bad in this city. I observe that Mr. Ferrie, who has been attacked with it, is out again. Mr. Ferres is off the sick list again, and Mr. Gould has gone home.

The members of the Legislature who visited the Chaudiere Bridge and other works on the Grand Trund Railway, on Saturday, were highly pleased with what they saw. Few of them had any idea of the magnitude of the works, especially the iron tubular bridge over the Chaudiere, which they examined minutely inside and out. I was not able to be present, and cannot, therefore, describe minutely what took place: this is of the less importance, as I have already described the great tubular bridge.

The mail will go by the railroad between this city and Montreal when the road is regularly opened to the public on Monday next.

Quebec, Thursday, Nov. 23, 1854.

The Bank Charter and Capital Extension Bills passed through the ordeal of the committee of the whole House last night. It will be remembered that the condition announced by the Inspector General some time ago, on which the Banks would be allowed to increase their capital stock, required that they should invest one-tenth of their capital in public securities, Provincial or Municipal. By an amendment inserted in the bills, last night, this portion of their capital must be so invested within one year, or they will be refused the extension of their capital, and the time of their charters; and they will be permitted to go on as they are with the present capital, without being necessitated to invest any of their capital in debentures. The extension of the charters is also made dependent on their complying with this condition. The charters of all the Banks were granted for a limited period only; and without renewal, they would all expire in the year 1862, eight years from the present time. The bills now before the House extend the charters till 1870, eight years more, giving them 16 years to run. The extension of time, however, is conditional on their investing one-tenth of their capital in public securities within one year. There can be little doubt that the Banks will avail themselves of the benefits to be derived from a compliance with the condition imposed by the Government. The following are the respective capitals of the Banks with the proposed increase:

	Present Capital.	Proposed Increase.
Montreal Bank.	£1,000,000	£500,000
Bank of Upper Canada.....	500,000	500,000
Com'cial Bank.	500,000	500,000
City Bank.....	225,000	175,000
Bank du Peuple	200,000	100,000
Quebec Bank..	250,000	250,000

Mr. Merritt moved an amendment to compel the banks to receive at par, at all their agencies, their notes, payable at any one of them, irrespective of the rate of exchange. Thus, if a person should have the notes of a bank, payable at the Toronto agency, he would be enabled to compel the bank to receive them at par, or redeem them at the Quebec agency—no matter how much the rate of exchange should be against Lower Canada. A bank note is at all times payable in specie; but it is, and can be only payable at one particular place. Any other arrangement would be impossible; for a bank could not keep at its dozen or twenty agencies the means to redeem the same notes. To do this, it would require several times as much specie as the amount of its notes. Mr. Merritt's motion met the support of Mr. S. Macdonald, Mr. Brown and some others. Some hints were thrown out that the banks sometimes issue at one agency notes payable at another; but it was not more than a hint. To have made out any case, they should have established this; but instead of that, they directed all their exertions to compel the banks to pay at any of their agencies the notes made payable at any one of them!

As I write, the Clergy Reserve Bill is being read a third time. The vote has just been taken; and the division is, I venture to say, the most extraordinary ever witnessed in a Legislative body. It has been carried almost without discussion. Mr. Brown rose, on the motion of the third reading being made by Attorney General Macdonald, and stated that the question had been so fully discussed that there was no need of further debate, and he hoped the vote would be taken without discussion. Mr. Dorion, of Montreal, repeated his objections to the division of the property between Upper and Lower Canada. The Brown-Macdonald faction united with the high Church Tories in an attempt to defeat the bill; but they could not succeed. They have, however, showed their hands, and the country will know how to value their professions of patriotism. When the division was first taken, the vote stood 56 against 33; but some members, who came in when the names were being taken down, expressed a desire to have their names recorded; and the division being taken over again, the numbers stood 62 against 39.—Correspondence of the Leader.

The Bank Bills.

Quebec, Nov. 29.

A Message was received from the Legislative Council, agreeing to the following Bills without any amendment:—

Bill to authorise an addition to the Capital Stock of the Commercial Bank of the Midland District, and to facilitate the transfer of Shares in certain cases.

Bill to amend the several Acts incorporating the City Bank, and to add to its Capital Stock.

Bill to amend the Charter and increase the Capital Stock of the Bank of Montreal.

Bill to authorize an addition to the Capital Stock of the Bank of Upper Canada, and to facilitate the transfer of Shares in certain cases.

Bill to increase the Capital Stock of La Banque du Peuple, and for other purposes.

Bill to authorize an addition to the Capital Stock of the Quebec Bank, and for other purposes relative to the said Bank.

Noble Examples.

A gentleman called at the Educational Department, Toronto, a few days since, in behalf of the Warden of the County of Waterloo, for books to the amount of £25, for prizes to be given to the best scholars in that County, as tested by a Public Examination to be held in the County Court House at Berlin, 27th December next—the youthful competitors to be selected from all the Common Schools of the County that are disposed to compete, and to be known at the examination, not by names, but by numbers affixed to the breast of each. The Examination is to be conducted by Mr. J. H. Sangster (Principal of the Central School, Hamilton,) who came to the Normal School at Toronto, in 1847, a lad about 18 years of age, and slenderly qualified for admission; but who, by his talents and industry, and the system of training that he has had, has become one of the most able and accomplished teachers in Canada, if not in America. The Central School at Hamilton contains upwards of 1,000 pupils, and with this School are connected Primary Schools for small children—one or more in each Ward of the city—but all under Mr. Sangster's oversight, and taught by Teachers trained in the Normal School. From these Primary Schools, the pupils are drafted into the Central School, through the several divisions of which a pupil may advance until he acquires a thorough English education. The City of Hamilton has the most complete system of Schools of any City in Upper Canada; and its Central School House will advantageously compare with many a college, in the extent of its accommodations and the style of its architecture, provided, as it is, with play-yards, gymnasia, &c.,—all the product of local intelligence and enterprise, under the operations of the present School Law and system since the year eighteen hundred and fifty.—Journal of Education.

Convocation of the University.—"The prizes were accompanied with suitable remarks by the respective gentlemen who presented them. Professor Wilson, in presenting the prize to Mr. Ross, who had distinguished himself in History, English language and literature, said that he was the solitary representative of that race to which this wide continent belonged ere it came into the hands of its present owners. [Great applause.] He had distinguished himself in a very high degree, and was one of the most promising students of the University. He [Dr. Wilson] hoped at some future day to have the gratification of presenting University honors to some representative of another race now amongst us, who far from their native clime had found a shelter and a home under our fostering care." [Great applause.]—Toronto Globe.

Melancholy Accident.—While the men employed in the Pail Factory were at their dinner on Friday last, a lad named Arthur Bradley, in attempting to fix something about the wheel, was caught by the belt, and was carried round by it four or five times, crushing and mangling him in a most shocking manner. He called to his brother, a boy about 10 or 12 years old, who was in the room at the time, to release him, but in trying to do so, he very narrowly escaped being entangled also. The poor sufferer seeing his brother's danger, or from the agony he was undergoing, gave him a violent kick, which saved him. The boy then called the painter, who released Bradley. He expired a few minutes after.—St. Catherines Post.

Daring Highway Robbers.—On Saturday evening last, about 6 o'clock, a man of the name of Samuel Wakefield, was knocked down in the street and robbed of his watch, and subsequently on the same evening he had his pocket book taken care of, with its contents of about $30. Two men were arrested the same evening, named Patrick Butler and Thomas Graham; and were examined yesterday. Graham acknowledged to taking the watch, which was discovered on Sunday. Butler denied the charge, and no money save one quarter and a few coppers were found upon his person. Both prisoners were committed to take their trial.—Port Hope Paper.

A New Steamer.—On Saturday afternoon, the America, one of the two splendid steamers which have been building at Niagara for the Great Western Railway Company, made her first appearance in our beautiful bay. The America, we believe, is to be commanded by Captain Masson. She is in every way a magnificent boat, and in the hands of so popular and gentlemanly a commander as Captain Masson, she cannot fail to become a great favorite. We are informed that she made the run from Niagara to Hamilton in the very short time of two hours and three quarters.—Journal & Express.

The Galt Railway.—From a statement made in the last number of the Galt Reporter, we are glad to see that the Galt Branch of the Great Western Road is doing a large business. During the week ending Nov. 10th, the receipts from freight amounted to £420 12s. 6d. The flour and general freights from Galt to Hamilton alone, during the week, made 526,248 lbs. "This," adds the Reporter, "is one week's amount of business and income of the Galt Branch for traffic alone, entirely independent of Passenger trains. In fact, when it is brought to mind that at least 150,000 barrels of flour alone must be carried over this road every year, it will be manifest that in the 333 working days of the Railway, over 450 barrels of flour must be carried off every day from the Galt Station, independent of all other produce, and of a much higher inward freight. So fast, indeed, has the business accumulated, that cars cannot be procured on the line to carry off the flour, and two or three days are often lost to the millers by the detention of their produce. Yet the business still increases. On the day after the above account closed, viz., Saturday last, 13 cars were started from Galt Station to Hamilton, with over 1100 barrels of flour, and a vast quantity of butter, oatmeal, whiskey, pot-ash, and general freight. Each of these cars contained about eight tons, so that the income of the Company, for freight alone, on that day, from the Galt Branch, amounted to £54 2s. 9d."—Globe.

Magnetic Iron Ore.—We have recently been shown some fine specimens of magnectic iron, brought down from the north shore of Lake Superior, by Mr. Wilson, of Hamilton, C. W., who is extensively interested in the copper and iron locations of that region. This gentleman took down samples of this ore to be tested in the manufacture of steel. So important is a good quality of iron for this purpose, that the manufacturers of England have sent scientific men, this season, to the United States and the Canadas, to exhume their iron ores with a view of securing the best magnetic iron for their business. We have seen the most beautiful iron of this character from both sides of the lake, and it is known to be in various localities and in the greatest quantities. There is one locality on the north shore where there is a dyke of this iron perpendicular and jutting out to the lake, some six hundred feet in thickness, which is only equalled in extent, in the world, by the iron mountains of Marquette. The day cannot be far distant when such rich ore will be turned into a valuable account. We have no doubt this iron will be extensively mined in another year, and the beginning of an immense iron business seen on both sides of the great lake. Here is a field just opening to the enterprise of our eastern capitalists. Who will be the fortunate ones first to reap the harvest?—Lake Superior Journal.

FORGERY.
The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.
THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.
THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.
Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.
Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.
All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

RECIPES, &c.

To Clean Paints.—Smear a piece of flannel with common whiting, mixed to the consistency of common paste, in warm weather. Rub the surface to be cleaned quite briskly, and wash off with pure cold water. Grease spots will in this way be almost instantly be removed, as well as other filth, and the paint will retain its brilliancy and beauty unimpaired.

To Clean Window Glass.—Take finely pulverised indigo, dip into a linen rag moistened with vinegar, wine, or water, and apply it briskly to the glass. Wipe off and polish with a dry cloth. This method of cleansing window glass, imparts a brilliant polish, and is far more expeditiously accomplished than cleaning with soap-suds or whiting.

To Extract a Glass Stopple.—Wrap a large strip of wool around the neck of the bottle, once; fasten one end of this firmly to some stationary object, and hold the other end in the hand. "See-saw" the neck of the bottle, and the friction will so heat the latter that it will expand sufficiently to allow the stopple being removed with ease.

To Preserve Iron and Steel Knive. from Rust.—Procure some melted virgin wax—the purer the better—and rub it thoroughly over the blades of the knives, and having carefully removed the wax from the surface, rub them briskly with a dry cloths until the original polish is fully restored. This will fill all the pores with the unctuous and minute particles of the wax, which will adhere firmly, and prevent the intrusion of water or moisture which is the cause of rust. They will retain their brilliancy for weeks if used.

Rabbit Pudding.—A rabbit cut into about sixteen or eighteen pfeces, and a quarter of a pound of bacon, sliced; season in proportion to size, and if for a numerous family, add ten potatoes and four onions, sliced, and half a pint of water; boil for two hours or according to size. Boiled rice may be added instead of potatoes. Well intermix the meat with the vegetables or rice.

Egg Plants.—Peel the fruit, and cut them into thin slices, boil in salt and water, until quite tender; drain off the water, and add sweet milk, crumb in toasted bread, and whilst simmering gently, add butter, pepper, &c., and break in three or four fresh eggs; take up before the eggs cook hard, and you will have a dish almost equal to stewed oysters To fry egg plants, they should be peeled, cut into thin slices, parboiled, then dipped in batter which has been highly seasoned, and fried in butter or lard; either way they are delicious.

Lemon Sponge.—Pare off the rind of one large lemon, and boil it in a pint of water with one ounce of isinglass. As soon as the isinglass is dissolved, strain through muslin, and let it stand until cool, but not until it is set. Grate very finely the rind of another lemon, and let it stand in a basin with the juice of both until the stock is cold. Then add half a pound of loaf sugar; strain all the ingredients together into a bowl, and whisk them till they begin to stiffen. Then pour the mixture, as quietly as possible into a flat dish, and when cold, cut into squares. N. B.—It is to be made the night before it is intended to be eaten.

Lions.—Girard, the lion hunter of the French colony in Africa, gives the following statistics of the damage done to the Arabs in the province of Constantine, by lions: "The life of a lion may be computed to average thirty-five years. The annual destruction of horses, mules, cattle, sheep and camels, by a single animal, will amount in value to six thousand francs. Therefore, each lion costs the Arabs two hundred thousand francs. The thirty lions which are supposed to be now within the povince, and which will be replaced by others from Tunis or Morocco, when exterminated, cost yearly one hundred and eighty thousand francs. In the country under the dominion of France, each Arab pays an annual tribute of five francs to the goverment, and fifty francs to the lions."

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their boudage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now trimuphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. Ward, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony,—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B Gribble, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. Thomas James, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number

It was moved by the Rev. J. Wemberley, Rector of Dorrington, seconded by the Rev. George Wilkins, and adopted:-

"That the best thanks of this Meeting be presented to the Earl of Shaftesbury, for his kindness in presiding on the present occasion."

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

Article I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

Art. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

Art. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

Art. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

Art. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

Art. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

Art. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

Art. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

Art. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

Art. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

Frederick Douglass,
John D. Peck,
Amos G. Beman,
John Jones,
J. D. Bonner,
J. McCune Smith,
Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "The American Industrial School."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years, and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his Ice Houses, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Springwater Ice, from Yorkville. He is prepared to supply the same to consumers, by contract or otherwise, during the season, commencing from the 1st of June. In consequence of the increased cost of labor and materials, the price will this year be raised in the same proportion. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon, daily, to places within six miles of Toronto. All orders sent to T. F. Cary, 68 King Street West, will be punctually attended to.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,

OR,

The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,

A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To Editors.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

Published Weekly, at $2 a Year.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The Arts, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of Mechanical Industry, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. The Markets will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. The Children will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

Poetry.

Two Ways to Live on Earth.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

There are two ways to live on earth,
Two ways to judge—to act—to view:
For all things here have double birth—
A right and wrong—a false and true.

Give me the house were kindness seeks
To make that sweet which seemeth small;
Where every lip in fondness speaks,
And every mind hath care for all.

Whose inmates live in glad exchange
Of pleasure, free from vain expense;
Whose thoughts beyond their means ne'er range,
Nor wise denials give offence.

Who in a neighbor's fortune find
No wish, no impulse to complain;
Who feel not—never felt—the mind
To envy yet another's gain.

Who dream not of the mocking tide
Ambition's foiled endeavour meets—
The bitter pangs of wounded pride,
No fallen power that shuns the streets.

Though fate deny its glittering store,
Love's wealth is still the wealth to choose;
For all that gold can purchase more,
Are gauds it is no loss to lose.

Some beings, whereso'er they go,
Find not to please or to exalt;
Their constant study but to show
Perpetual modes of finding fault.

While others in the careless round
Of daily wants and daily care,
Can yet cull flowers from common ground,
And twice enjoy the joy they share.

Oh! happy they who happy make,
Who blessing, still themselves are blest;
Who something spare for other's sake,
And strive in all things for the best.

LIFE'S HARVEST.

BY WILLIAM EDWARD KNOWLES.

Ho! reapers of life's harvest,
Why stand with rusted blade,
Until the night draws round thee,
And day begins to fade?
Why stand ye idle, waiting,
For reapers more to come!
The golden morn is passing—
Why sit ye idle, dumb?
Thrust in your sharpened sickle,
And gather in the grain;
The night is fast approaching,
And soon will come again.

Thy Master calls for reapers,
And shall he call in vain?
Shall sheaves lie there ungathered,
And waste upon the plain?
Come down from hill and mountain,
In morning's ruddy glow,
Nor wait until the dial
Points to the noon below.
And come with the strong sinew,
Nor faint in heat or cold;
And pause not till the evening
Draws round its wreath of gold.

And mount the crumbling watch-towers,
And herald on the truth;
Preach out the golden precepts,
To wild and wayward youth,
Mount up the heights of wisdom,
And crush each error low;
Keep back no word of knowledge
That human hearts should know.
Be faithful to thy mission,
In service of thy Lord,
And then a golden chaplet
Shall be thy just reward.

Miscellaneous.

Bathing in the East.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

No swan-soft woman, rubbed with lucid oils,
The gift of an enamored god, more fair.
Browning.

We shall not soon set out from Damascus—we shall not leave the Pearl of the Orient to glimmer through the seas of the foliage wherein it lies buried—without consecrating a day to the Bath, that material agent of peace and good will unto men. We have bathed in the Jordan, like Naaman, and have been made clean; let us now see whether Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, are better than the waters of Israel.

The Bath is the "peculiar institution" of the East. Coffee has become colonized in France and America; the Pipe is a cosmopolite, and his blue, joyous breath congeals under the Arctic Circle, or melts languidly into the soft air of the Polynesian Isles; but the Bath, that sensuous elysium which cradled the dreams of Plato, and the visions of Zoroaster, and the solomn meditations of Mahomet, is only to be found under an Oriental sky. The naked natives of the torrid zone are amphibious; they do not bathe, they live in water. The European and Anglo-American wash themselves, and think they have bathed; they shudder under cold showers, and perform laborious antics with coarse towels. As for the Hydropathist—the Genius of the Bath, whose dwelling is in Damascus, would be convulsed with scornful laughter, could he behold that aqueous Diogenes sitting in his tub, or stretched out in his wet wrappings, like a sodden mummy, in a catacomb of blankets and feather beds. As the rose in the East has a rarer perfume than in other lands, so does the Bath bestow a superior purification and impart a more profound enjoyment.

Listen not unto the lamentations of travellers, who complain of the heat, and the steam, and the dislocation of their joints. They belong to the stiff-necked generation, who resist the processes, whereunto the Oriental yields himself body and soul. He who is bathed in Damascus, must be as clay in the hands of a potter. Syrians marvel how the Franks can walk, so difficult is it to bend their joints. Moreover, they know the difference between him who comes to the Bath out of a mere idle curiosity, and him who has tasted its delight and holds it in due honor. Only the latter is permitted to know all its mysteries. The former is carelessly hurried through the ordinary forms of bathing, and, if any trace of the cockney remain in him, is quite as likely to be disgusted as pleased. Again, there are many second and third rate baths, whither cheating dragomen conduct their victims, in consideration of a division of the spoils with the bath-keeper. Hence it is, that the Bath has received but partial justice at the hands of tourists in the East. If any one doubts this, let him clothe himself with Oriental passiveness and resignation, go to the Hamman-el-Khyateen, at Damascus, or the bath of Mahmoud Pasha, at Constantinople, and demand that he be perfectly bathed.

Come with me and I will show you the mysteries of the perfect bath. Here is the entrance, a heavy Saracenic arch, opening upon the crowded bazaar. We descend a few steps to the marble pavement of a lofty octagonal hall, lighted by a dome. There is a jet of sparkling water in the centre, falling into a heavy stone basin. A platform about five feet in height runs around the hall, and on this are ranged a number of narrow couches, with their heads to the wall, like the pallets in a hospital ward. The platform is covered with straw matting, and from the wooden gallery which rises above it are suspended towels, with blue and crimson borders. The master of the bath receives us courteously, and conducts us to one of the vacant couches. We kick off our red slippers below, and mount the steps to the platform. Yonder traveller, in Frank dress, who has just entered, goes up with his boots on, and we know, from that fact, what sort of a bath he will get.

As the work of disrobing proceeds, a dark-eyed boy appears with a napkin, which he holds before us, ready to bind about the waist, as soon as we regain our primitive form. Another attendant throws a napkin over our shoulders and wraps a third around our head, turbanwise. He then thrusts a wooden pair of clogs upon our feet, and, taking us by the arm, steadies our tottering and clattering steps, as we pass through a low door and a warm ante-chamber into the first hall of the bath. The light, falling dimly through a cluster of bulls-eyes in the domed ceiling, shows first, a silver thread of water, playing in a steamy atmosphere; next, some dark, motionless objects, stretched out on a low central platform of marble. The attendant spreads a linen sheet in one of the vacant places, places a pillow at one end, takes off our clogs, deposits us gently on our back, and leaves us. The pavement is warm beneath us, and the first breath we draw gives a sense of suffocation. But a bit of burning aloe wood has just been carried through the hall, and the steam is permeated with fragrance. The dark-eyed boy appears with narghileh, which he places beside us, offering the amber mouthpiece to our submissive lips. The smoke we inhale has an odor of roses; and as the pipe bubbles with our breathing, we feel that the dews of sweat gather heavily upon us. The attendant now re-appears, kneels beside us, and gently kneads us with dexterous hands. Although no anotomist, he knows every muscle and sinew whose suppleness gives ease to the body, and so moulds and manipulates them that we lose the rigidity of our mechanism, and become plastic in his hands. He turns us upon our face, repeats the same process upon the back, and leaves us a little longer to lie there glistening in our own dew.

We are aroused from a reverie about nothing by a dark brown shape, who replaces the clogs, puts his arm around our waist and leads us into an inner hall, with a steaming tank in the centre. Here he slips us off the brink, and we collapse over head and ears in the fiery fluid. Once—twice—we dip into the delicious heat, and then are led into a marble alcove and seated flat upon the floor. The attendant stands behind us, and we now perceive his hands are encased in dark hair gloves. He pounces upon an arm, which he rubs until, like a serpent, we slough the worn out skin, and resume our infantile smoothness and fairness. No man can be clean, until he has bathed in the East. Let him walk directly from his accustomed bath and self-friction with towels to the Hamman-el-Khyateen, and the attendant will exclaim as he shakes out his hair gloves: "Oh, Frank! it is a long time since you have bathed." The other arm follows, the back, the breast, the legs, until the work is complete, and we know precisely how a horse feels after he has been curried.

Now the attendant turns two cocks at the back of the alcove, and holding a basin alternately under the cold and hot streams, floods us at first with a fiery dash, that sends a delicious warm shiver through every nerve; then, with milder applications, lessening the temperature of the water by semitones, until, from the highest key of heat which we can bear, we glide rapturously down the gamut until we reach the lowest base of coldness. The skin has by this time attained an exquisite sensibility, and answers to these changes of temperature with thrills of the purest physical pleasure. In fact, the whole frame seems purged of its earthy nature and transformed into something of a finer and more delicate texture.

After a pause, the attendant makes his appearance with a large wooden bowl, a piece of soap, and a bunch of palm fibres. squats down beside the bowl, and speedily creates a mass of snowy lather, which grows up to a pyramid and topples over the edge. Seizing us by the crown-tuft of hair upon our shaven head, he plants the foamy bunch of fibres full in our face. The world vanishes; sight, hearing, smell, taste—unless we open our mouth—and breathing are cut off; we have become nebulous. Although our eyes are shut, we seem to see a blank whiteness; and, feeling nothing but a soft fleeciness, we doubt whether we be not the Olympian cloud which visited Io. But the cloud clears away before strangulation begins, and the velvet mass descends upon the body. Twice we are thus "slushed" from head to foot, and made more slippery than the annointed wrestlers of the Greek games. Then the basin again comes into play, and we glide once more musically through the scale of temperature.

The brown sculptor has now nearly completed his task. The figure of clay which entered the bath is transformed into polished marble. He turns the body from side to side, and lifts the limbs to see whether the workmanship is adequate to his conception. His satisfied gaze proclaims his success. A skilful bath attendant has a certain æsthetic pleasure in his occupation. The bodies he polishes becomes to some extent, his own workmanship, and he feels responsible for their symmetry or deformity. He experiences a degree of triumph in contemplating a beautiful form, which has grown more airily, light and beautiful under his hands. He is a great connoisseur of bodies, and could pick you out the finest specimens with as ready an eye as an artist.

I envy those old Greek bathers, into whose hands were delivered Pericles and Alcibiades, and the perfect models of Phidias. They had daily before their eyes the highest types of beauty which the world has ever produced; for of all things that are beautiful, the human body is the crown. Now, since the delusion of artists has been overthrown, and we know that Grecian Art is but the simple reflex of Nature—that the old masterpieces of sculpture were no miraculous embodiments of a beau ideal, but copies of living forms—we must admit that in no other age of the world has the physical Man been so perfectly developed. The nearest aproach I have ever seen to the symmetry of ancient sculpture was among the Arab tribes of Elhiopia. Our Saxon race can supply the athelete, but not the Apollo.

Oriental life is too full of repose, and the Ottoman race has become too degenarate through indulgence, to exhibit many striking specimens of physicial beauty. The face is generally fine, but the body is apt to be lank, and with imperfect muscular development. The best forms I saw in the bath were those of laborers, who, with a good deal of rugged strength, showed some grace and harmony of proportion. It may be received as a general rule, that the physical development of the European is superior to that of the Oriental, with the exception of the Circassians and Georgians, whose beauty well entitles them to the distinction of giving their name to our race.

So far as female beauty is concerned, the Circassian women have no superiors. They have preserved in their mountain home the purity of the Grecian models, and still display the perfect physical loveliness, whose type has descended to us in the Venus de Medici. The Frank, who is addicted to wandering about the streets of Oriental cities, can hardly fail to be favored with a sight of the faces of these beauties. More than once has it happened to me, in meeting a veiled lady, sailing along in her balloon-like ferdjee, that she has allowed the veil to drop by a skilful accident, as she passed, and has startled me with the vision of her beauty, recalling the line of the Persian poet—

"Astonishment! is this the dawn of the glorious sun, or is it the full moon?"

The Circassian face is a pure oval; the forehead is low and fair, "an excellent thing in woman," and the skin of an ivory whiteness, except the faint pink of the cheeks, and the ripe, roseate stain of the lips. The hair is dark, glossy, and luxuriant, exquisitely outlined on the temples; the eyebrows slightly arched and drawn with a delicate pencil, while lashes, like "rays of darkness," shade the large, dark, humid orbs below them. The alabaster of the face, so pure as scarcely to show the blue branching of the veins on the temples, is lighted by those superb eyes—

"Shining eyes, like antique jewels set in Parian statue-stone;"

whose walls are so dark and deep, that you are cheated into the belief that a glorious soul looks out of them.

Once, by an unforeseen accident, I beheld the Circassian form in its most beautiful development. I was on board an Austrian steamer in the harbor of Smyrna, when the harem of a Turkish pasha came out in a boat to embark for Alexandria The sea was rather rough, and nearly all the officers of the steamer were ashore. There were six veiled and swaddled women, with a black eunuch as guards, in the boat, which lay tossing for some time at the foot of the gang-way ladder, before the frightened passengers could summon courage to step out. At last the youngest of them—a Circassian girl of not more than fifteen or sixteen years of age—ventured upon the ladder, clasping the hand-rail with one hand, while with the other she held together the folds of her cumbrous feridjee. I was standing in the gangway watching her, when a slight lurch of the steamer caused her to loose her hold of the garment, which, fastened at the neck, was blown back from her shoulders, leaving her body screened but by a single robe of light gauzy silk. Through this, the marble whitness of her skin, the roundness, the glorious symmetry of her form, flashed upon me, as a vision of Aphrodite, seen "Through leagues of shimmering water, like a star."

It was but a momentary glimpse; yet that moment convinced me that forms of Phidian perfection are still nutured in the vales of Caucasus.

The necessary disguise of dress hides from us much of the beauty and dignity of Humanity. I have seen men who appeared heroic in the freedom of nakedness, shrink almost into absolute vulgarity when clothed. The soul not only sits at the windows of the eyes, but hangs upon the gateway of the lips; she speaks as well in the intricate, yet harmonious lines of the body, and the ever varying play of the limbs. Look at the torso of Ilioneus, the son of Niobe, and see what an agony of terror and supplication cries out from that headless and limbless trunk. Decapitate Laocoon, and his knotted muscles will still express the same dreadful suffering and resistance. None knew this better than the ancient sculptors, and hence it was that we find many of their statues of distinguished men wholly undraped. Such a view of art would be considered transcedental now-a-days, when our dress, our costumes, and our modes of speech, either ignore the existence of our bodies, or treat them with little of that reverence which is their due.

But, while we have been thinking these thoughts, the attendant has been waiting to give us a final plunge into the seething tank. Again, we slide down to the eyes in the fluid heat, which wraps us closely about until we tingle with exquisite hot shiverings. Now comes the graceful boy, with clean, cool, lavendered napkins, which he folds around our waist, and wraps softly about the head. The pattens are put upon our feet, and the brown arms steady us gently through the sweating room and ante-chamber into the outer hall, where we mount into our couch. We sink gently upon the cool linen, and the boy covers us with a perfumed sheet. Then, kneeling beside the couch, he presses the folds of the sheet around us, that it may absorb the lingering moisture and the limpid perspiration shed by the departing heat. As fast as the linen becomes damp, he replaces it with fresh, pressing the folds about us as tenderly as a mother arranges the drapery of her sleeping babe—for we, though of the stature of a man, are now in infantile in our helpless happiness. Then he takes our passive hand, and warms its palm by the soft friction of his own; after which, moving to the end of the couch, he takes our feet upon his lap, and repeats the friction upon their soles, until the blood comes back to the surface of the body with a misty glow, like that which steeps the clouds of a summer afternoon.

We have but one more process to undergo, and the attendant already stands at the head of our couch. This is the course of passive gymnastics, which excites so much alarm and resistance in the ignorant Franks. It is only resistance that is dangerous, completely neutralizing the enjoyment of the process. Give yourself with a blind submission into the arms of the brown Fate, and he will lead you to new chambers of delight. He lifts us to a sitting posture, places himself behind us, and folds his arms around our body, alternately tightening and relaxing his grasp, as if to test the elasticity of the ribs. Then seizing one arm he draws it across the opposite shoulder, until the joint cracks like a percussion cap. The shoulder-blades, the elbows, the wrists, and the finger-joints are all made to fire off their muffled volleys; and then, placing one knee between our shoulders, and clasping both hands upon our forehead, he draws our head back until we feel a great snap of the vertebral column. Now he descends to the hip joints, knees, ankles, and feet, forcing each and all to discharge a salvo de joie. The slight languor left from the bath is gone, and airy, delicate exhiliration, befitting the winged Mercury, takes its place.

The boy kneeling, presents us with a finjan of foamy coffee, followed by a glass of sherbet, cooled with the snows of Lebanon. He presently returns with a narghileh, which we smoke by the effortless inhalation of the lungs. Thus we lie in perfect repose, soothed by the fragrant weed, and idly watching the silent Orientals, who are undressing for the bath, or reposing like ourselves. Through the arched entrance we see a picture of the Bazaars; a shadowy painting of merchants seated amid their silks and spices, dotted here and there with golden drops and splashes of sunshine, which have trickled through the roof. The scene paints itself upon our eyes, yet wakes no slightest stir of thought. The brain is a becalmed sea, without a ripple on its shores. Mind and body are drowned in delicious rest, and we no longer remember what we are. We only know that there is an existence somewhere in the air, and wherever it is, and whatever it may be, it is happy.

More and more dim grows the picture. The colors fade and blend into each other, and finally merge into a bed of rosy clouds, flooded with the radiance of some unseen sun. Gentler than "tired eyelids upon tired eyes," sleep lies upon our senses:—a half-conscious sleep, wherein we know that we behold light and inhale fragrance. As gently the clouds dissipate into air, and we are born again into the world. The bath is at an end. We arise and put on our garments, and walk forth into the sunny streets of Damascus. But as we go homewards, we involuntarily look down to see whether we are really treading upon the earth, wondering, perhaps, that we should be content to do so, when it would be so easy to soar above the housetops.—Putnam's Monthly.

DISCOVERY OF A STALACTITE CAVE.—An interesting discovery has been made at Oystermouth, in Glamorganshire. At a spot near the Oystermouth-castle, in Swansea-bay, is a small limestone quarry and kiln, occupied by a man named Joseph Davies. In excavating the rock, the occupier came upon a crevice, which shortly widened into a cave, and on entering it it was found to be beautifully ornamented with stalactites hanging from the roof and sides. The cave is sufficiently large for a person to enter it and pass to the end, but it is thought to extend further than the discoveries which have been hitherto made. The cavern, which has been christened "Joseph's Cave," has been visited by many of the curious, and has formed a subject for conjecture and mystery to the superstitious Welchmen. The occupier, who has a lease for 99 years, not long ago granted, and who is himself a sexagenarian, is very anxious to receive an assurance from the proprietor that he will renew the lease to him when it is run out?

American Reformers—Infidels.

Joseph Barker in his recently published lectures, delivered in Sheffield, (Eng.) has the following notice of some of our prominent American reformers, who are sought to be stigmatized as infidels:

We have some men and women in America, that are universal wholesale reformers. They war with all abuse: they favor all improvements. But these men and women are nearly all unbelievers. There is Theodore Parker, of Boston; a man of extensive learning and great eloquence. He not only favors all beneficient reformers, but advocates them with a boldness and a fidelity, and a degree of ability almost unequalled. He stands alone in America; almost alone in the world. He is an 'infidel.' * * * * * *

We have next two public women of unequalled worth: Ernestine L. Rose, of New York, and Lucretia Mott, of Philadelphia. Ernestine L. Rose is the most perfect specimen of intellectual and moral excellence I have had the happiness to know. At home and abroad, and in the company of friends, and on the public platform, she is the same good, charming, noble creature. She is the first, or among the first, in every generous movement, and she gives herself to the advocacy and furtherance of every generous movement, without reserve. Her powers of mind, her powers of speech, her purse, her health, her life, are one continual sacrifice to humanity. She has travelled alone, for months together, along the rivers and lakes, through the towns and cities, the woods and swamps, of that vast continent, under a burning sun, amid winter storms, exposed to the deadly vapors of unhealthy regions, lecturing in Legislative halls and rude log huts, to the highest and the lowest, the richest and the poorest, to the most refined and learned, and to the rudest and most neglected of her species. Her eloquence is irresistible. It shakes, it awes, it thrills, it melts,—it fills you with horror, it drowns you in tears. I know not which predominates, intelligence or tenderness, knowledge or love: she excells in both. To hear her reason, you might fancy she was all intelligence; to hear her plead, you would think her an incarnation of benevolence. Yet this most beautiful specimen of womanhood is an 'infidel.'

Lucreti Mott, of Philadelphia, is a Hicksite Quaker; but she has proved herself so far superior to sectarian forms and standards, that even they, heretical as they are, have dealt with her repeatedly as disorderly. She cannot keep within the bounds of sect. She is a woman—a true, a genuine woman—and wherever ignorance, or crime, or sorrow dwells, thither will she go, with her words of instruction and counsel, of sympathy and consolation. She will go into the darkest dens of crime, into the deepest dungeons of despair, and to the farthest corners of the land, if wretchedness or sorrow call her.

She keeps her carriage, not for selfish use or pleasure, but more readily to run her round of visits to the poor, the oppressed or the dying. The hospitals and the lunatic asylums, the prisons and the penitentiaries, the charity schools and the homes of the unfortunate, all know her. She visits the persecuted reformer in his cell, and stands by his side in the dock, a ministering angel to the martyr everywhere. She makes the unjust judge tremble, and the temporizing jury to quail, and extorts a righteous verdict even from the hollow heart, of falsehood and of treachery. Alas! that virtuous woman should be mortal! Her well-built frame is failing. Her cares and labors in the cause of temperance and purity, of truth and freedom, of justice and humanity, have shattered her constitution, inpaired her health, and now, while she toils for others, she often suffers excruciating pains herself. Yet her soul is calm and her spirit cheerful. She suffers, but murmurs not. Her intervals of ease are given to smiles, and words of cheer, and generous labors; and she forgets her personal sufferings in ministering relief and joy to others. This beautiful and noble, this lovely and venerable woman, this example of domestic and of public virtue, is a believer, not in the divine authority of the Bible, but in the natural virtue and beneficient tendencies of unregenerate humanity.

A STRIKING NARRATIVE BY AN EYE-WITNESS.—The Albion and the Arethusa, bold and undaunted, entered close to the "Wasp" battery, and had scarcely time to open their fire, when the cables with which they were lashed to the steamers were severed by shot, and they became unmanagable just at the moment they were most exposed to the fire of the enemy. The Albion was set on fire in three places, and would have gone on shore, as she was only in five fathoms of water, had not the Cambria come up in time to rescue her from destruction, unfortunately, not before she had lost twelve men killed, and seventy wounded. The Arethusa, although she suffered less in men, having four killed and fourteen wounded, suffered even more in her hull.

The Rodney entered during the latter part of the action close to the forts, and went on shore on the shoal running out from Cape Constantine. Fortunately, it was already dusk, and the Colombo was at hand, which got her off without her having suffered great injury.

LIBERIA.

We recently published, with some remarks, a letter from a black correspondent, giving certain spicy details of social life at Liberia. We present to-day a second letter from the same hand, on other topics connected with the colony, meriting the notice of its friend and well-wishers. In a word, there are great and increasing evils connected with the emigrating system to Liberia, which throw into the shade those which we have so freely exposed in regard to European emigration to this country. The supporters of Liberian colonization will do well to look into the gross abuses in that quarter, detailed by our correspondent.

It seems, according to this writer—and he is an intelligent and trustworthy witness—that there is a vast deficiency of resident physicians to meet the pressing necessities of the emigrants hitherto, who have to be acclimated in unhealthy places, and, failing in that process, die off with pestilential rapidity. Not only, it is said, are the public but the private letters of President Robinson and Judge Benson and their adherents used for delusory purposes; and the aspirant for once in Liberia who will say pretty things of the country is he who succeeds. The Government is pronounced feeble and the municipal arrangements worthless. For every mouthful of beef the Liberians get, they are dependent on the natives. There is no regular market. Scarcely any of the people in the city work, but nearly all sit down and depend on living by trade with the natives; and thus, while a few with capital grow rich, most of them live only from hand to mouth The policy, too, with the natives is condemned. The latter neither attend churches or schools. One teacher with sixty scholars counts not a single native among them. While African education is wholly neglected, fire arms are liberally sold to the savages to destroy, if they choose, the settlers. The town is on the seaboard, and there is no road five miles into the interior. The tribes combined could easily destroy the colony. This seems quite Carolinian, and reminds us of the rodomontade of Mr. Calhoun on his native State, which he puffed just in proportion to her backwardness.

Our correspondent invites the colored philanthropists of the United States to come over and lend a hand to reform the abuses of Liberia, and to elevate the race. Among the citations of the writer, who gives chapter and verse for his assertions respecting the abuses of the Colonial Government and Society, is the case of the Morgan Dix, which sailed from Baltimore in 1851 with 151 emigrants and arrived at Bassa all well, so reported in The African Repository, for December, 1851, and April, 1852. Of the whole number, but nine are living, the rest having died—sacrificed by sending them to such a climate without necessary sanitary arrangements. These allegations being thus brought to the attention of the public, we hope to hear that the necessary remedies are promptly applied, or the confidence of the country in this important enterprise must altogether disappear.—Tribune.

Cure for Scrofula.

Nicholas Longworth, the great Catawba wine man, of Cincinnatti, publishes the following in the Commercial of that city. If the recipe is as effectual as the wine is excellent it will prove a desideratum indeed:

Put two oz of aquafortis on a plate, on which you have put two copper cents. Let it remain from eighteen to twenty-four hours. Then add four oz of clear, strong vinegar. Put cents and all in a large mouthed bottle, and keep it corked. Begin by putting four drops in a tea-spoon full of rain water, and apply it to the sore. Make the application three times a day, with a soft hair pencil, or one made of soft rag. If very painful, put more water. If not too painful, put less. As the sore heals apply it weaker. I request all editors, in all parts of the union, and abroad, to copy this, and to republish it quarterly. It may save many lives.

N. LONGWORTH.

Cincinnatti, Nov. 18th, 1854.

CONSUMPTION OF LIFE DURING THE REIGN OF NICHOLAS.—The consumption of life during the reign of the Emperor Nicholas has been enormous. He has carried on the war with the Circassians, uninterruptedly, for twenty-eight years, at the annual cost of 28,000 lives on the Russian side alone, making a grand total of nearly 600,000 Russians, who have perished in attempting to subdue the independence of Circassia. In the two campaigns of 1831-32 there are not sufficient data to form a correct estimate of the Russian loss, which was, however, in the Persian and Polish wars, enormous. In the two campaigns against Turkey of 1828-29, 300,000 fell, of whom, however, 50,000 perished by the plague. The loss of the Russians, in various ways, since the entry of the Danubian Principalities, is understood at 30,000. In these calculations, it should be borne in mind that no estimate is attempted to be made of the sacrifice of human life on the side of those who fought for their liberties against the aggressions of Russia. If this calculation were attempted, it is probable that the result would prove that neither Julias Cæsar, nor Alexander, nor even Tamerlane, has been a greater scourge to the human race than the present Emperor.

Mixed Commission for American Claims.

It may not be generally known that there is at this time sitting in London, a Mixed Commission, appointed under the convention of 1853, for the settlement of outstanding claims between Great Britain and America, arising out of the late war, and some others. The Commissioner for the United States is Judge Upham; the Agent, General Thomas. The Commissioner for Great Britain is a Mr. Horsfield; the Agent, Mr. Hannan. The umpire is Joshua Bates, Esq., of the firm of Messrs. Baring and Co. The claims are of various kinds; but amongst them are some preferred by Englishmen, who were then trading in the Southern States, and who held slaves which were set free by the British. These claims for slaves thus liberated are said greatly to have annoyed and perplexed the Commission. One of this kind has been presented by a Mr. Potts, a solicitor from Manchester, on behalf of some persons now residing in that city, but whose names we have, as yet, been unable to ascertain. It is for several thousands of pounds. The claimants were settled in Georgia, and the slaves belonged to them were spirited off by the British naval force. Mr. Potts seems to have pressed the case of his clients with singular tenacity, taking exception to every counter-plea brought forward. The British Commissioner has, we understand, submitted the question to the Foreign Office for decision, being himself disinclined to admit the claim. The excitement it occasioned was considerable. Another claim is for the value of seventy-three slaves liberated in Bermuda under the following circumstances:

A vessel called the Enterprise, sailed from Alexandria, D. C., on the 22nd of January 1835, bound for Charleston, S. C., and having on board, besides a cargo of merchandise, seventy-three slaves with their owner. She was driven by stress of weather into the port of Hamilton, Bermuda, having been three weeks at sea, and being in a leaky condition. The captain intended to refit, and to proceed on his voyage, but while in port, the slaves were seized and liberated by the authorities of the island.

Claims for compensation were made on the British Government, for the value of these slaves, and various communications have passed on the subject, without result. The whole matter has now been referred to the Commission. Much law and logic have been expended in discussing this claim, the principles insisted upon by the United States Commissioner being the same as those urged by Mr. Calhoun before the United States Senate, in 1840, when resolutions adopting his views were passed by that body. They are as follows:

"That a vessel on the high seas, in time of peace, engaged in a lawful voyage, is, according to the law of nations, under the exclusive jurisdiction of the State to which she belongs; and that, if such vessel is forced, by stress of weather or other unavoidable circumstance, into the port of a friendly power, her country, in such case, looses none of the rights appertaining to her on the high seas, either over the vessel, or the personal relations of those on board."

On the other hand, it is contended by the British Government, that Slavery, having been abolished in the island of Bermuda, by the Statute 3 and 4 W. IV. cap. 73, passed 28th of August 1833, and the Enterprise being locally within the jurisdiction of the colony subsequent to the coming into operation of that Act, the slaves on board of her were rightfully liberated by virtue of the law. The United States Commissioner has been extremely industrious in collecting the various authorities, British and American, which support his view of the case of the Enterprise; and he at length urges, that if the municipal law of England overrules the principles of international laws which he lays down, then it is paramount to the absolute rights of other governments when they come into conflict.

"Such a position," he says, "virtually abolishes the entire code of international law. If one State can at pleasure revoke such law, any other state may do the same thing, and the whole system of international intercourse becomes a mere matter of arbitrary will, of universal violence."

Now, the learned Judge, in appealing to the law of nations, necessarily throws us back upon first principles; and unfortunately for his views of the case, that which is called the Law of Nations, or the Jus Gentium, is founded on this dogma absolute:

"Every man holds from nature a liberty and and an independence of which he cannot be deprived, except with his own consent." (Vattel. Droits des Gens. Preliminaires. Chap. 1.)

If the Judge admit this principle—which he cannot consistently repudiate—he must show that the seventy-three slaves in question were willing to remain slaves: he must prove that first principles are to be over-ridden by legal enactments violating the natural rights of men, with their consent. It does seem to us, that he has been singularly unfortunate in his quotation of the Law of Nations; for by it he cannot for a moment maintain his position, and we hope that the British Commissioner will stand his ground.

Apart, however, from the interest attaching to this case, we would call attention to it as illustrating the illegality of the law relating to colored seamen. The principles urged with so much force by Judge Upham, namely, "that the flag of a nation is a supreme protection for the citizens and property of one nation whilst they are in the ports of another, and that neither municipal nor statute law can subvert its rights," is one in which all jurists agree; so long always, be it observed, as those rights are not in opposition to the fundamental principles on which all society is based Now if this principle hold good in one case, so must it in another. It was thus that Mr. Consul Mathew argued when Manuel Pereira and Reuben Roberts were seized in 1852 by the the authorities of Charleston, S. C., and incarcerated, simply because they had a dark skin, and had been driven by stress of weather into that port. The local authorities, however, laughed at him, and treated his doctrine with supreme contempt, and Southern jurists and statesmen decided that Consul Mathew was entirely in error, for that municipal law did over-ride the superior law of the flag, or law international. Messrs. Berrien and Johnson, Secretaries of State at Washington, supported this view, for the sake of "dear old Charleston," and the British Government did not push the case to an issue, so that the point might be determined.

Notwithstanding Judge Upham's recorded opinion that the claim before the Commission, preferred by the owner of the slaves on board the Enterprise, is sustained, and that they are entitled to compensation for the illegal interference with them by the authorities of Bermuda, we believe it cannot be substantiated, because it is founded on an assumed principle, at varience with the fundamental rights on which all society, and the comity on nations rest. On the other hand, his dogma respecting the protection of the flag cannot be controverted, being in strict accordance with the principles laid down in the Jus Gentium. If his claim be admitted, the law relating to coloured seamen stands condemned.

We are curious to learn what the result of these applications will be. It would be abominable, we think, if Great Britain were called upon to pay large sums to her own subjects, or to American citizens for slaves released by her so long ago, and be thus compelled to stultify herself. We shall endeavour to procure the names of the British claimants on whose behalf Mr. Potts has been so eloquent. The fact ought to be known, for he places Manchester in the position of seeking the price of blood.—Anti-Slavery Reporter.

An Interesting Trial.

Some fourteen years ago, a Mr. Darby, of Chester district, purchased a girl called Lucy, who was carried to that neighbourhood by a man named Thompson, said to have been seen in Washington, D. C., as late as 1851, practicing law. The girl had the looks of an Indian, but was sold to him as a negro. She ran away repeatedly, telling her playmates she was an Indian. Some three or four years ago, she was lodged in jail in Columbia as a runaway, and advertised. Her owner came for her, and was required to show his bill of sale, which was not considered altogether satisfactory. Several citizens were impressed with the girls appearance, and advised the jailor not to give her up, as she evidently was an Indian. He applied to Governor Means for advice, and the Governor directed him to stand a suit, and let the case be decided by an appeal to evidence. Governor Manning also, upon coming into office, expressed an interest in the trial, as one involving important rights to the girl.

After long delay, by the party claiming her, to produce evidence, the case was tried at the late term. Some three years since, an old Cherokee chief visited Columbia, upon hearing that an Indian girl was in jail. He said that, fourteen years ago, while his tribe was on the way from North Carolina to Arkansas, an Indian girl, about four years old, was stolen from his party; that great distress was caused to her parents; that she was the child of his sister's daughter, and that her name was Lut-se: that he came to Columbia with the hope of seeing Lut-se, and that, as soon as he laid eyes on her, his heart was rejoiced to see the face of his sister's daughter; that this girl is Lut-se, and she is as much like her mother as her mother's sister's children are like her mother's sister.

The chief's name is Inaluskie. The old man removed eight years ago from Arkansas, and now lives in North Carolina. He was a captain under Gen. Jackson at the battle of the Horse-shoe Bend, where he commanded 130 warriors, and fought with much distinction. Commissions were read for several chiefs of tribes now in North Carolina, stating that a girl named Lut-se was stolen from one of their party about fourteen years ago. A commission was read of the examination of a Mrs. Carter, the wife of a man who purchased the girl from Thompson and sold her to Darby.

In this she stated that, learning from her children that the girl said she was an Indian, she called her up and questioned her about it, when she said "No," she was not Indian, but her mother was negro. This was offered as evidence, and strange to say, admitted. But it had the opposite effect to what was intended. As it was clear that among her playmates the girl told the truth, and to her mistress she evidently had been taught to say otherwise. Evidence was brought forward that she had for fourteen years, been in Chester, in possession of Darby, working as a negro, and so considered, although called "Darby's Indian."

The most striking testimony adduced in the case, was that by our distinguished, talented and scientific townsman, Dr. R. D. Gibbes. This is not only mine, but the opinion of others. He understands the anatomy of our race as well as I know my multiplication table. As proof of my declaration, he was put upon the stand and called upon to explain the ethnological distinction of races. He was asked to point out the characteristics of the Indian and Negro, which he did very minutely and fully, and in a manner to bring conviction to the whole assembled crowd. He exhibited a cast of an Indian skull—an aboriginal—said to be from one in the Academy of Science in Philadelphia, from a mound in Ohio. He explained all its characteristics, and then called up the old Chief and Interpreter, and showed the identity with their heads. He then compared it and their heads with that of Lucy, and established them all as of the same type.

He then handled a negro skull and demonstrated clearly the peculiarities, and showed by comparison the marked difference between them. He explained the prominent difference in the anatomical structure of the different parts of the body, and gave an exceedingly interesting account of the distinction in the hair of the Caucasian, Indian and Negro races. He stated a very curious fact, as resulting from microscopical observation, that in mulatto cross, the hair of one or the other parent was present, and sometimes hairs of both, but never a mongrel hair; that no amalgamated hair existed; that as often the mulatto had straight hair as kinky. He stated that the microscope revealed that the hair of the white race was, when transversely divided, oval, that of the Indians circular, and that of the Negro eccentrically elliptical, with flattened edges; that of the Negro was not hair, but wool, and capable of being felted; that the colouring matter of true hair was an internal tube, while in the Negro it was in the epidermis or scales covering the shaft of the hair.

In corroboration of his statement that both white and negro hair were sometimes found in the same head, a singular case was mentioned in my hearing, by Dr. W. He stated that he once attended a half-breed Indian and negro, who had straight Indian hair. He was ill, and had his head shaved and blistered. On his recovery, when his hair grew out it was negro hair, crisped and wiry.

These are very curious facts, and of much importance in the distinction of races.

The counsel of the plaintiff proposed and insisted on Dr. Gibbes to give the facts as to the hair of grades of blood; but he said he had not examined by the microscope any but the half breeds. It is to be hoped that full investigation will be made of this subject, and the fact published.

On the whole, the evidence set forth by Dr. Gibbes was extremely interesting, and developed some facts I never heard of before.

There has been but one opinion expressed in relation to it. The Jury decided in favour of the girl's being Indian, and she left Columbia next day with the old chief on her way to Arkansas, to her parents and friends. Gov. Means was so convinced that the girl was Indian, that he was heard to say that if the case was decided against her, he would buy her and set her free. The feeling seemed to pervade the community, and it is more than probable that, had the case been decided against her, the citizens would have freed her.

SLAVERY IN KANSAS.—The brother of Mr. Dodson, editor of the Georgia Examiner, writes to that paper that slavery already exists in Kansas, and needs no act of legislation to permit it; that it is impossible to get white labor there, and they must have slaves; that Missouri will send half her population there to protect the territory from the control of the abolitionists. He adds, that slaves hire readily at from $250 to $200 per annum, and that Kansas was intended by Providence for a Slave State.

Amalgamation at the South—Some of the Consequences.

Anti-Slavery men, when charged—as they frequently used to be—with being amalgamationists, have ever made the unanswerable retort, that the system of Slavery is the very hot-bed of amalgamation. On this subject we now have the testimony of a Southern woman, Mrs. Douglass, who was recently prosecuted and imprisoned, under the laws of Virginia, for the atrocious crime of teaching coloured children! She concludes her remarkable narrative with the following revelation of the all-prevailing licentiousness which is engendered by the slave system at the South. It is a revolting, but impressive recital: J.

"I now approach a subject vitally connected with the interests of the South and the welfare of humanity. In doing so, I have no rancor or malice to serve, but boldly speak my mind, and tell my Southern sisters a truth, which, however, they may have learned it by sad experience, has probably never been thus presented to them before.—In this truth is to be found the grand secret of the opposition to the instruction of the colored race. It therefore becomes important in connection with my narrative. In this truth also lies the grand secret of the discontent and rebellion among slaves. Knowing this, it is to perceive why such strenuous efforts are made to keep the colored population in darkness and ignorance. As it is, nature herself often rebels against what instinct teaches even the most degraded negro, to be inhuman and devilish, and if to this were added the light of intelligence afforded by even the commonest instruction, woe to the darling system of slavery. This subject demands the attention, not only of the religious population, but of statesmen and law-makers. It is the one great evil hanging over the Southern slave States, destroying domestic happiness and the peace of thousands. It is summed up in the single word—amalgamation. This, and this only, causes the vast extent of ignorance, degradation, and crime that lies like a black cloud over the whole South. And the practice is more general than even the Southerners are willing to allow. While even the Northern libertine usually revolts from the intimate society of those in whose veins courses a drop of black blood, the Southern gentleman takes them to his very bosom and revels in their fancied charms, until satiety disgusts him, when he deliberately sells them into a lower degradation as he would a disabled horse.

"It is impossible to deny that this unnatural custom prevails to a fearful extent throughout the South. The testimony is of too personal a character to be overcome. Neither is it to be found only in the lower order of the white population. It pervades the entire society. Its followers are to be found among all ranks, occupations and professions. The white mothers and daughters of the South have suffered under it for years—have seen their dearest affections trampled upon — their hopes of domestic happiness destroyed and their future lives embittered even to agony, by those who should be all in all to them as husbands, sons and brothers. I cannot use too strong language in reference to this subject, for I know that it will meet with a heartfelt response from every Southern woman. I would deal delicately with them if I could, but they know the fact and their hearts bleed under its knowledge, however they may have attempted to conceal their discoveries. Southern wives know that their husbands come to them reeking with pollution from the arms of their tawny mistresses. Father and son seek the same sources of excitement, and alike gratify their inhuman propensities, scarcely blushing when detected and recklessly defying every command of God and every tie of morality and human affection. They have not even the paltry excuse that ordinary libertines sometimes make, that their love is real though illicit—the whole practice is plainly unequivocally shamelessly beastly. Is there any wonder, then, that people addicted to these habits are rapidly returning to a state of semi-barbarism?

"It is to be supposed that the ordinary teachings of nature do not tell the sable sons and daughters of the South, that this custom is inhuman and ungodly? Is not chastity a natural instinct, even among the most savage nations of the earth? The female slave, however fair she may have become, by the various commminglings of her progenitors or whatever her mental and moral acquirements, knows that she is a slave, and as such, powerless beneath the whims or fancies of her master. If he casts upon her a desiring eye, she knows that she must submit. There is no way of escape, and her only thought is, that the more gracefully she yields, the stronger and longer hold she may, perchance, retain upon the brutal appetite of her master. Still she feels her degradation, and so do others with whom she is connected. She has parents, brothers and sisters, a lover, perhaps, all of whom suffer through and with her, and in whose hearts spring roots of bitterness which are destined to grow into trees whose branches will sooner or later overshadow the whole land.

"How important, then, for these Southern sultans, that the objects of their criminal passions should be kept in utter ignorance and degradation. They must not read the Bible, because that teaches them of the sin of their masters. They must not worship God for the effect thereof would be to imbue them with a deeper horror of this great wickedness. They must not read or write, for every mental and moral improvement only tends to bring out and improve those feelings and emotions that already repel this gross system of sensuality and licentiousness. Were the negroes instructed in their duties to themselves and to each other, their obligations to their masters and their God, and were these instructions exemplified by the consistent lives of their masters, with the natural religious tendencies of the negro race, the South would become the very garden of the Lord. Instead of becoming discontented and rebellious, the very reverse would be the case. There would be no fear of insurrections, for there would be no inducement. But when a man, black though he be, knows that, at any moment, he is compelled to hand over his wife, his sister, or his daughter, to the loathesome embraces of the man whose chains he wears, how can it be expected that he will submit without the feelings of hatred and revenge taking possession of his heart?

"I have no desire to pursue this subject farther at present. I give it, as the cause of the discontent and rebellion among the Southern slaves, and also as the cause of the creation of that disgraceful law, which now stands like a great black blot on the code of Virginia, and under whose unjust application I have been made to suffer. The subject is one that will not be suffered to rest, for I know my Southern sisters well enough to believe that they will not much longer rest tamely under the influences of this damning curse. I have told them plainly of the evil—the remedy is in their own hands."

Desperate Affray at Cairo.

We find the following account of a terrible riot and murder at Cairo (Ill.) on Tuesday last, in the Louisville Courier of Saturday:

THE CAIRO TRAGEDY.

A negro by the name of Joe Spencer, who kept a hotel on board of the wharf-boat at Cairo, was sued for sixty dollars. When the officers went to serve a summons on him, he swore he wouldn't go, and said there were not men enough in the place to take him. He finally, by a good deal of persuasion, agreed to go. On his road to the 'Squire's office, he got a keg of powder, took it in one hand, while he held a revolver in the other, went into the office, and told the 'Squire if he did not release him, he would blow the whole party to h-ll. They were afraid of him, and so allowed him to go back to the river. When he got back, he went into a flat boat, which he had fitted up for boarders, and defied the town to take him. By this time the mob had become large and very much excited, and seemed determined that he should be taken and the law obeyed. They tried for some time to get him out, but could not succeed.

At length they concluded to scuttle the boat and let her sink; but the first that neared her for that purpose was received with a discharge of buckshot from the negro inside. The firing now became general on both sides, the negro having the advantage, being inside. In the attempt to sink the flatboat five men were shot, some rather seriously, but none were killed. They soon found the advantage was too much in the negro's favor, and the cry was raised to set the boat on fire, and they went to work to carry it into execution. Here another party became interested in the tragedy. There were three steam boats laying near the flatboat, and their officers saw at a glance that if the flatboat was set on fire, the steamboats would all of them be burnt up; so they put in their protest against setting her on fire, unless she was pulled out in the stream. The mob paid but little attention to the officers at first, but they soon found, when they discovered four or five of them with their rifles, that they were in earnest, as they swore they would shoot the man that would attempt to set her on fire where she was.

This was an attack in the rear, and a little more than was bargained for, and thinking that they could not stand the fire of a desperate negro in front, and a few determined men in the rear, the mob concluded that "discretion was the better part of valor," got a yawl, made a line fast to the flatboat, and commenced pulling her out into the stream; at the same time two men boarded her and set her on fire, but at considerable risk, as the negro kept blazing away at them whenever a chance offered. When they got her out about 100 yards the negro cut the line that was towing him and went adrift.

The boat was now all in a blaze at one end, when the negro came out on the other, clapped his hand on his breast, swore he was king of the black race, and would die like a man. The wind, blowing on the shore at the time, carried the boat across the river, and the steamboats were saved. At this time the negro disappeared for a while, and all supposed that he had destroyed himself, when presently he appeared with the section of a stove, and making one end of a line fast to it and the other end to his neck, overboard he went, and never came up, which was the last of the negro, and an end to the "Cairo Tragedy."

Rev. Samuel R. Ward.

We are not sure that we have informed our readers of the fact that this gentleman was so far caught napping as so yield to a request to second resolutions, before the Congregational Union of England, in support of the Eastern Mission of the American Board. A correspondent of the Liberator having commented indignantly upon this act of Mr. Ward, Mr. Chesson, the English correspondent of the Wesleyan, notices the matter as follows:

"No doubt Mr. Ward took a false step, and I should be one of the last persons to justify him in it. Knowing something of the circumstances connected with his seconding the resolution in question, I cannot but attribute his doing so rather to a momentary error of judgment than to any disposition to assist the American Board. Since he has been in this country, Ward has done not a little to enlighten the British Churches as to the corrupt state of the great religious organizations of your country; and I think that the recollection of this good which he has accomplished should blot out the remembrance of the one act that is, I must admit, very properly condemned. When a man retraces a false step, his error ought to be forgiven him. This, Ward has done. In a letter from him which recently appeared in the Morning Advertiser, he speaks the truth faithfully about the American Board. His original mistake ought now to be forgotten."—Anti-Slavery Standard.

SLAVERY IN MINNESOTA.—We hear a rumour that a colony of Virginians talk of removing to Minnesota next spring, with their slaves! Under the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, what is there to hinder them from settling on the West side of the Mississippi in Minnesota? And what is still more revolting to the great majority of our people, the leaders of the administration in the Territory dare not oppose any such movement on the part of Virginians, or any other dealers in "human cattle." We are not so sure but some of them would encourage the heinous outrage.—Minnesotian (St. Paul.)

UNDERGROUND—MORE ARRIVALS—Monday morning, shortly after daylight, sixteen "chattels"—three men and five women, and eight children—passed down the avenue and over the ferry, becoming subjects of the British Crown, and renouncing their claim to protection under the "glorious stars and stripes." Republicanism, as far as they are concerned, they pronounce a decided failure—the greatest humbug of the times. These all came from Covington, Kentucky.—Detroit Tribune.

Mrs. Douglass on Amalgamation.

Elsewhere will be found an extract from the narrative of Mrs. Douglass, who is regarded, generally, as one of the tried and true; one who has suffered, remembered "those in bonds as bound with them," and who, if she has not quite suffered unto the death, has yet borne enough to give her a claim to rank among the prominent philanthropists of the day. Had we ever been inclined to view her in such a favorable light, our opinion would, after reading the article to which we direct attention, have to undergo a decided change, and to view her as we do, as an active friend of, not the slave, but the slaveholder, one who is engaged not in a warfare against slavery, but against the evils which she thought were unnecessarily attached to it, the abolition of which would cause the feeling of security in the midst of their slaves, to take the place of the fears and apprehensions which now render the slaveholders miserable. Amalgamation she considers as the cause of the ignorance, degredation and crime which hang over the sunny South; if it were not for it, the slave, having no natural aspirations for liberty, would, it is presumed, be quiet, submissive, enjoy his corn, bacon, dirt and rags, through untold generations. But the sight of his female relatives, forced to administer to the vilest passions of his master, arouses his dormant feelings of revenge, which, but for circumstances of this kind, would still remain slumbering, and hence the evils.

What a libel upon humanity! though perfectly in keeping with the argument advanced. By the term amalgamation, she means the union of the black and white races, not the system of wickedness carried on, as will be seen. She does not tell us that slavery is an evil, and that amalgamation is a natural consequence under the influence brought to bear, of the oppressed and oppressors being of different complexion, and by abolishing slavery you banish the evils attending it; but she comes forward of that, and says that amalgamation—which in the South is generally synonymous with licentiousness—is the cause of all the evil; thus faithfully applying oil to their consciences for fear that they might become lacerated, should the thought even of the wrongfulness of slavery be presented to them South. On looking over the picture drawn of the domestic happiness destroyed, the lives embittered, &c., we supposed that the writer had used the term amalgamation, as synonymous with licentiousness; but were soon undeceived, as she proceeds to say that they, the fathers, sons, and husbands of her southern sisters "have not even the paltry excuse that ordinary libertines sometimes make, that their love is real, though illicit; the whole practice is plainly, unequivocally, shamelessly, beastly." Not the same excuse! Why not? Because the whole practice is plainly, unequivocally, shamelessly, beastly; so says this modern philanthropic lady; and, as if fearful that her meaning would not be fully understood, beastly is italicized. They cannot love those tawny mistresses, because, forsooth! they are tawny; or colored, if you please; therefore, as they are colored, they must be a lower grade of animals than are the Southern gentlemen, absolute beasts, and as Henry Clay—than whom there was no more inveterate foe to the colored man—declared, "God and nature has placed an insurmountable barrier between them." Mrs. Douglass then—as do all pro-slavery people—is endeavoring to fan the flames of prejudice against color, at the same time that she would rivet the chains on the slave. Note the process by which they are to be rivetted, and the remedy for the evils, which is in the hands of the Southern women. That remedy is the instruction of the negroes in their duty to their master, their God and each other; then let the masters only exemplify these salutary teachings by acting consistently, and "the South would become the very garden of the Lord." A nation of slaveholders living in a garden of the Lord!!! "One good preacher among my negroes is more efficacious than a waggon load of cowhides," said a planter, and this is Mr. Douglass' sentiment, which she has plainly, unequivocally, and shamelessly set forth. Plainly, because she wishes her southern friends to understand that she is not warring against slavery at all; unequivocally, because to exonerate herself from the charge of incendiarism, she must speak clearly, and shamelessly, because one who, single-handed, starts forward to bring order out of such a chaos, for the public good, will of course suppose that such patriotism must be disconnected from all feeling of shame.

We cannot sufficiently express our abhorrence of such hollow-heartedness as this, which comes forward with a piously elongated countenance, and advises the culture of the "religious tendencies" of the negro, in such a way, that he will settle down quietly, and believe himself under "obligations" to his master, so that he would be happy and contented, in having his own will made to bend and conform to that of another, instead of being rebellious and indignant at the thought. But the "peculiar institution" is conducted by engineers who, keener visioned, and more skillful than this lady, will not suffer innovations on the time-honored custom of giving verbal instruction. Woe to the peace and contentment in the "garden of the Lord," when the slaves should bring their Bibles and read unto their masters,—"All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." "I come to break the bonds of the oppressor, &c.

No other conclusion can we arrive at, than that Mrs. Douglass is a staunch colonizationist; and as there is no probability that she will be allowed to exercise her peculiar talent for the suppression of amalgation in the South, we would suggest that the African Colonization Society send her on a mission to Liberia, where she will see a system of slavery, with its attendant evils, in full development, without amalgamation. S.

On the opening of the United States Congress on the 4th, the President's message was read as usual; it is quite lengthy, but is characterized by a somewhat more subdued tone than some of its predecessors.

His Excellency evidently thinks that some of the election returns have a meaning, and with his usual catch-penny principles, is beginning to bow in time.

The relations with the principle European nations are briefly noticed.

The Japan Expedition has been successful; a treaty negociated, and nothing now remains but an exchange of ratifications, &c.

The defenceless condition of the Mexican frontier, and the predatory disposition of American adventurers are discanted upon; but the nation is assured that it has ever been his desire that such criminal proceedings should be punished, and to that end all the powers with which he is invested have been exerted.

The commission to establish a Mexican boundary has commenced operations, and one to settle the extreme North-western is recommended.

But the subject which seems most to have absorbed the attention of the President, judging from the hurried manner in which preceding subjects are treated, is the Greytown exploit. He takes it up, and is not done with palliating and attempting to justify it, until he carries it through nearly one-fifth of the entire message. The document ends with the usual specifications of the various duties to be performed in order to secure peace and the Union. S.

Arrival of the "Pacific."

NEW YORK, Dec. 13th.

The Pacific arrived at 11 o'clock, bringing 144 passengers.....The Pacific left Liverpool, Thursday morning, Nov. 30th, at 7 o'clock....The Arabia arrived out on the 26th....The Niagara left Liverpool on the 25th, with the 54th regiment of infantry, and a few Companies of the 56th regiment, and artillery for the Crimea.... The next news will probably come by the Sarah Sands, to Portland.

THE WAR.

Nothing decisive has taken place since the 5th Both parties are hurrying up reinforcements and another great battle is expected ....France and England have notified Austria, Prussia and the German States that they no longer recognize the four points, but intend to hold the Crimea and dictate their own terms of peace....Russian reinforcements are augmenting; and another great battle or a series of battles must follow before the fate of Sebastopol is decided.... The diplomatists of Russia, Austria, Prussia and the lesser German States are very active....The report of another battle on the 13th is discredited....News from other parts of Europe is destitute of interest.

The following is a verbatim copy of the order conveyed by Captain Nolan to Lord Lucan and the Earl of Cardigan—the misunderstanding of which caused a brilliant but disasterous charge of the light cavalry:—

"Lord Raglan wishes the cavalry to advance rapidly to feel the enemy, and try to prevent their conveying the guns. Troop of horse artillery may accompany.

GREAT BRITAIN.—Parliament was summoned to meet on the 12th December.... There are rumours of a ten million loan, and a ten per cent. income tax....Baring Brothers advertise, as usual, to pay Russians 4½ per cent....John Bright has been burnt in effigy, in Manchester....The Russian losses at Inkermann are confirmed at 15,000 killed and wounded....The allies buried 5,000 Russians left dead on the field....Advices from Sebastopol of the 13th stated that the siege was progressing favourably, and that the health and spirits of the troops were admirable....Seventeen first-class steamers were at Toulon, embarking troops and stores. ....All French steamers from the Baltic are under orders for the Mediterranean.

IRISH PATRIOTISM OF THE RIGHT SORT.—Nothing can be more cheering than the evidence of the true spirit of patriotism which prevails among all ranks and creeds or Irish society at the present juncture, and which has been evoked by the royal appeal for aid towards the fund raising for the widowed and orphaned of the soldiers and sailors who have fallen in the East. The meeting on Saturday, in the county of Clare, presided over by Sir Lucius O'Brien, is one of the latest instances of the universal feeling which animates alike Protestant, Presbyterian and Roman Catholic. One of the resolutions was proposed, in an effective speech by the Rev. Mr. Tatton of the established church, and was seconded, in equally effective addresses, by the Dissenting and Roman Catholic clergymen of the neighborhood. At the preparatory meeting for the county of Monaghan the Roman Catholic bishop (Dr. M'Nally) took a prominent part in the proceedings; indeed, the Freeman's Journal mentions, with approbation, that "the countenance which the Catholic hierarchy give to the Patriotic Fund by attendances in so many instances at the meetings, and by their own generous contributions, invest the work with the highest sanction in the sight of the Catholic population of the country."—Dublin Letter.

London's Larder.

If we fix on Hyde Park as our exhibition ground, and pile together all the barrels of beer consumed in London, they would form a thousand columns not far short of a mile in perpendicular height. Let us imagine ourselves on the top of this tower, and we shall have a look-out worthy of the feast we are about to summon to our feet. Here from we might discover the great northern road stretching far away into the length and breath of the land. Lo! as we look, a mighty herd of oxen with loud bellowing are beheld approaching from the north. For miles and miles the mass of horns is conspicuous, winding along the road ten abreast, and even thus the last animal of the herd would be seventy-two miles away, and the drover goading his shrinking flanks considerably beyond Peterborough. On the other side of the park, as the clouds of dust clear away, we see the great western road as far as the eye can reach, thronged with a beating mass of wool, and the shepherd at the end of the flock, ten abreast, and the dog that is worrying the last sheep, are just leaving the environs of Bristol, 121 miles from our beer-built pillar. Along Piccadilly, Regent street, the Strand, Fleet street, Cheapside, and the eastward Mile End Road line for 7½ miles, street and causeway are thronged with calves, still ten abreast, and in the great parallel thoroughfares of Bayswater, Oxford street and Holborn, we see nothing for nine long miles but a slowly-pacing, deeply-grunting herd of swine. As we watch this moving mass approaching from all points of the horizon, the air suddenly becomes dark—a black pall seems drawn over the sky—it is the flock of birds—game, poultry and wild fowl, that, like Mrs. Bond's ducks, are come up to be killed; as they fly wing to wing and tail to beak, they form a square whose superficies is not much less than the whole enclosed portion of St. James' Park, or 51 acres. No sooner does this huge flight clear away, than we behold the park at our feet inundated with hares and rabbits. Feeding 2,000 abreast, they extend from the marble arch to the round pond in Kensington Garden—at least a mile. Let us now pile up all the half-quartern loves consumed in the metropolis in the year, and we shall find they form a pyramid which measures 200 square feet at its base, and extends into the air a height of 1,293 feet, or nearly three times that of St. Paul's. Turning now towards the sound of rushing waters, we find that the seven companies are filling the mains for the day. If they were allowed to flow into the arena of the adjacent St. James' Park, they would, in the course of twenty-four hours, flood its entire space with a depth of 30 inches of water, and the whole annual supply would be quite sufficient to submerge the city (one mile square) 90 feet. Of the fish, we confess we are able to say nothing. When numbers amount to billions, the calculation become too trying to our patience. We have little doubt, however, they would be quite sufficient to make the Serpentine one solid mass. Of ham and bacon, again, preserved meats, and all the countless comeatibles, we have taken no account—and, in truth, they are little more to the great mass, than the ducks and geese were in Sancho Panza's celebrated mess—"the skimmings of the pot." Such, then, is a slight sketch of the great London larder.—Quarterly Review: Article, The Commissariat of London.

The New York Herald, commenting on the recent election, and the death blow to the hopes of the rummies, who left no stone unturned to defeat Clark, says:—

"Thus it will be seen that the ordinary channels of emigration are closed to this ornamental class of our fellow citizens.—But there is one place—one elysium—one happy family—one epicurean retreat—one delicious paradise where their exertions will be appreciated and their efforts rewarded—the City of Washington! The opening is a magnificent one. We have thirty millions of money in the treasury, and only three months (holidays out) to spend it in. The City is an immense rumshop. The Kitchen Cabinet lives on rum, entirely—members of Congress drink rum all day and all night, and between all their speeches—there is rum in the White House—rum on the avenue—rum overflowing in the Hotels—rum in the drawing rooms—rum in the boudoirs—rum in the lobby—rum in the Speaker's room—rum in the committee rooms—in fact the capitol itself is filled with rum from dome to corner stone.

There is no Maine law in Washington—probably there never will be; and during the coming session of Congress there will be more robbery, more corruption, more clutching at the spoils, more thieving, more lobbying, more giving away of the public lands, more lying, more intemperance, more immorality, more unblushing effrontery, and more rascality of all kinds in the city of Washington than in any other place in Christendom—or heathendom either, for that matter.

Nebraska, California, Central America, pale before the brilliancy of the national capital. The grogshop politicians' Emigrant Aid Society must go to Washington or no where; they cannot remain here after we become a temperate State, and in Washington they will find worthy coadjutors—men who have been elevated to office by rum will not desert their old friends. Then let the grogshop banner be flung to the breeze. Ho! for Washington—rum, riot, robbery and the spoils!"

A Philanthropist—Buxton Mission.

There is some philanthropy in man or woman, when there is a set design, attendant with heavy cost perhaps, and sole devoted time and labor given, for the amelioration of any portion of our race. The Rev. William King, of this Mission (under the charge of the [Free] Presbyterian church of Canada,) is a philanthropist—for he has undertaken to look over, officiate as Minister, and act the part of a father, to a colony of coloured persons, mostly from the slavery of the south, in a settlement in Raleigh township, County of Kent. In the October number of the Record of said church, is a brief sketch given of the settlement. It wants that of its earlier portion, to be better understood, with a forgetting and not a remembering public. We the more particularly notice this colony, from the example its people gives to the inhabitants of another race around them,—for "the Sabbath is observed in a most exemplary way, and nothing that intoxicates is manufactured or sold in the settlement"—[vide Record] There are generous minded persons in Canada, who would give independent of any congregational or synodical collections, (which are made), a new stamp, a "ring," a "clink," to the metal of their generosity, by transmitting a few dollars in the Rev. Mr. King's way, for to help "in the moral guidance" of the people and place—see the Record—Address—Rev. William King—Buxton Mission—Buxton P. O., C. W.—The Challenge, Stratford C. W.

The Maine Law Sham!

The Temperance Bill will, I fear be lost through the trimming character of its managers. I gave notice of a Maine Law bill early last September; so did Mr. Felton, a lawyer from Sherbrooke, whose family has long found the advantage of looking to whoever had the purse-strings of Canada for their political action. As he seemed to be entrusted with that slowgoing fair-weather reformer, Mr. M. Cameron's bill of 1853, I gave way, and after I had had some correspondence on the subject with the President of the N. Y. State Temperance Society, and with Mr. Neal Dow, General Carey of Ohio, and Mr. Greeley, I confined my action to speaking for the second reading and sitting in Committee where some amendments were made.

Sometime since the bill was re-printed, as amended but no persuasion can induce Mr. Felton, who has charge of it, or Mr. Patrick, the chairman of the Committee, to push the amended bill to a vote, consequently those who detest the Maine Law, and all reforms that raise the masses to a higher level, will have the credit, if we go to a new election, of their sham support at the second reading, but nothing will be done.

To encourage sobriety!!! Messrs. McNab, Cayley, Hincks, Spence & Co., have just produced a tariff of only five pence on the gallon of whiskey; twenty pence on rum; brandy the gallon, three shillings; gin half a dollar—one shilling for a gallon of the poorest light wines—no more for Bishop Strachan or Lord Elgin's south side Maderia or sparkling Champaigne!!

The Yankee varies the taxes on gin and rum—McNab, Hincks & Spence are keeping us down here to lower them! Jonathan allows Tea and Coffee to come into his ports free, and sugar at a moderate rate.—SPENCE, Cayley and Hincks tax Tea, Coffee, Sugar, &c. If the wholesale price of raw sugar, per cwt. is 21s. (the average of last year's entries at Toronto,) they propose, by the tariff we are now discussing, to tax the cwt. 7s. 6d. Even pimento and black pepper are to pay two pence per lb. at the custom houses, in order to keep up the four million dollars of floating cash in the chest, for use of our speculators.—McKenzie's Message.

A Yankee in Canada.

MR. PAPINEAU'S RESIDENCE ON THE OTTAWA.

A writer in the Buffalo Express, thus speaks of Canada, its scenery, &c. We have room for a short extract only:—

Having just finished a ramble of two months through the Canadas, I have been induced to offer a few remarks which I trust may not be uninteresting, especially to the travelling community of this country.

It is singular that a country possessing so many scenes of rich, romantic beauty, and places of health and happy resort, should have hitherto remained comparatively unknown to the visiting public. The Canadian climate is more regular, and, consequently, more healthy than many parts of the States; while the country at large present every variety of scenery, from the lofty mountains of Lochaber, whose proud peaks the golden winged eagle alone can inhabit, to the beautiful ranges of Western Huron, where the proud oak stands in giant majesty, and whose waters roll in limpid streams beneath their mossy banks, sometimes forming a fretted ripple and sometimes expanding into silver lakes.

Among the most attractive places, presenting a magnificent combination of natural grandeur and the almost incredible conquests of art, is Bytown and the surrounding country. This town is on the south bank of the Grand River, within ten hours ride of Montreal by steamboats. As the tourist approaches Bytown en route for the east, he beholds the residence of Papineau, situated on a prominent rising on the north bank of the Ottawa. His house, which is elegantly built of cut stone, commands an extended view of the river, both east and west; and from it, in various directions through the forest, are roads and paths built in a costly and tasty manner. Mr. Papineau has here many tenants, who live in small houses, and subsist more by lumbering than by cultivation of the soil. Here the scenery is stern and wild. The spectator is often struck with the picturesque combination of natural beauty, as formed by the high ledges of rock which overhang the river, and the tall pine-clad mountains, down whose sides the gentle brook winds its gurgling way, lending life and sweetness to the grouping of trees and clustering of flowers, till it falls in the torrents beneath.—North American.

The Gale on Lake Erie.

The gale at Cleveland, some particulars of which we have received by telegraph, has been most violent and destructive, and the loss of property along the lakes must be quite large. We find in Cleveland papers some incidents connected with the storm, which are of interest. The barque Trade Wind, whose loss has been recorded in our paper, had on board, among a large quantity of other freight, two Government life-boats, which were being forwarded to the Upper Lakes. The crew were very much annoyed at the encumbrance they made, being stowed on the upper deck, in their way, should a storm occur. Captain Judson, hearing their complaints, casually remarked that said life-boats might be of service to them before they got through the lake. That very day, during a thick and blinding snow storm off long Point, the barque came in collision with the brig Chas. Napier, and sunk so suddenly that the crew had just time enough to get into these same life-boats and were all saved. In noticing the loss of the schooner R. R. Johnson, with all on board, the Plain Dealer gives some interesting particulars of the mournful affair. At Chicago, whence the ill-fated vessel had sailed, Capt. Snell, her owner and commander, put her in charge of the mate, who was his brother, and left her to make her way down the lakes, while he took the railroad for the purpose of getting a special insurance upon her in Buffalo. She weathered the storms, passed over the flats, and beat her way down to this lake, when the big north-wester of Sunday caught her this side the islands. The next they seen of her was at daylight on Monday morning, about two miles west of Fairport and twenty rods from shore, beached, and the men hanging in her rigging. She lay broadside to, and every sea careened her over so as to bring her masts under water, and of course immersed the poor fellows clinging there for life. She was first discovered by a family of farmers living opposite on the bluff which overlooked the wreck. They immediately despatched a messenger to the harbor for a life-boat. They watched the sufferers on the wreck until one by one they were washed off, so that when the life-boat started for their relief, there were but three remaining. Intensely excited did they beckon the boat on, which for two miles rowed amid surges and breakers that one-half the time hid the rescuers from view. Two more of the sufferers are washed off by the sea, and yet the boat has some half mile to row. One, probably the most hardy and robust of them all, remains. He seems lashed to the rigging and rises and falls with it as it dives beneath the surge, then rises with it to nearly a perpendicular. The boat is almost to him, when suddenly that mast disappears again, and he rises no more! All on board, nine in number, have been lost, and none left to tell the tale of their suffering. Portions of the wreck coming ashore revealed the fact, that it was the schooner R. R. Johnson. The farmer's house we have described was the very home of the mate, and the family on shore who had sent after the life-boat was the family of the mate. In all probability the man who hung to the rigging so long was the mate himself, as he was a very resolute and robust man. Thus in sight of his family and home he died a martyr to his mysterious fate, his wife unconsciously a spectator of the terrible scene. There is probably not on record a coincidence so strange, where a wife at her own home should witness the wreck of her husband at sea. Among those lost on board the schooner was Mr. John Gallager, of this city.—Buffalo paper.

EFFECTS OF THE STORM.—During the storm on Sunday night, a bateau containing five individuals, was driven on a shoal off the Island of St. Helens. The people on board had no boat, and were unable to extricate themselves, and being destitute of food and fuel, were in danger of perishing from inanition and cold. By some means their po-ition became known at the City Hall, and His Worship the Mayor promptly directed our active and intelligent chief of police to take the necessary measures for the rescue of the people on board, which was immediately effected. But for the assistance so rendered, the men might have perished even in sight of the city. The effects of the gale were felt with equal severity lower down the St. Lawrence. At Quebec the communication was entirely interrupted between the two shores of the river. The mails could not be dispatched, and $400 was refused by the steamers to carry them over to the railway terminus. The tide rose to an height unknown for many years, and did a vast amount of damage to the stores and houses of the Lower Town. Business was generally put a stop to by the severity and inclemency of the weather, whole streets were submerged, and light goods in the cellars and basements were floating about in the water. Many warehouses were damaged from this cause and many houses had the roofs and chimney pots blown away. Altogether the storm was one of the severest on record, but we have not heard that any lives were lost during its continuance either at Montreal or Quebec.—Montreal Pilot.

In Woodstock, on Saturday week, a constable was deliberately shot down, while in the act of arresting a supposed gang; but what steps were taken to secure the capture of the murderer, we have yet to learn. Near Jordan, on Wednesday morning last, Richard Minette's house was forcibly entered, and $140 abstracted, the burglars at the same time intimating to Mrs. M. (the only person in the house at the moment) "that if she gave the slightest alarm, they would blow her brains out."

BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN, BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

The Angel's Garden.

BY DAVID D. BENTON.

An Angel from the climes above,
Came, on the pinions of a Dove,
To plant our cold and sterile clime
With seeds matured in Eden's prime.

She sought, with culture, to control
One moral zone from pole to pole,
Dotted with gardens o'er the plain,
Each one a spirit's fair domain.

Gardens upon the mount of Pride,
Where rocks and glittering snows abide,
Swept by the storms of angry strife,
Could never give her fruitage life.

Nor on the scorched and barren plains,
Where thirsty, niggard Avarice reigns
Though stored with many a golden mine,
Could thrive her plants of joy divine.

Wintering Poultry.

I am not sensible of having a touch of the poultry fever, but I am satisfied that farmers might generally winter them in a manner to receive a greater profit for their outlay. For several years I have adopted a plan which has been a great improvement on the old one of feeding them once or twice a day. Firstly, they should have a place in which to winter, so warm that one seldom gets his comb frozen. Mine winter under my horse barn, which is twenty-four by forty-eight feet. Under the north half of the barn is a cellar for roots, and the bottom of the sill, a trifle above the level ground on the north end. The land descends to the south, sufficiently to have an open shed under the south half, which is ten feet from the ground to the sill, and has a good substantial stone wall in lime mortar on three sides of it, but open to the south. Over this shed or open cellar are my stables, and the manure passes through the floor.

This shed is occupied by cows and poultry, though the poultry have the same range they had in summer. Their roosting place is in one corner of this shed, just below the sills, with a shelf by the side of the roost. As soon as they require feeding in the fall, I set a large box of corn or other feed on the shelf and keep a good supply by them. For a fortnight they will consume more food than before, then become fat, and the rest of the winter I think they require no more food than by the old method. The result has invariably been, if they stop laying in December, many of them commence in January and February, and through the spring months they do better than they did by the old treatment, and if a fat chicken is wanted, they are sure to be found without the trouble of cooping expressly to fatten.

FROM LIQUOR TO LITERATURE.—"In the Texas market," says a correspondent, "the demand has suddenly changed from Liquor to Literature. Public Libraries and Reading Rooms are taking the place of Grog Shops and Billiard Saloons in this new and prosperous State."—Puritan Recorder.

UNAPPRECIATED POLITENESS.—A droll story is told of an honest farmer who, attempting to drive home a bull, got suddenly hoisted over the fence. Recovering himself, he saw the animal on the other side of the rails sawing the air with his head and neck and pawing the ground. The good old man looked steadily at him for a moment, and then, shaking his fist at him, exclaimed,

'Darn your apologies; you needn't stand there, you tarnal critter, a bowing and scraping; you did it on purpose, darn your curly picture?"

A SHY YOUTH.—"Everything is arranged for your wedding with Susan Tomkins," said a father to his only son. "Hope you will behave yourself like a man Thomas. "The individual addressed was a young man, seated on a chair, despatching a piece of bread and molasses. His only answer was a sigh, accompanied with a flood of tears. The parent started, and in an angry voice exclaimed—'What objections can you have? Susan is handsome and wealthy, and married you must be, some time or other. Your mother, and I were married, and it is my command that you prepare yourself for your nuptials" "Yes," finally sobbed Thomas, "that's a different thing. You married mother, but I'm sent to marry a strange gal!"

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada afterAffecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number

PRESIDENT.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

TREASURER.

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on commercial considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to do all we can to assist the plans now maturing to spread the cause of Her Majesty's subjects against mother, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics [illegible] of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all our power in our associate capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st. To promote a healthy harmony and fraternal feeling among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come [illegible]. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or Presses, in Canada, which shall stand on the watch tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of men in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly British, and thereby rent from white emigrants who may and do settle in Canada, the fairest heritage, the former to be a "coast peasantry" the latter, as their ghost ambition; or to aggregate themselves as to exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the latter, in preference to the free soil of Canada, thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that Great Britain, to check its progress in America by accumulations, and as to its [illegible] consign a certain generation of [illegible], servile, and mechanical others. 3rd. As a nucleus of operations, to support the Provincial Freeman, as our organ, so long as it may be found to work sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specfic object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS,
JOHN D. PECK,
AMOS G. BEMAN,
JOHN JONES,
J. D. BONNER,
J. MCCUNE SMITH,
Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Aliened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.
By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.
By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.
By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.
By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.
A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.
A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress," &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ TO EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

From the Bradford Chronicle.

SUNSET.

BY THE FOREST BARD.

Softly o'er the landscape falling
Sunset sheds her dappled glow;
Deep, to deep, in praise is calling:
Praise ascends from all below.
On the mountain tops are beaming,
Golden wreathes, from fleecy clouds;
In the vale fair nature's dreaming,
O'er the scenes which beauty shrouds.

Far away, the west is blazing,
Lit by lamps whose flames of gold,
Gild the curtains night is raising,
Sol's bright western couch to fold;
There with gildings overarching,
In the richly painted west,
Wearied from his midday marching,
Sinks the day king to his rest;

Carvings rich and noble mouldings
Beautify his couch's stand,
Damask clouds, in downy folds hings,
Wrought by nature's master hand.
In the looms of heaven, woven,
Angel hands have form'd them all,
Then by God's own sceptre cloven,
Round his throne they let them fall.

Rich and roseate colors steeping,
Shed their soft and varied dyes;
Gentle stars behind them peeping,
Softly beam like angel eyes,
And while angels stand, admiring,
As the sight of day grows dim,
Man and earth in praise aspiring,
Swell a holy vesper hymn.

And as day to eve has dwindled
Yonder comes the car of night;
White her lamp the moon has kindled
Here to guide her steps aright.
Now her sable pall she's flinging
Deeply over nature's breast,
As her vesper song she's singing
Mortals sleep to rest—to rest.

Coburg, 1851.

Miscellaneous.

SUNSET.

Sunset is a comparatively familiar sight; yet it is not every day that here, in the less fortunate parts of the temperate zone, we can behold it to advantage. During many months of the year, we move about muffled up to the chin in cloaks or greatcoats, and think more of hiding our noses in the fur, than of exhilarating our fancies by gazing at the vapoury tabernacle which rises in gorgeous colours upon the western horizon. Nature with us is not lavish of her beauties. Our habitual atmosphere is an atmosphere of fog, or haze, or clouds. Sometimes, on the sea-shore, or amid the mountains, we obtain casual glimpses, which may enable us to form some idea of what real sunsets are far south beyond the Alps, or on the other side of the Mediterranean, where Africa reveals to a favoured view the gorgeous magic of her skies. A Danish naturalist, nutured amid Scandinavian morasses, amused himself with the fancy, that the stars and constellations, on a cold frosty night, are as brilliant in the arctic circle as within the tropics. But this was mere self-delusion. The whole host of heaven seems shrivelled and shrunken, and very much in want of shelter, as they march through the chilly solitudes of a hyperborean night. In tropical skies, their liquid splendour dilates visibly before the eye, till they glow and glitter almost like so many planets. It is the same with sunset. All the vapour that exists on the horizon is interpenetrated and inflamed with light up to the very zenith; and according as it is dense or rare, diffused or accumulated, is converted into every variety of colour by the sun's vital beams, which spread and glow, and ripple in the clouds, and turn them into seas and islands, mountains and moors, forests and chasms, water-falls and supernal arches and domes, and towers and minarets rising piled above each other to the starry crest of the empyream. With elements such as these, poetry delights to build up her airy creations. Of old, it was amid the wastes of she sky, glowing with infinite grandeur, that the bards sought and found their Hippocrene. They sat on the slopes of Pindus or of Pelion of Cythaeron, Parnes, or Latmos, till the rays of the burning west, kindling up crag and forest, appeared to convert the aerial summits above and around them into celestial dwelling-places. Then it was that real inspiration flowed from the circumnambient heaven into their souls. The lyres and harps on which they played were not martial instruments manufactured by moral hands, but a mighty mixture of harp and lyre fabricated by Olympian gods, and sounding forever about them in the etherial heights of the universe. Content with enjoying, the older poets seldom sought to describe, though gushes of golden light sometimes poured into their verses. What they sought to embody was the inner universe of thought—sentiment, and emotion. In later times, their successors have endeavoured to rival nature herself in the gorgeousness of their pictures; but if we desire to borrow what they have written, we find it so interwoven with other things, that, when detached, it seems imperfect, abrupt, fragmentary. Shakspeare, though full of brilliant imagery, scarcely supplies a single passage sufficiently long and complete to be quoted; and Spenser's pictures are little better than miniatures. Milton first exhibited the strength which could dare to wrestle with nature on these fields of glory. His morning and evening landscapes, glowing with bright colours, and fresh with the dews of Eden, are among the most beautiful in the dominions of the Muses.

Shelley, in descriptions of sunset, has no superior. His language, when he undertakes to delineate the rapid changes and brilliant colours of the sky, exhibits a glow, a richness, and a splendour only inferior to the phenomena which he endeavours to paint by words. Exhibiting in other respects bad taste and incapacity to regulate his own ideas, he here displays uncommon felicity both in conception and language. His words, as they fall into their places, form, as it were, the richest patterns on the mind, and arrange before the imagination pictures of almost unexampled splendour. He was probably not an early riser; and therefore when he speaks of the cool dawn and the glowing sunrise, he draws more from fancy than from nature, and his landscapes are rathes modificatious of sunset than reproductions of nature's aspect at the glowing advent of the Titan. Let us, however, accept the beauty and sublimity he offers us. Picturesque poetry in all her treasury has nothing finer:—

If solitude hath ever led thy steps
To the wild ocean's echoing shore,
And thou hast lingered there
Until the sun's broad orb
Seemed resting on the burnished wave—
Thou must have marked the lines
Of purple gold, that motionless
Hung o'er the sinking sphere—
Thou must have marked the billowy clouds
Edged with intolerable radiancy,
Towering like rocks of jet,
Crowned with a diamond wreath;
And yet there is a moment
When the sun's highest point
Peeps like a star o'er ocean's western edge
When those far clouds of feathery gold
Shaded with deepest purple, gleam
Like islands on a dark blue sea.

Miss Martineau on Egypt.

One impression has taken me by surprise. I used to wonder, and always did till now, at that stupidity of the Israelites which so angered their leader—their pining after Egypt after finding it impossible to live there. It was inconceivable how they could long to go back to a place of such cruel oppression for the sake of every thing it could give. I now wonder no longer, having seen and felt the desert, and knowing the charms of the valley of the Nile. One evening lately, just at sunset, the scene struck upon my heart, oppressing it with the sense of beauty. A village was beside an extensive grove of palms, which sprang from out of the thickest and richest clove, to the height of eighty feet. Their tops wave gently in the soft breeze which ruffled the surface of a blue pond, lying among grassy shores. There were golden lights, and sharp shadows among the banks, where a stream had lately made its way. The yellow sand hills of the desert just showed themselves between the stems of the more scattered palms. Within view, were some carefully tilled fields, with strong wheat, lupins, and purple bean blossoms, and some melon and cucumber patches were not far off: cattle were tethered beside the houses, and on a bank near sat an old woman and girl basking in the last rays of the sun, with evident enjoyment, though the magical covering given by an Egyptian atmosphere could not be so striking as to English eyes. But what must it have been in the memory of the Israelites wandering in the desert, where there is no color except at sunset, but only glare—parched rocks and choking dust or sand. I will not attempt now, for no one has ever succeeded in such an attempt, to convey any impression of the appalling dreariness of the depths of the desert. I can only say that when it rose up before me in contrast with that nook of a valley at sunset, I at last understood the surrender of heart and reason on the part of the Israelites, and could sympathize in their forgetfulness of their past woes—in their pining for verdure and streams, for shade and good food, and for a perpetual sight of the adored river, instead of the hateful sight which hemmed them in whichever way they turned.

Weaving by Electricity.

The invention of Cavaliere Bonelli, for the application of electricity to weaving, is more simple, less embarrassing, and what is of far greater importance, more economical than the invention of Jacquard. By the present invention, instead of the numberless and expensive cartoons, either full or hollow, you see small iron bars magnetized only when united with the voltaic current, so that while at every passage of the shuttle it was necessary to change a cartoon, it now suffices to vary the ways which give passage to the electric fluid, and the londstones change their action every moment according as the teeth of the comb under which the design passes, and with which they correspond, rest upon the conducting or insulating substance. As the point of the pantograph reproduces a design diminished or enlarged, and as the point of Bain's telegraph exactly copies a signature at the distance of hundreds of miles, so the loom of Bonelli reproduces woven the designs which pass under the comb, and all this without rendering necessary a change in the thousands of Jacquard looms now existing, which, if desired, may be worked alternately with electricity and with cartoons.

Turin first, then Geno, Lyons, and Paris, saw in operation this prodigious innovation, and unanimously admired the simplicity and reliability of the means with which it is carried into effect. In these cities a loom on a large scale has been shown; but the inventer intends shortly to exhibit in Paris and London a loom worthy of the places and the invention. After having secured the property in his discovery throughout Europe, he has just sold his patents to three eminent banking houses, two of them in Turin and one in Lyons, and very soon several looms, which are now being constructed, will be sent abroad to serve as models for the system of electric weaving in most of the manufacturing countries of Europe; and for its introduction into the United States of America an agent is now on the point of starting. It is difficult to foresee the changes which may spring from the application of this new agent to the business of weaving, as not only the economy consequent on it may induce a decline of prices, but the new means afforded by this invention will render easily attainable results such as are now only reached with difficulty or with great expense, as Gobelin tapestry, &c., and others utterly unattainable by any means hitherto known. Even in the present age, so rich in useful and important inventions, no doubt this will rank among the first.

Make Farm Life Attractive.

Why do your young men run, as by some universal instinct, from the farm, where they were born, to the city, where they so often learn to wish they had not been born anywhere? Chiefly, whatever explanation they may put forward as having a handsomer look—chiefly because on the farm there is supposed to be an inevitable doom to hard, monotonous, wearing bodily toil, from daylight till sundown, life through, with no room for mental expansion, or generous tastes, or social recreation; and, secondly, because, after all this labor, the farmer makes too little money. Nor will my faith in young men's natures suffer me to believe this is always a sordid calculation with them. For, in thinking of money, they think of it oftener as a means than an end. They want it for what it brings. On the farm, very frequently are rooms without books, walls without pictures, manners without grace, clothes without fitness, ground without shape or decoration. On the contrary, the city merchant buys a library and works of art, sends his children to schools where they learn to move with elegance as well as to cipher and parse, gets garments that are finer and fit, and is not so exhausted physically at nightfall as to prefer sleep to any company or book. He comes back into the country, and lays out a beautiful estate, somtimes with statelier animals, and selecter fruits, and tidier fences and hedges, and more blooming gardens on it, than his neighbor, who has all the while been staying there and making farming the business of his life. Now, it would be a hard task in persuasion to convince most young men that these things are not good, not desirable, and that the dollars which command them are not of the nature of an advantage. I confess I should be a bad subject for such persuasion myself. Besides, these things are all of the nature of picture-work, the boy cannot help seeing them; they work upon him while he stops on his way from pasture under the fragrant shrubbery, or peeps through the pickets at the mellow peaches and pears.

I know perfectly how apt his sanguine blood, and his ignorance of the ninety odd failures in a city for every single success, are to put a fallacy into his plans and cheat his choice. But none the less is it true, what he goes to the city for, a chance, though but a chance, for certain means of refinement, diversity, and width in the whole style of life, such as scarcely a mere farmer about, in the old way of farming, has displayed. Who ever knew a confident and chivalrous youth to doubt he should be one of the five that succeed, though five hundred fail? And, moreover, many very men at that aspiring period of life, have the charm and glory of early ideas have failed, that have only for more stately temples to inhabit, more enlarging aspirations to thought, than they have found in rural places. The shiny dream of finding in the pressure of crowd and the sharp collisions of traffic. Perhaps they dream delusions; but they are dreams. Depend upon it, if you would have your sons and brothers back from turning away into the perilous centers, you must steadily make three attempts—to abate the taskwork of farming, to raise maximum crops and profits, and to surround your work with the exhilaration of intellectual progress. You must elevate the whole spirit of your vocation, for your vocation's sake, till no other can outstrip in what most adorns and strengthens a civilized state.—Address of Rev. F. D. Huntington, before Norfolk, Mass. Agricultural Society, 1853.

HOMINY.—In point of economy, as human food, one bushel of beans or hominy is equal to ten of potatoes. Hominy, too, is a dish almost as universally liked as potatoes, and at the South about as freely eaten, while at the North it is seldom seen. In fact, it is an unknown food, except to a few persons in cities. By hominy, we do not mean a sort of coarse meal, but grains of white corn, from which the hull and chit, or eye, has been removed, by moistening and pounding in a wooden mortar, leaving the grains almost whole, and composed of little else but starch. It has often been said that not one cook in ten knows how to boil a potato. We may add another cipher when speaking of the very simple process of cooking hominy. We give the formula from our own experience and instructions in a land where "hog and hominy" are well understood. Wash slightly in cold water, and soak twelve hours in tepid, soft water; then boil slowly from three to twelve hours in the same water, with plenty more added from time to time, with great care to prevent burning. Do not salt while cooking, as that or hard water will harden the corn. So it will peas or beans, green or dry, and rice also. When done, add butter and salt; or a better way is to let each season to suit the taste. It may be eaten with meat in lieu of vegetables, or with sugar or syrup. It is good hot or cold, and the more frequently it is warmed over, like the old-fashioned pot of "Bean-porridge hot, or bean-porridge cold,

Bean-porridge best nine days old."

So is hominy—it is good always, and very wholesome, and like tomatoes, only requires to be eaten once or twice to fix the taste in its favor.—Journal of Health.

The Maine Law in New York.

The Buffalo Democracy indulges in the following happy reflections on the result of the election:—"God governing the world. Nor Chance, nor Satan regulate the affairs of Man's life. Devoutly grateful are we for that interposition of the godlike principle of Beneficence, to save the people of the great State of New York from two years more of Slavery to Rum and Misgovernment, which has resulted in the election of Myron H. Clark, as our Governor, and the defeat of the Veto Seymour. A new era dawns on the civilization of the Empire State. Crime and Taxation shall diminish within her borders, Pauperism shall dry up. The Sorrow, Shame, Want, and Degradation, offspring of Drunkenness, shall vanish from before men's eyes like a hideous dream. Intellect, education, and noble qualities of manly character, can now assuredly be conceived to Society, and rescued from Rum and the Devil. Fathers and mothers, the time is at hand when the education of your sons will be a measurably safe and easy labor. You can mould them to virtue, usefulness and the inheritence of your excellencies, with but little danger that Drunkenness will undo your work, and directly or indirectly pull down and destroy fabrics that God designed for perfection and immortality. You can part too with your daughters in marriage, with comforting assurance that their future happiness has a guarantee against the curse of inebriety in the husband.

We congratulate the readers of the Democracy upon the sure promise of a Prohibitory Liquor Law in the State of New York, as the fruit of the election of Myron A. Clark. Had the kind Father offered to our choice the richest gift Heaven has in store for the State, none could we take so fruitful of good, so every way desirable, as will be the Maine Law! And we will have it.

Now upon this head, it is well for all parties to come early to an understanding. Gentlemen liquor dealers, you have been fairly dealt by. You have had a fair field and a fair fight. You made up the issue "Rum or Temperance," on a candidate of your own selection—you had full preparation for the struggle—you fought it with vast, almost overwhelming odds, in your favor, and you are beat! Before this election you had ample opportunities to contest the principle of Prohibition. You did it one, two, three, four years ago at the election of members of the Legislature. You fought it in the Assembly and in the Senate. Beaten there, Seymour covered you with his Veto, and saved you. You have had the fullest, fairest notice men could have, of a Peoples determination that the business you pursue should come to an end. Now don't snivel or whine, we beg of you. Stand right up to the rank.

The purpose to enact a Maine Law is inexorable. Nothing short of a general paralysis, or a State earthquake, can prevent it. And there will be no procrastination, nor any cushioned, easy gradualism about it either. It will come as peremptorily, and as briefly as did the wicked Veto. The people this winter will say "We Forbid It,"—and before the waving of the next summers' grass, this beneficient mandate will be in process of execution. Upon the possible contingency of a resistance to the Law, we will not at present speak—save to say, that if it shall require bayonets and ball cartridges, it shall have them to its utmost necessities. The Law will be enforced at any sacrifice whatsoever. Let all interested take notice of this."

THE MAINE LAW RUMMY.—Last evening we met a hard bruiser at the dying bed of his relative. We had known him twenty years. In his cups he was a tearing tiger, worse than a bear if he could pass his powerful arms around friend or foe; in his sober hours, the mildest of the mild—the gentlest of the gentle—a hard working honest man.

We said to him "——, to-morrow comes election. You would have always been a Democrat, but oh! if you would but vote for the Maine Law Governor and help to drive rum and demagoguism back to their loathsome den" He grasped our hand in his hard palm, and with the tear starting from his eye, said in a voice of earnestness, such as never fails, "to-morrow, I and my two boys vote for Myron H. Clark. I have a hop-yard, but I care nothing for that. I cannot resist temptation so long as it is thrown in my way. They may make me drunk to-morrow, but I shall vote first. Last year they intoxicated me before voting, but still while drunk I voted for a Maine Law Assembly-man. And so it is. Such is a specimen of many a man whom the God-accurst traffic is dooming to death. O God! send its early doom.—Cayuga Chief.

From the Moniteur

Napoleon's Letter to his Army.

PALACE OF ST. CLOUD, Nov. 24, 1854.

To the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the East:

GENERAL,—Your report respecting the victory of Inkermann has excited much emotion in my mind. Express in my name to the Army, my entire satisfaction with the courage it has displayed with its enemy, in supporting fatigue and privations, and its warm cordiality towards its Allies. Thank the Generals, the Officers and the Soldiers for their valiant conduct. Tell them that I warmly sympathize with their misfortunes and with the cruel losses they have experienced, and that my constant solicitude shall be directed to the task of softening the bitterness of them. After the brilliant victory of the Alma, I had hoped for a moment that the routed army of the enemy would not so easily have repaired its losses, and that Sebastopol would soon have fallen under our attacks; but the obstinate defence of that town and the reinforcements received by the Russian army have for the moment, arrested the course of our success. I approve of the resistance you made to the impatience of the troops who wished to make the assault under circumstances which would have entailed too considerable loss.

The English and French Governments direct their serious attention to the armies in the East. Already steamers are traversing the seas with considerable reinforcements. This increase of assistance will double your forces, and enable you to assume the offensive. A powerful division is about to take place in Bessarabia, and I receive the assurance that from day to day in foreign countries public opinion becomes more and more favourable to us. If Europe should have seen, without alarm, our eagles, so long banished, displayed with so much eclat, it is because Europe knows that we are only fighting for its independence. If France has resumed the position to which she is entitled, and if victory has again attended upon our banners, it is—I declare it with pride—to the patriotism and indomitable bravery of the army that I owe it.

I send General de Montebello, one of my Aides-de-camp, to convey to the army the rewards which it has so well merited.

In the meantime, General, I pray God to have you in his holy keeping.

NAPOLEON.

From the Manchester Examiner.

Mr. Bright, M. P., and the War.

The following correspondence has been handed to us for publication:—

MANCHESTER, Oct. 27, 1854.

DEAR SIR,—In the few words which I exchanged with you in the street, a short time ago, you declared the present war to be one of the wickedest things that this country had ever engaged in. I believe those were your words, or, at least, to that effect. Now, as I have a sincere respect for your well-considered opinion, and as I have come to a very opposite conclusion, your dictum sent me to such books as I possess on the law of nations, and especially to "Vattell;" and, oddly enough, I found that more than a quarter of a century ago I had consulted his pages as to the justice or otherwise of the first crusade. My reading has confirmed my first opinion; and as Manchester will meet next Thursday, to commence a subscription for the widows and orphans of those who fall in the contest, and as the members for Manchester ought to be there, I shall be exceedingly pleased if you will then state the conclusive reasons for your condemnation of the war, and enable us to determine either to give it our hearty support or then and there to PETITION FOR PEACE.

Believe me to be, with esteem and respect, yours truly,

ABSALOM WATKIN.

JOHN BRIGHT, Esq., M. P.

RHYL, North Wales, Oct. 20, 1854.

MY DEAR SIR,—I think, on further consideration, you will perceive that the meeting on Thursday next would be a most improper occasion for a discussion as to the justice of the war. Just or unjust, the war is a fact, and the men whose lives are miserably thrown away in it have clearly a claim upon the country, and especially upon those who, by the expression of opinions favourable to the war, have made themselves responsible for it. I cannot, therefore, for a moment, appear to discourage the liberality of those who believe the war to be just, and whose utmost generosity, in my opinion, will but make a wretched return for the ruin they have brought upon hundreds of families.

With regard to the war itself, I am not surprised at the difference between your opinion and mine, if you decide a question of this nature by an appeal to "Vattal." The "law of nations" is not my law, and, at best, it is a code full of confusion and contradictions, having its foundation on custom, and not on a higher morality; and on custom which has been determined by the will of the strongest. It may be a question of some interest whether the first crusade was in accordance with the law and principle of "Vattell;" but whether the first crusade was just, and whether the policy of the crusaders was a wise policy, is a totally different question. I have no doubt that the American war was a just war according to the principles laid down by writers on the "law of nations," and yet no man in his senses in this country will now say that the policy of George III. towards the American colonies was a wise policy, or that war a righteous war. The French war, too, was doubtless just according to the same authorities; for there were fears, and anticipated dangers to be combatted, and law and order to be sustained in Europe; and yet few intelligent men now believe the French war to have been either necessary or just. You must excuse me if I refuse to pin my faith upon "Vattel." There have been writers on international law who have attempted to show that private assassination and the poisoning of wells were justifiable in war; and perhaps it would be difficult to demonstrate wherein these horrors differ from some of the practices which are now in vogue. I will not ask you to mould your opinion on these points by such writers, nor shall I submit my judgment to that of "Vattal."

The question of this present war is in two parts. First, was it necessary for us to interfere by arms in a dispute between the Russians and Turks? and secondly, having determined to interfere, under certain circumstances, why was not the whole question terminated when Russia accepted the Vienna note? The seat of war is 3,000 miles away from us. We had not been attacked—not even insulted in any way. Two independent governments had a dispute, and we thrust ourselves into the quarrel. That there was some ground for the dispute is admitted by the four powers in the proposition of the Vienna note. But for the English minister at Constantinople, and the cabinet at home, the dispute would have settled itself, and the last note of Prince Mentschikoff would have been accepted; and no human being can put out any material difference between that note and the Vienna note, afterwards agreed upon and recommended by the governments of England and France, Austria and Prussia. But our government would not allow the dispute to be settled. Lord Stratford de Redcliffe held private interviews with the Sultan, did his utmost to alarm him, insisted on his rejection of all terms of accommodation with Russia, and promised him the armed assistance of England if war should arise.

The Turks rejected the Russian note, and the Russians crossed the Pruth, occupying the Principalities as a "material guarantee." I do not defend this act of Russia; it has alway appeared to me impolitic and immoral; but I think it could be well defended out of "Vattell," and it is at least as justifiable as the conduct of Lord John Russell and Lord Palmerston in 1850, when they sent out ten or twelve ships of war to the Piræus, menacing the town with a bombardment if the dishonest pecuniary claim of Don Pacifico were not at once satisfied.

But the passage of the Pruth was declared by England and France and Turkey not to be a casus belli. Negotiations were commenced at Vienna, and the celebrated Vienna note was drawn up. This note had its origin in Paris and London, and pronounced by all these authorities to be such as would satisfy the honor of Russia, and at the same time, be compatible with the "independence and integrity" of Turkey, and the honor of the Sultan. Russia accepted this note at once—accepted it, I believe, by telegraph, even before the precise words of it had been received in St. Petersburg. Everybody thought the question now settled—a cabinet minister assured me we should never hear another word about it—"the whole thing is at an end," he said, and so it appeared for a moment. But the Turk refused the note which had been drawn up by his own arbitrators, and which Russia had accepted. And what did the ministers say then, and what did their organ, the Times, say? They said it was merely a difference about words; it was a pity the Turk made any difficulty, but it would soon be settled. But it was not settled, and why not? It is said that the Russian government put an improper construction on the Vienna note. But it is unfortunate for those who say that the Turk placed precisely the same construction upon it; and, further, it is upon record that the French government advised the Russian government to accept it on the ground that "its general sense differed in nothing from the proposition of Prince Menschikoff." It is, however, easy to see why the Russian government should, when the Turks refused the award of their own arbitrators, restate its original claim, that it might not be damaged by whatever concession it had made in accepting the award; and this is evidently the explanation of the document issued by Count Nesselrode, and about which so much has been said. But, after this, the Emperor of Russia spoke to Lord Westmoreland on the subject, at Olmutz, and expressed his readiness to accept the Vienna note, with any clause which the conference might add to it, explaining and restricting its meaning; and he urged that this should be done at once, as he was anxious that his troops should re-cross the Pruth before winter. It was this very week that the Turks summoned a grand council, and, contrary to the advice of England and France, determined on a declaration of war.

Now, observe the course taken by our government. They agreed to the Vienna note; not fewer than five members of this cabinet have filled the office of Foreign Secretary, and therefore, may be supposed capable of comprehending its meaning; it was a note drawn up by the friends of Turkey, and by arbitrators self-constituted on behalf of Turkey; they urged its acceptance on the Russian government, and the Russian government accepted it; there was then a dispute about its precise meaning; and Russia agreed, and even proposed, that the arbitrators at Vienna should amend it, by explaining it, and limiting its meaning, so that no question of its intention should henceforth exist. But the Turks having rejected it, our government turned round and declared the Vienna note their own note, entirely inadmissable, and defended the conduct of the Turks in having rejected it. The Turks declared war, against the advice of the English and French governments—so, at least, it appears from the Blue Books; but the moment war was declared by Turkey, our government openly applauded it. England, then, was committed to the war. She had promised armed assistance to Turkey, a country without government, and whose administration was at the mercy of contending factions; and, incapable of fixing a policy for herself, she allowed herself to be dragged on by the current of events at Constantinople. She "drifted," as Lord Clarendon said, exactly describing his own position into the war, apparently without rudder and without compass.

The whole policy of our government in this matter is marked with an imbecility perhaps without example. I will not say that they intended war from the first, though there are not wanting many evidences that war was the object of, at least, a section of the cabinet. A distinguished member of the House of Commons said to a friend of mine, immediately after the accession of the present government to office—"You have a war ministry, and you will have a war." But I leave this question, to point out the disgraceful feebleness of the cabinet, if I am to absolve them from the guilt of having sought occasion for war. They promised the Turk armed assistance on conditions, or without conditions. They, in concert with France, Austria and Prussia, took the original dispute out of the hands of Russia and Turkey, and formed themselves into a court of arbitration in the interests of Turkey; they made an award, which they declared to be safe and honorable for both parties; this award was accepted by Russia, and rejected by Turkey; and they then turned round upon their own award, declared it to be "totally inadmissable," and made war upon the very country whose government, at their suggestion and urgent recommendation, had frankly accepted it. At this moment England is engaged in a murderous warfare with Russia, although the Russian government accepted her own terms of peace, and has been willing to accept them, in the sense of England's own interpretation of them, ever since they were offered; and, at the same time, England is allied with Turkey, whose government rejected the awards of England, and who entered into the war contrary to the advice of England. Surely when the Vienna note was accepted by Russia, the Turks should have been prevented from going to war, or should have been allowed to go to war at their own risk.

I have said nothing here of the fact, that all these troubles have sprung out of demands made by France upon the Turkish government, and urged in language more insulting than any which has been shown to have been used by Prince Menschikoff. I have said nothing of the diplomatic war which has been raging for many years past in Constanthople, and in which England has been behind no other power in attempting to subject the Porte to foreign influences. I have said nothing of the abundant evidence there is that we are not only at war with Russia, but with all the Christian population of the Turkish empire, and that we are building up our Eastern policy on a false foundation, namely, on the perpetual maintenance of the most immoral and filthy of all despodisms over one of the fairest portions of the earth which it has desolated, and over a population it has degraded, but has not been able to destroy. I have said nothing of the wretched delusion that we are fighting for civilization, in supporting the Turk against the Russian, and against the subject Christian population of Turkey. I have said nothing of our pretended sacrifices for freedom in this war, in which one great and now dominant ally is a monarch, who, last in Europe, struck down a free constitution, and dispersed, by military violence, a national representative assembly.

My doctrine would have been non-intervention in this case. The danger of the Russian power was a phantom; the necessity of permanently upholding the Mahomedan rule in Europe is an absurdity. Our love for civilization, when we subject the Greeks and Christians to the Turks, is a sham; and our sacrifices for freedom, when working out the behests of the Emperor of the French, and coaxing Austria to help us, is a pitiful imposture. The evils of non-intervention were remote and vague, and neither could be weighed, nor described in any accurate terms. The good we can judge something of already, by estimating the cost of a contrary policy. And what is that cost? War in the north and south of Europe, threatening to involve every country of Europe. Many, perhaps fifty millions sterling, in the course of expenditure by this country alone, to be raised from the taxes of a people whose extrication from ignorance and poverty can only be hoped for from the continuance of peace. The disturbance of trade throughout the world, the derangement of monetary affairs, and difficulties and ruins to thousands of families. Another year of high prices of food, notwithstanding a full harvest in England, chiefly because war interferes with imports, and we have declared our principal foreign foodgrowers to be our enemies. The loss of human life to an enormous extent. Many thousands of our own countrymen have already perished of pestilence and in the field; and hundreds, perhaps thousands of English families will be plunged into sorrow, as a part of the penalty to be paid for the folly of the nation and its rulers.

When the time comes for the "inquisition for blood," who shall answer for these things? You have read the tidings from the Crimea; you have perhaps shuddered at the slaughter; you remember the terrific picture—I speak not of the battle and the charge, and the tumultous excitement of the conflict, but of the field after the battle—Russians in their frenzy, or their terror, shooting Englishmen who would have offered them water to quench their agony of thirst; Englishmen, in crowds, rifling the pockets of the men they had slain or wounded, taking their few shillings or roubles, and discovering among the plunder of the stiffening corpses images of the "Virgin and the child." You have read this, and your imagination has followed the fearful details. This war—every crime which human nature can commit or imagine; every horror it can perpetrate or suffer; and this it is which our Christian government recklessly plunges into, and which so many of our countrymen at this moment think it patriotic to applaud! You must excuse me if I can not go with you. My hands shall be unstained with the blood which is being shed. The necessity of maintaining themselves in office may influence an Administration; delusions may mislead a people; "Vattell" may afford you a law and a defence; but no respect for men who form a Government, no regard I have for "going with the stream," and no fear of being deemed wanting in patriotism, shall influence me in favor of a policy which, in my conscience, I believe to be as criminal before God as it is destructive of the true interest of my country.

I have only to ask you to forgive me for writing so long a letter. You have forced it from me, and I would not have written it did I not so much appreciate your sincerity and your good intentions towards me.

Believe me to be very sincerely yours,
JOHN BRIGHT.

THE WELLAND CANAL.—The Oswego Palladium publishes the names of thirty-six vessels frozen in the Welland Canal. Those vessels contain 90,000 bushels of Wheat and 95,000 bushels of Corn.

'Zion's Herald thus characterizes the conduct of the chivalrous Southerners in and around New Orleans:

"FRIGHTENED.—The people of New Orleans have been considerably alarmed of late. They have seen—what? A ghost? The ravages of the yellow fever? Nay; worse than all this—they have found out that the African Methodist Episcopal Church, an organization composed entirely of colored people, has two or three societies in New Orleans, and is about to establish another in Mobile! What is still more appalling, they have discovered that Bishop Quinn, a colored man, has dared (!) to visit New Orleans for the purpose of ordaining some colored preachers! These facts have stirred up the Quattlebums of the Crescent City, and like a lot of old grannies, listening to some tale of horror, they are turning up their eyes and spreading out their hands in terrified wonder. The press has taken up the subject. The organ of the M. E. Church, South, in that city, has solemnly disclaimed all connection with it. Something has got to be done, for the wiseacres there, find in these facts signs of an Atlantic rolling in upon the peculiar institutions, and they are about to mop out the unwelcome waves after the example of that renowned lady Mrs. Parkington. Poor, conscience-stricken cowards! How self-degraded they must feel, if they reflect upon the occasion of their alarm. And what a rotten institution slavery must be, if its friends tremble thus at the sight of a poor African bishop, and two or three religious societies of colored people. Would that the sturdy spirit of the old Scotch Covenanters would enter into those New Orleans colored Christians and prompt them to claim their undoubted right to worship God as they think best; aye, and to maintain the claim too, even unto martyrdom. They would not suffer in vain. They might be sacrificed, a noble holocaust, at the shrine of slavery, but their spirit would quicken their race to efforts for self-improvement, which would help out redemption.

On Sunday evening, about nine o'clock, the seventeen fugitives from Missouri, whose attempted arrest created such an uproar in our city last week, marched to the depot of the Michigan Central Railroad in a body, took a car specially provided for the purpose, and arrived safely at Detroit on Monday morning. By this time, we suppose they are safely under the protection of Queen Victoria.—Chicago Tribune.

A communication recently appeared in the Tribune from a Liberian, representing a sad state of affairs in Africa, equal to the worst representations of the Abolitionists. It has attracted attention in high quarters. A correspondent of the Tribune, of Dec. 29, in defence of the colony, says:

"The Board of Managers of the New York Colonization Society took immediate action on the subject, and the agent of your Society, the Rev. John B. Pinney, with but two days' notice, sailed in the bark Estelle, from your City, last month, with the express object of investigating these charges personally, intending to visit every settlement on the coast and make a thorough examination of all matters relating to the health and comfort of the emigrants and the interest of the Society generally. If such gross mismanagement exists, Mr. P. will lose no time in having it corrected."—Wesleyan.

We would invite attention to the Wesleyan Church Tea Meeting advertisement, which will be found in our columns this week. The ladies of that Church deserve great credit for their untiring industry, and we hope that their entertainment will have a numerous attendance.

No communication received from any quarter lately, has given us so much gratification as the one from our worthy Brooklyn correspondent. We take it as an earnest of the increase of a true spirit of independence among our brethren in the States, as an earnest that they have began to look stern facts in the face, and to draw conclusions as to their future prospects, from the actions of the American people towards them, instead of believing with childlike credulity what may be said by aspiring office-seekers or mistaken reformers, about the great prospects in store, and soon to be opened to them.

The facts presented by our friend, exhibit a lamentable state of affairs. But when was such not the case to a certain though never so great an extent, as at present?

The question as presented by our correspondent, is not only one of physical, but mental liberty, of even life and death. He says that the influences by which they are surrounded, by crushing every aspiration of the hopeful, and every feeling of energy, tend to shorten life, that in fact they,—the colored people—are dwindling away without hope of a remedy there.

It is then but natural that they should look outside of their native land for what it does not afford them. To some place where they will be acknowledged as citizens, and therefore where they will have rights, for which they can claim protection of the law. In their native country they have no rights, certain privileges only, are extended to them, which can at any time be withdrawn.

Thousands, he tells us, are looking towards Canada, and waiting to be informed, waiting to know whether or not it is the Canaan, the promised land.

That information we will give them correctly, truthfully, speedily, but there is only one way in which it can be done, not by letter, for we would not know who to address, not by circulars, for our limited means would not warrant such extensive operations; but through the columns of the Freeman.

Now let the thousands who our friend says are waiting not for means to migrate, but only the requisite knowledge of our Country,—but become paying subscribers to this Journal, and in return they will receive what they so much need: weekly intelligence from Canada.

By so doing, they will show their determination to be free in every sense of the word, and at the same time aid in furnishing us with the means of promoting their enlightenment.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

MISS SHADD,—Having a leisure moment, I use it in penning a line or two for the Freeman, if acceptable.

A few weeks ago, I met with the Agent of the African Colonization Society, and had quite a long conversation with him. He ended by telling me that if I would go to Liberia, he would get my children out of slavery in three months. Anti-slavery friends here advise me to endeavour to purchase their freedom by money, which they think I should try to raise in the free States. I think of travelling this winter, as a laborer in the Anti-slavery field.

Enclosed is the amount for two yearly subscriptions, and I hope to aid very much in enlarging the subscription list of the Freeman. Please place my name on your list of Agents.

I. CAMPBELL.

Olena, Ohio, Dec. 8, 1854.

To the Editor and Board of Managers of the Provincial Freeman.

MESSRS. EDITORS AND GENTLEMEN:

The very deep interest I feel in your paper, and the object for which it was established, induces me to submit a few suggestions; not however so much for your consideration, as for others who now are or may become interested.

The present very severe winter here will make many converts to emigration, or convince them of the necessity of removing from the corrupting influences of our large cities, where they are confined to the lowest and most unproductive drudgeries, which in the best of times scarce affords the means of a respectable livelihood. Besides this, men are now beginning to look a little into the future, and enquire whether they are not under a moral and religious obligation to remove their children from these influences. It is a lamentable fact, one to which I would most earnestly solicit the attention of ministers, reformers, and philanthropists, of all classes, that owing to our unprotected condition, poverty, and consequent ignorance, the space between boy and girlhood, to man and womanhood, proves an impassable gulph, to an almost incredible number of those who, under more favourable circumstances, would make in every way the best class among us. The reasons are plain. The boy or girl blessed with the advantage of education, bouyancy of spirits, and prepossessing exterior, is inspired with a pride above condescending to the proscribed drudgeries; and being not only deprived accession to lucrative and honorable pursuits, and wholesome recreations and amusements, are thereby left subject to the endless and multiplied vices and allurements subject to large cities, and particularly destructive to the poor of all classes; but more so, to those without the respect and protection of law. It is easy to anticipate the fate of that class to whom I have alluded. I have been led to notice this, by observing our Sabbath Schools and Churches. The former, always well filled; but there our influences, labors and restraints partially cease; hence our churches have very few young members, and they mostly women, forsaken and heart-broken wives, and widows. Now it is no use to talk about elevation, and the horrors of slavery, and the rights and wrongs of the black man, unless we are willing to use the means that other people use to remove the burden, to elevate themselves, and secure those rights. The majority of us here, are in large cities, in the situation I have represented. I appeal to every candid and intelligent man, to know, if it is probable, or possible to effect our elevation, moralize and christianize those so situated. And I further appeal to that man or minister who upholds and sustains it, if by such influence he does not do more to degrade than he does to elevate his people. Sometimes the only salvation of an army, and the country for which it is fighting, is in retreat to more advantageous positions. I need not refer to history, nor battle fields, in proof of this assertion, every one must admit its truthfulness. With us, our only salvation is in leaving those large cities, and their consuming influences, or we must dwindle out a most ignomenious and horrible death,—as Horace Greely says, "be ground out." As to where we shall move, let every one decide for himself. Most intelligent minds, if they will but investigate, will act prudently in regard to that decision. We need not quarrel with them as to whether they should go to New Orleans, Michigan, or Canada; whether it should be East, West, North or South. Reason will dictate to those who will reason, that they should go where there is most equality in the eye of the law, and where the means of a livelihood are most accessible to them, and where the climate, institutions, &c., are most congenial as well as most convenient for them to reach. You, Gentlemen, decided that these things are more accessible in Canada, with the information I have, though limited in regard to Canada and other countries, I am led to agree with you. The position, therefore, you have assumed and now hold, places you in a position to do more good for your race and people, than any other body of men, I think, in or out of these United States. And this is simply to be constant and united in your efforts. There are thousands in our cities who feel, sensibly feel, their degradation, and feel interested and extremely solicitous for the present and eternal welfare of their sons and daughters. That class of persons, Messrs. Editors and Gentlemen, are looking to you, not for means, but simply for information, and to know that you are determined and united for your own and their elevation. What our present and great need here, or that of the masses, is to become informed, through you, of the state of things in your free and happy country, where you dare say, without the fear of derision,—"our country—our government—our sovereign." This information and intelligence, of which I speak, if regularly discussed and disseminated, will do more, in my humble opinion, to stimulate enterprize, to christianize, and elevate the people of color, than half the colored ministers and churches in the country.

New York and Brooklyn Items.

We have dull, very dull times here; business of all kinds being almost at a standstill. This makes it hard for the poor and laboring classes. Many, however, are picking up their little alls and leaving, notwithstanding the cold weather. In passing the business part of the city among the mercantile classes, you may stand and count hundreds of idle hands, both white and colored, many of whom do not get a single "job" all day. As for mechanics, they are doing nothing scarcely—some of the iron foundries have discharged large numbers last week, and others will do so soon. Provisions are enormously high, as well as labour scarce.

I would like to suggest some practical means of alleviation to our people in large cities in the States; but they cannot be reached. They would sooner pay a double price for everything they get, than pay twelve shillings a year for the benefits of a paper, properly sustained, If they would join and purchase their fuel and produce, wholesale, it would be a great saving.

It is said that the property of a number of those owning property at Wicksville and Carsville is up for sale, owing to the dulness of the times, and their consequent inability to meet their engagements. Many of those lots and what little improvements have been put on them, would have paid for and cleared a farm in Canada or the west; but now they must fall into the hands of speculators at their own prices.

LIBERAL CONTRIBUTIONS—PURCHASE OF A CHURCH FOR A COLORED CONGREGATION—The Siloam Presbyterian Church of the city of Brooklyn, L. I., under the pastoral charge of Rev. A. N. Freeman, has been purchased by contributions, by the sister churches, for the use of his congregation. The property will cost over $4,000. It was held and owned by Rev. J. N. Glocester, of the Glocester family of Philadelphia, under whose auspices the organization was commenced in 1849; but owing to some misunderstanding with Mr. G. and the Presbytery, for which we regard Mr. G. very unjustly censured, Mr. G. broke off his pastoral allegiance, but retained possession of the property. There were two churches that gave $3,300, a very liberal bequest, indeed; although it should be remembered that the title will not be held by the Trustees of its congregation, but held in trust by a committee of white brethren, which fact may account for such unusual liberality.

COLORED POLITICAL ASSOCIATION.—The colored citizens of Williamsburgh have organized a political association, for the purpose of influencing votes at the elections. It is said that at the election some two years ago, a certain young colored doctor of that place, sold the colored votes, making some two hundred and fifty dollars by the operation; hence the desire now prominent there to dabble in the dirty pool of politics;—they now have in contemplation the calling of a State Convention. I had supposed that the National and State Councils had charge of that matter.

GREAT INVENTIONS BY COLORED MEN.—A colored man named Murrow has secured a patent for making all kinds of brushes, at a much less expense, and to be attended with much less trouble in the use of them, than the ordinary brush. Efforts have been on foot for some time to get in operation a factory for their manufacture, through the agency of an association; but it is quite doubtful of success. This is to be seriously regretted, as Mr. Murrow, the patentee, has had a great deal of trouble in getting it before the public, owing to the strong prejudices and indifference of scientific societies and scientific men. He was not allowed at first to even own or accompany it to the American Institute Fair, but had to have it presented by a white man. Finally, he secured a model and patent from Washington. Great inducements have been held out to Mr. M. to sell his rights; but he has held on with the hope of rendering some great benefit to his people in the control of its manufacturing department; but we have been informed that for the want of means he has already surrendered two-thirds of its interest. While this is to be regretted, still it could not be helped. Mr. Murrow, though an inventor, was incapable of negociating for funds, or controlling the business department of its operation, nor would he allow himself to be controlled by colored men. We hope, however, that the deposits that have been invested in that operation by the stockholders, will be safe, which, if our white friends are honest, as we must not doubt at the present, they will be. But it generally turns out that when the interest of white and colored men are so blended, the former, unscrupulous and experienced, and the latter scrupulous to a fault, and not only uninformed in regard to complicated business operations, but illiterate as well, that the colored man is soon got rid of, the interest going one way and he the other. This remark applies especially to the whites of the United States, where the dearest rights of the colored man may be assailed according to law.

In England or France, Mr. M.'s invention would have secured him an independent fortune, and redounded to the honour of himself, his family, and his people.

ANOTHER INVENTION.—It is said that a young colored man has invented a new kind of a missile to be used for the destruction of human life in war. It is an expanding ball, unlike anything now, or ever before, in use. He is endeavouring to secure a patent for it from the Seat of Government. I would advise him, or any other colored men having valuable inventions, to repair to countries where their rights will be respected. These are by no means the first inventions by colored men; but white men have carried them into effect, and receive the benefit.

Meeting of Parliament.

A Privy Council will be held this afternoon at Windsor Castle, chiefly for the purpose of ordering the meeting of Parliament on the 12th of next month for the despatch of business. The principal object of this early meeting we believe to be the necessity of an act for enabling Government to send militia regiments to Gibraltar and the Mediterranean stations, to take the place of the regiments of the Line going to the Crimea. Of the absolute necessity of such a measure there can be no doubt. The troops now idle in the Mediterranean, where there is not a shadow of an enemy, are urgently required at that now famous promontory where the foremost Powers of the world are engaged in mortal combat, and where neither side will give way till it has exhausted its resources. We presume that any regiment of militia would just as soon spend the winter at Gibralter, or Malta, or Corfu, as a dull English town, in different barracks, and with the average allowance of frost, snow and east winds. Very few of our readers will require to be told that no militia man will be obliged to go abroad against his will, inasmuch as he entered the service on the contrary understanding.

An Act of Parliament, however, is required before a single regiment of militia can be ordered to a foreign station, even if it has volunteered for the service. As the general embodiment of the militia, which a contemporary has affected to doubt, we beg to repeat our statement that it is intended to embody, all the militia regiments at a very early date, the precise order in which they are to be summoned depending on a variety of circumstances. It may be readily conceived that much has arisen during the eventful period of the recess to call for the assistance of Parliament, and we are quite sure that every member of the Legislature in his senses will come with the sincere and hearty determination to assist Government, the army, and the nation by every means in his power; and to oppose no measure, no vote of money or men, no arrangement having for its object the vigorous prosecution of the war. Having drawn the sword and thrown away the scabbard in the face of a powerful and barbarious foe, and by the side of a noble ally, we must devote everything we possess in this world to the cause we have embraced, unless we would make up our minds to retire from the front rank of nations, and take our place we know not how far behind.

From the London Times, Nov. 29.

Financial Effects of the War in England.

We are informed, on unquestionable authority, that the belief we expressed yesterday as to the state of the exchequer and the necessity of a loan, and the opinion we also avowed as to the scale of our earlier preparations having been unfortunately stinted by an undue anxiety to keep expenditure within the limits of income, are both unfounded. We can only say that if anything, we have rather understated the expenses of the war, as it is now to be carried on. Indeed, we hope and trust we are not to be told that the war at this moment is paid for out of our income, not only because we do not believe it, but because we should think it a most misplaced and disastrous ambition to attempt it.—It is utterly inconceivable that we can hope to keep up an effective force of even thirty thousand men in the Crimea as it ought to be kept up, with every possible appliance for its health and strength, till Sebastopol is safe in the hands of the allies, without greatly exceeding the estimates of last session and the expected revenue of the year.

Government has now laid its hands on every available steamer, and there is not a line of packet service which is not deranged in consequence. We are undertaking the conveyance not only of our own reinforcements, but also those of the French. The coaling, victualling, repairing, and occasionally replacing these transports, is an immense addition to the hire. Then we are buying and building at a greater rate than ever. If we are not substituting new firearms for the whole of the army, we ought to be. The The forces in the Crimea are represented as fairly out of elbows, ragged, shirtless, ill-shod, and altogether approximating to the condition of Omar Pasha's brave, but ill-used soldiery. Government is doing its best to mend matters in these respects, and a shipful of woollens had just arrived at the date of our last advices. It is also sending wooden houses for 25,000 men, stoves, charcoal, wood, and even coal from Heraclea.

Only yesterday we were told that the leather market was in a state of great excitement, and the Hudson's Bay Company thrown into transports, by some Government purchases, comprising an order for 18,000 buffalo hides, fortunately in store. We presume that next year we shall not be content with merely holding our annual navy review in the Baltic, instead of Spithead, but shall attempt some achievement worth the salt of our navy. For that purpose it is evident we must have an entirely new description of vessels, that can enter shallows and defy granite batteries. This cannot be done without vast expenses. Then, we should like to know the expense of the new company to every regiment in the line, the augmentation of the artillery, and the bringing a hundred regiments of militia into form and condition for regular service. Our few fortifications at home are receiving extensive additions. But here we must stop.

As to the opinion, which we happen to share with the whole of the public, that the conduct of the war, up to the end of September or thereabout, was stinted by the idea of keeping the expenditure within income, it is the only conceivable excuse for the fact of so little having been done for the whole of the two months after the expedition to the Crimea had been finally determined.

Now, would the British army have been in this condition, would the line of the defences have been forced on the 5th, should all our operations have been crippled, and should we have been compelled as was the case at the last date, altogether to suspend the operations of the siege, if reinforcements had been sent out in August and September, fast enough to keep up the army to a sufficient standard! The drain of this war has been very great, but not greater than what the experience of all former wars, and our knowledge of the climate and the enemy we had to deal with, might have led us to expect. A great deal has now been done, but it has been done at least two months too late. Why, unless it were from some idea, that the country had got to the bottom of its purse, and could afford no more? It is, however, some satisfaction to find this idea indignantly repudiated. The War Minister has only to do what he considers necessary to the safety and efficiency of our forces, and he has a carte blanche as to the expenses. The public—even the payers of income-tax—will hear it with satisfaction; for we are convinced there are few people in this country who would not feel the defeat of the British army in the Crimea as if it were a great domestic calamity. Any thing rather than that—loans, taxes, burdens, crippled trade, and all the ills consequent on war; but let not Russia have it to boast that she has overcome two great nations attempting to succour a third.

RELEASE OF LORD DUNKELLIN.—We have received the following very gratifying communication from a Galway correspondent:—"You will be glad to learn that Lord Dunkellin has been released from captivity by the Czar. On Sunday the Marquis of Clanricarde received a communication from the Emperor of Russia, intimating that, in consideration of the intimacy which existed between them, when his lordship was Ambassador at St. Petersburg, his Majesty had much pleasure in giving his son liberty, and that he was then on his way to England, on parole."

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.—Among the passengers between Malta and Gibraltar by the Candia which has just arrived home with the India mail, was Mr. Smith O'Brien, returned from transportation. He arrived via Madras. He was a first-class passenger on board the Candia, and entered into familiar conversation with those on board on every topic except politics. He looked care-worn. He was obliged to leave the steamer at Gibraltar, as he is prohibited by the terms of his pardon from visiting the United Kingdom. It was believed he purposed visiting some part of Italy. He appeared sad on leaving the steamer; and while wishing good-bye to those who were bound for England, he remarked that he scarcely knew what countryman to call himself.

By a recent arrival at New York, we have late news from Australia, the dates being Melbourne, Sept. 20th, Sydney Sept. 25th. A vote of want of confidence in the Government had been carried by the local Legislature of Sydney, by a majority of 16. Sir Charles Hotham, the Governor had been making a tour of the mining districts, and was well received. At a puplic dinner given him at Bendigo, 'the President of the United States' was proposed as a toast, and received with applause. The British war steamer 'Torch' had visited the new Hebrides Islands In their commercial review the papers speaks of the deplorable condition of trade. Large quantities of goods were forced off at auction, and prices still tended downward. New South Wales gold averaged at Sydney £3 17s 6d to £4 per ounce. The product of the mines had been satisfactory.

We see by the Official Gazette that the Government exercising the power vested in them by the Act 12 and 13 Vic., have appointed that the 12½ per cent duty now charged on printing paper, draining tiles, and oil cake, shall be reduced to 2½ per cent.

The New York City Superintendent of Schools, has recommended that Book-keeping, shall in future, be one of the branches of instruction in female schools, to enable the girls so taught to act as clerks, or book-keepers in after life. The Buffalo Democracy approves of this, and after saying that woman's sphere of labour must be enlarged, he adds: "If any doubt exists as to the capacity of women to keep books, it would be removed by a conversation with any intelligent American who had visited Paris. Most of the book-keeping in that city is done by females. And a great deal improvement they have been found to be upon men, in the situations of the usual employees about Banking and Commercial establishments. They do not steal. Money is much safer in the hands of women, than men. In France they are found to make much more trustworthy clerks and agents, than men did. They rarely gamble, and never keep mistresses."—Colonist.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Quebec, Dec. 13, 1854.

Last night after the report left, the House, in committee on ways and means, passed a resolution authorizing a loan of £350,000. The committee then passed the following resolutions reported from the committee of the whole.

1st. Resolved,—That it is expedient to impose further penalties during a limited time to secure freedom of elections.

2nd. Resolved,—That Deputy Returning Officers, charged with not properly certifying any poll book or to insert therein a declaration of the number of votes and with duly transmitting the same to be liable to a penalty of £100 or to imprisonment for not less than six months or more than one year, or of imprisonment and fine together.

3rd. Resolved,—That the penalties already provided for altering or destroying any poll book or other election document to apply to making unlawful additions to the same.

4th. Resolved—That all persons refusing to appear and give evidence in offences against the laws of elections ought to be liable to a penalty of £50, or to imprisonment not exceeding three months.

5th. Resolved,—That a penalty of £10 for voting without qualification, and a penalty of £25 for voting under fraudulent conveyance, ought to be replaced by imprisonment for not less than three or more than six months, or a fine not less than £25 or more than £50, or by imprisonment and fine together, which penalties ought also to apply to persons wilfully voting under false or assumed names or designation.

6th. Resolved,—That a penalty of £10 for voting more than once at any election ought to be replaced by imprisonment for less than eight months or more than one year for every vote so given.

7th. Resolved,—That the above penalties shall continue until the 1st of January, 1856, and not longer.

QUEBEC, Dec. 18.

The House met at 11 o'clock this a. m.

After routine business, Hon. Mr. Morin moved that when this House adjourns this day, it adjourn till the 23rd of February next.—Carried.

To amend the act incorporating the Mutual Assurance Associations of the Fabriques of the Dioceses of Quebec, Three Rivers, and of Montreal.

To increase the capital stock of the Niagara Falls and Suspension Bridge Company.

To enable Rev. Wm. Ritchie to sell and convey, to demise court lands held by him in trust.

To allow Notaries to receive advice of relations and friends without being thereunto by a Judge in all cases in which the Judges may delegate their powers to Notaries.

To extend the act intituled, "an act to authorize limited partnerships."

To regulate the inspection of Pot and Pearl Ashes.

To provide for the holding of the several County Courts in case of the illness or unavoidable absence of the county Judge.

To enable the Board of School Trustees of the town of Chatham to dispose advantageously of land in that town.

To incorporate the Canada Copper Company.

To incorporate the Magnetic Mining Company.

To regulate the time of payment of Bills and Promissory Notes which fall due on legal holidays.

To define the qualifications of voters in certain electoral districts, and a system for the registration of votes.

To amend the act relative to the Savings Banks in this Province.

To make legal the assessments made in Upper Canada during the year 1854.

To authorise the City of Quebec to raise a loan to consolidate their debt.

To amend the act incorporating the U. C. Mining Co.

To amend the act to make better provision for the establishment of municipal authoiriies in Lower Canada.

At three o'clock the honorable Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly proceeded in State to the Governor's House, and presented to his Excellency the Governor General the address passed by both houses, to which his Excellency was pleased to reply as follows:—

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly—

The expression of your approbation at such a moment is in the highest degree grateful to me. I am conscious that I brought, to discharge the functions of Governor General of Canada, few qualities, except a desire to do my duty to my Sovereign and the people of this Province, and a just appreciation of the magnitute and importance of the trust confided to me.

If any success has attended my endeavours, it is mainly due to the fact that I have been throughout enabled to co-operate cordially with the other branches of the Provincial Parliament, and with the public men enjoying their confidence. The testimony which you bear in this address to the improvement which has taken place in the happiness and prosperity of the Province, is of great value.

I pray God that Canada may advance with an accelerated speed in all the lines of progress, material and moral, during the years that are to come; and that this magnificent Province may continue to furnish an example of the noble purposes to which powers of self-government may be turned by an enlightened and high-minded people.

This address having been committed to the House by Mr. Speaker, it adjourned until the 23rd February, 1855.

Lord Elgin's Farewell Speech.

Lord Elgin gave a Farewell Ball, at Spencer Wood on the 1st, which was attended by about 500 persons, including many members of the Legislature. After supper, his Lordship addressed his guests as follows:—

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—

I do not intend to depart from the rule which I have prescribed for myself, of not giving toasts after supper at balls in this House. But I trust that in the position in which I am placed this evening, it will not be deemed altogether inexcusable in me if I try, at least, to say a few words to you, for I do not know that I shall succeed in the attempt before I drink off the bumper I have filled here, and which I intend to drain to the last drop. I wish I could address you in such strains as I have sometimes employed on similar occasions—strains suited to a festive meeting; but I confess that I have a weight at my heart and that it is not in me to be merry. For the last time, I stand before you in an official character, which I have borne for nearly eight years. For the last time, I am surrounded by a circle of friends with whom I have spent some of the pleasantest hours of my life. For the last time, I welcome you as my guests to this charming residence, which I have been in the habit of calling my house. I did not, I will frankly confess it, know what it would cost me to break this habit until the period of my departure approached and I began to feel that the great interests which have so long engrossed my attention and thoughts were passing out of my hands. I had a hint of what my feelings really were upon this point—a pretty broad hint too—one lovely morning in June last, when I returned to Quebec after my temporary absence in England, and landed at the coves below Spencer Wood, because it was Sunday, and I did not want to make a disturbance in the town, and when with the greetings of the old people in the coves, who put their heads out of their windows as I passed along, and cried "welcome home again" still ringing in my ears, I mounted the hill and drove through the Avenue to the house door. I saw the drooping trees on the lawn, with every one of which I was so familliar, clothed in the green of spring, and the river beyond, calm and transparent as a mirror, and the ships fixed and motionless as statues on its surface, and the whole landscape bathed in a flood of that bright Canadian sunshine which so seldom pierces our murky atmosphere on the other side of the Atlantic. I began to think that those persons were to be envied who were not forced by the necessities of their positions, to quit these engrossing retreats, and lovely scenes for the purpose of proceeding to distant lands, but who are able to remain among them, until they pass to that quiet corner of the garden of Mount Harmon which juts into the river and commands a view of the city, the shipping, Point Lévi, the Island Orleans, and the range of Lorentine, so through the dim watches of the tranquil night which precedes the dawning of the eternal day, the majestic citidel of Quebec, with its nobler train of Statellite Hills, may seem to rest for ever on the sight, and the low murmur of the waters of the St. Lawrence, with the hum of busy life on their surface to fall ceaselessly on the ear. I cannot bring myself to believe that the future has in store for me any interests which will fill the place of those I am now abandoning. But although I must henceforward be to you as a stranger (no, no); although my official connection with you and your interests will have become in a few days matter of history, yet I trust that through some one channel or another the tidings of your prosperity and progress may occasionally reach me, that I may hear, from time to time, of the steady growth and development of those principles of liberty and order, of manly independence in combination, with respect for authority and law, of national life, in harmony with attachment to British connection, which it has been my earnest endeavour, to the extent of my humble means of influence, to implant and to establish. I trust too, that I shall hear that this house continues to be what I have ever sought to render it, a neutral territory on which persons of opposite opinions, political and religious, may meet together in harmony, and forget their differences for a season. And I have good hope that this will be the case for several reasons, and among others for one which I can hardly allude to, for it might be an impertinance in me to dwell upon it. But I think that without any breach of delicacy or decorum, I may venture to say that many years ago, when I was much younger than I am now, and when we stood towards each other in a relation somewhat different from that which has recently subsisted between us, I learned to look up to Sir Edmund Head with respect, as a gentleman of the highest character, the greatest ability, and the most varied accomplishments and attainments. And now, Ladies and Gentlemen, I have only to add the sad word Farewell. I drink this bumper to the health of you all, collectively and individually. I trust that I may hope to leave behind me some who will look back with feelings of kindly recollection to the period of our intercourse, with some of whom I have been on terms of intimate official connection, whose worth and talent I have had the best means of appreciating, and who could bear witness, at least, if they please to do so, to the spirit, intentions and motives, with which I have administered your affairs; some with whom I have been bound by the ties of personal regard. And if reciprocity be essential to enmity, then most assuredly I can leave behind me no enemies. I am aware that there must be persons in so large a society as this who think that they have grievences to complain of, that due consideration has not been in all cases shown to them. Let them believe me, and they ought to believe me, for the testimony of a dying man is evidence even in a court of justice. Let them believe me, then, when I assure them in this, the last hour of my agony, that no such errors of omission or commission have been intentional on my part. Farewell, and God bless you.

During the delivery of the address, His Excellency was frequently interrupted by vehement applause, and, at its conclusion, the cheers lasted for some minutes.

Sir Edmund Head, in a short speech, proposed Lord Elgin's health, which was received with loud cheers.

Distress at the Au Sable Fishing Station.

We learn from Mr. Edward Thompson, who arrived in this city on Tuesday evening, that the fishermen and inhabitants at the North of the Au Sable River, are suffering greatly from the want of provisions. Mr. Thompson left there a week ago to-day, in company with five others, to escape starvation. They sailed in an open fishing-boat to Point au Barques. Here two were overcome by hunger and fatigue and the want of food, were obliged to stop at the light-house. The remaining four walked with packs on their back, about thirty miles, where they took a boat and sailed to Port Huron. Thence to Detroit they came by stage. The people at Au Sable Station have been disappointed in receiving supplies. Only one man there had his winter provisions when our informant left, and he had refused an offer of $35 for a barrel of flour. The boarding house keepers had given notice that they could no longer provide their boarders with food necessary to maintain life. There were at the Station twelve families and forty-seven boats. On Thursday last eighty-three men started to walk by the coast to Saginaw. Some have, probably, not been able to bear the hardships of the journey, and have perished on the way. One man who accompanied Mr. Thompson, came near freezing to death; he lay several times on the snow exhausted and almost torpid, and it was only by great exertions that his friends could arouse him. Messrs. Haws, Thompson, &c., at Pennepoy, near Point au Barques, have dismissed some of their men on account of the shortness of their supplies. At Sable Highlands and Port Huron also, provisions are scarce. In fact, on all the coast of Lake Huron winter supplies are needed. We fear we we may ere long have to record some sad cases of death, occasioned by starvation and cold.—Detroit Advertiser, Dec. 14.

A THIEF CAUGHT.—An American traveller was robbed of some £50 in this city, on Wednesday last. Chief-constable Van Velkenburg got on the track of the thief, and arrested him in spite of his six-barrelled Colt's revolver, which he endeavoured to use. The money was found with the prisoner, who is now in the cells, preparing for the penitentiary. Some assert that he is the real Townsend, the murderer of Mr. Nelles, but there is as yet no evidence of the fact.—London Prototype.

The branch house in this city of the extensive sugar firm at Montreal—the Messrs. Mitchell, have the honour of importing the first cargo received at this place via railroad. The cars of the Ontario, Simcoe and Huron Railroad on Monday, loaded at the Queen's Wharf, and discharged at their depot foot of Bay Street, a lot of sugar ex-schooner Trade Wind (about 100 hhds) consigned on West India account. The clean appearance and good order of the packages prove the superiority of the Portland and St. Lawrence route, to the New York—and we understand the former has some seven cents per 100lb the advantage in point of charges.

BOOTS AND SHOES MADE BY MACHINERY.—A foreign correspondent of the Boston Traveler, says a patent has been taken out in England for making boots and shoes by machinery. So favourable are the prospects that a public company has advanced $25,000 to erect the necessary machinery, by the river side at Pimlico, and the worth of the invention has been estimated at millions of money. It will undersell and ruin the vast quantities of every indifferent articles now produced, chiefly from Northamptonshire, and it is stated it will furnish 17,000 pair per diem of stoutly finished boots and shoes.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE
WARD OF SAINT ANDREW!

GENTLEMEN,—One of your present Aldermen being about to retire from the representation of the Ward, I take the opportunity of offering my services in that capacity for the ensuing year.

If you should consider me worthy of your confidence and place me at the poll as your Representative, the stake I have in the Ward and a desire to decrease taxation, I trust will be a guarantee for my attention, not only to your interests, but so that of the city generally.

I therefore respectfully solicit your support.

Your obedient servant,
R. P. CROOKS.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN, BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

The Light at Home.

The Light at home! how bright it beams,
When evening shades around us fall!
And from the lattice far it gleams,
To love, to rest, to comfort call.
When tired with the toils of day,
The strife for glory, gold or fame,
How sweet to seek the quiet way,
Where loving lips will lisp our name
Around the Light at Home!

When through the dark and stormy night,
The weary wanderer homeward hies,
How cheering is that twinkling light,
Which through the forest gloom he spies!
It is the Light at Home! he feels
That loving hearts will greet him there,
And softly through his bosom steals
The joy and love which banish care,
Around the Light at Home!

The Light at Home! where'er at last
It greets the seamen through the storm,
He feels no more the chilling blast,
That beats upon his manly form.
Long years upon the sea have fled,
Since Mary gave her parting kiss,
But the sad tears which then she shed,
Will now be paid with rapturous bliss,
Around the Light at Home!

The Light at Home! how still and sweet
It peeps from yonder cottage door—
The weary laborer to greet—
When the rough toils of day are o'er!
Sad is the soul that does not know
The blessings that its beams impart,
The cheerful hopes and joys that flow
And lighten up the heaviest heart,
Around the Light at Home!

SNOW DRIFT ON THE RAILWAY.—On Wednesday, the 6th instant, a freight train found itself entangled in a snow-drift on the Great Western Railway near Lobo, and as the snow fell very heavily, it soon became quite fast. Mr. Ward, the London station master immediately despatched the Rhinoceros, one of the most powerful English engines lately imported by the Company, which with scientific strength rescued half of the train and brought it in safety to London. Upon returning for the other portion, it was found impossible to move it in consequence of the accumulation of snow which had taken place. Three engines were now despatched, but so firmly was the train embedded, that the couplings and draw bars gave way, the cars remaining fixtures. Soon after, two passenger trains from the West came up, which were of course, obliged to remain on the track. Night came, and the passengers passed the still hours in the cars. But they were not uncared for, for Mr. Gregory, the Division Superintendent, sent out for their use a sheep, two hogs, four barrels of crackers, two barrels of beer, tea, sugar, &c., together with tea-kettles, frying-pans, and other appliances necessary in the culinary art. In the morning, a gang of between four and five hundred men was put on to clear the track, but the snow having accumulated to a depth of four feet, for a distance of three miles, it may be well conceived that they occupied more time in performing their task, than was agreeable to the passengers. However after thirty six hours of incessant labor, the snow was removed so that the trains could resume their course. The passengers made very considerable havoc with the provisions, but one barrel of beer returned unbroached, and as there were upwards of two hundred passengers in all, it seems probable that a large number of them were teetotallers.—London Free Press.

MAINE LAW IN ENGLAND.—The temperance alliance of Great Britain have resolved to raise a fund of $50,000 to agitate for, the enactment of a prohibitory law.

ANECDOTES OF BAD LIQUOR.—"A friend of mine returning from the depot a few morning since, with a bottle of freshly-imported 'Maine Law,' saw a lady a little in advance of him whom he must inevitably join. So, tucking the bottle under his arm, he walked alongside. 'Well,' said the young lady, after disposing of 'health' and 'the weather,' what is that bundle you are carying so mysteriously under your arm?

"'Oh! nothing but a coat, which the tailor has just been mending for me!'

"'Oh! it's a coat, is it? Well, you'd better carry it back and get him to sew up one more hole, for it leaks now!'

"This is the same young man whose cash account, after his last summer's travels, was marked by the very frequent recurrence of the item: 'Porter, twenty-five cents." His father expressed some surprise that it should cost so much to transport a small carpet-bag from place to place; whereas the original investments were made in small bottles of Brown stout.

"Speaking of this; just before the passage of the 'Maine Law' I came out of a little establishment in N——, of a dark and rainy evening, behind a very drunken fellow, who 'beat up' the sidewalk a few rods in advance. Presently he 'missed stays' on the 'starboard tack,' and ran into a tree. He pulled off what was originally intended for a hat, 'teetered' a moment on his toes, and apologized to the jostled individual, with a 'hic-cup' between every other word:

"'Schuze me, shir; I 'shure you, shir, 'tirely 'tentional on my part. Sho dark, shir, I didn't see you. 'Schuze me, shir, 'schuze me, shir, if you please.

"After which obsequious explanation, and an abortive effort to put on his hat, he essayed to continue on his way; but brought up again on the first lurch against the same tree—

"'I really beg your pardon, shir; I'm 'fraid you'll 'spect that I'm 'tossicated; but I 'shure you, shir, I never was more shober in all my life. It's dark and splashy; and really, shir, I 'shoposed, shir, you gone along!'"—Knickerbocker.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A series of pamphlets has of late been directed to the condition and to the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number

"That the best thanks of this Meeting be presented to the Earl of Shaftesbury, for his kindness in presiding on the present occasion."

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of meeting to further promote Industrial, Commercial, Agricultural and Political, not based on complexion or consideration, and in the imperative duty now resting upon all the loyal inhabitants to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the ground of their constitutional characteristics and origin, the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associate capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as Canadians,—1st. To cultivate a friendly harmony and to diffuse a kind feeling among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate, or come into contact and 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition, or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities in the North West [illegible] to the exclusion for the time, in preference to the Lessee of Canada, thereby promulgating the dangerous principle that God selected a portion of the human species, and [illegible] under the Brazil, Low in Britain America, those of darker hue, because [illegible] of blood [illegible] drawers of water' to those of white complexion. And [illegible] to do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and to promote peace, harmony and good will among all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in Great Britain and in Canada, and to that end to encourage [illegible] and to [illegible] and to [illegible] so as to bring [illegible] to such measures, and to take such steps from time to time, as may be found necessary to carry out the objects of this Union.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS,
JOHN D. PECK,
AMOS G. BEMAN,
JOHN JONES,
J. D. BONNER,
J. MCCUNE SMITH,
Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Fredrick Douglass' Paper or Alienea American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.
By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.
By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.
By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.
By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.
A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.
A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ TO EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

The Closing Scene.

BY T. BUCHANAN READ.

[The North British Review pronounces this poem the best that has ever been written by an American author.]

Within this sober realm of leafless trees,
The russet year inhaled the dreamy air,
Like some tanned reaper in his hour of ease,
When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray barns looking from their hazy hills
O'er the dim waters widening in the vales,
Sent down the air a greeting to the mills,
On the dull thunder of alternate flails.

All sights were mellowed, and all sounds subdued,
The hills seemed farther, and the streams sang low;
As in a dream, the distant woodman hew'd
His winter log, with many a muffled blow.

Th' embattled forests erewhile armed in gold,
Their banners bright with every martial hue,
Now stood, like some sad beaten host of old,
Withdrawn afar in Time's remotest blue.

On slumb'rous wings the vulture tried his flight;
The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint;
And like a star slow drowning in the light,
The village church vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel cock upon the hillside crew;
Crew thrice, and all was stiller than before—
Silent, till some replying warder blew
His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the jay within the elm's tall crest
Made garrulous trouble around the unfledged young;
And where the oriole hung her swaying nest,
By every light wind like a censer swung;

Where sang the noisy masons of the eaves,
The busy swallows, circling ever near,
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
An earlier harvest and a plenteous year;

Where every bird which charmed the vernal feast
Shook the sweet slumber from its wings at morn,
To warn the reapers of the rosy east,
All now was songless, empty and forlorn.

Alone, from out the stubble, piped the quail,
And croaked the crow, through all the dreary gloom;
Alone the pheasant, drumming in the vale,
Made echo to the distant cottage loom.

There was no bud, no bloom upon the bowers,
The spiders wove their thin shrouds night by night,
The thistle-down, the only ghost of flowers,
Sailed slowly by—passed noiseless out of sight.

Amid all this—in this most cheerless air,
And where the woodbine sheds upon the porch
Its crimson leaves, as if the year stood there,
Firing the floor with his inverted torch—

Amid all this, the centre of the scene,
The white-haired matron, with monotonous tread,
Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyless mien
Sat like a Fate, and watched the flying thread.

She had known sorrow. He had walked with her,
Oft supped—and broke with her the ashen crust,
And, in the dead leaves, still she heard the stir
Of his black mantle trailing in the dust.

While yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom,
Her country summoned, and she gave her all,
And twice war bowed to her his sable plume;
Re-gave the swords to rust upon the wall.

Re-gave the swords—but not the hand that drew
And struck for liberty the dying blow;
Nor him, who to his sire and country true,
Fell 'mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the droning wheel went on,
Like the low murmurs of a hive at noon;
Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone
Breathed through her lips a sad and tremulous tune.

At last the thread was snapped, her head was bow'd;
Life dropped the distaff through his hands serene;
And loving neighbors smoothed her careful shroud,
While Death and winter closed the Autumn scene.

From the Empire.

The Anti-Slavery Conference, held in London, Nov. 29th and 30th.

First Day's Proceedings.

Pursuant to the circular which has been extensively circulated among British abolitionists, the Anti-Slavery Conference was held under the auspices of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, in the London Tavern, on Wednesday and Thursday last. At ten o'clock on the morning of the first mentioned a large number of the leading friends of the movement assembled at the place of meeting, among whom we observed Samuel Gurney, Esq., (the president), Major-General Thompson, Messrs. Joseph Sturge Joseph Cooper, Henry Sterry, Duncan McLaren (late Lord Provost of Edinburgh), G. W. Alexander, Charles Gilpin, Josiah Forster, Elihu Burritt, Stephen Bourne (late a stipendiary magistrate in Demerara), J. T. Price (Neath), George Thompson (Editor of the Empire), B. B. Wiffin (Woburn), Parker Pillsbury (of Boston, Massachusetts), Victor Schœlcher (late member of the French National Assembly), John Croppen (Liverpool), Dr. Hodgkin, F. C. Adams (of the city of Washington, United States), F. Wheeler and W. Tatham (Rochester), L. A. Chamerovzow, W. Farmer and F. W. Chessoon; and the Revs. J. Andrews (of Jamaica), Thos. Henderson (of Demerara),—Cornish (of Jamaica), James Sherman, J. H. Hinton, M. A., Edward Mathews (of Wisconsin), Dr. Burns, Dr. Carlisle, W. Tyler, H. Richard, D. Thomas, Dr. Massie, John Kennedy, C. Stovel, W. James (Bristol), H. Solly (Bristol), J. Woodwark (Southampton), and F. Bishop (Liverpool). The following places were represented by delegates, viz:—London, Liverpool, Birmingham, Dublin, Edinburgh, Bristol, Manchester, Leeds, Worcester, Rochdale, Oxford, Coggeshall, Croydon, Southampton, Woburn, Jamaica, Brighton, Colchester, Swansea, Banbury, Leighton, Woolwich, Washington, U. S., Massachusetts, U. S., and Wakefield.

Mr. Samuel Gurney having been elected to the chair, briefly opened the proceedings by glancing at the state of the question as it regards the African slave trade and Cuba, and strongly animadverted upon slavery in the United States.

Mr. Chamerovzow, the secretary, read the list of delegates, and also read or gave the substance of letters received from the Revs. T. Binney, W. Arthur, W. Brock, and C. B. Gribble; and Messrs. James Houghton (Dublin), J. S. Buckingham, W. Forster, R. Webb (Dublin), W. Smeal [Glasgow], Wilson Armistead [Leeds], and a large number of other ministers and gentlemen.

The Rev. J. H. Hinton next read an eloquent paper on the first subject mentioned in the programme, viz., "The present position of the anti-slavery question in Great Britain as a public question, and the duty of British abolitionists." Mr. Hinton paid a glowing eulogy to Clarkson, Wilberforce, and their fellow-labourers in the cause of West India emancipation, and urged the equal importance of the anti-slavery cause now with what it was in their time. He dwelt upon the great value of the present influence of England for the extirpation of slavery and the slave trade. He stated that the question in this country was now quiescent, but not extinct—embarrassed, but still reviving. He referred to the complicated question of the sugar duties as one of the principal causes of division and weakness; but he believed it to be the desire of the Anti-Slavery Society to obliterate all traces of a momentary alienation. They wished to marshall the anti-slavery forces for action. British abolitionists had no time nor heart for anti-slavery sentimentalism. "Tell us what to do," they said, "in order to rid the world of slavery, and it shall be done."

Mr. Joseph Price, of Neath, proposed the first resolution, which, after stating that 8,000,000 of human beings are now held in as chattels in the United States, the Brazils, and the Spanish, Portuguese, and Dutch colonies, asserted the essential immorality and unrighteousness of the doctrine that it is lawful for man to hold property in man; and encouraged the British Foreign Anti-Slavery Society to prosecute its labours with undiminished energy. Mr. Price referred in terms of the highest approval to the recent mission of three "Friends" to the slave states of America, and considered that religious work had exercised a most important influence for good. He thought that slavery in America might be abolished by a plan of money compensation to slaveholders.

Major-General Thompson next made a few observations. He thought that Spain was able to effect emancipation in Cuba, from the fact that France had succeeded in doing so in her colonies. The Americans, he said, were going to take Cuba; but if the Spaniards would preserve that island to their rule, they must abolish slavery. The English Government could do much to bring about this happy result; and they had a great political interest in its accomplishment, for if Cuba became the possession of the slave power, nothing could save the West Indies from its grasp. The question was one of vast importance, as the possession of Cuba by the United States was only part of one vast scheme for the universal spread of slavery over all tropical regions.

The Rev. John Woodwark seconded the resolution proposed by Mr. Price. He urged the importance of the wide-spread diffusion of suitable tracts, and other publications. He thought the Anti-Slavery Reporter should be more generally read.

Mr. Alderman Harrison eulogised the address of Mr. Hinton, but suggested some verbal alterations.

The Rev. Edward Mathews, of Wisconsin thought that the quiescent state of public opinion alluded to by Mr. Hinton was mainly attributed to the bad influence exercised by several pro-slavery religious bodies of America upon certain religious denominations in this country.

The resolution was then put to the vote, and unanimously passed.

The Rev. P. H. Cornford [late missionary of Jamaica] proposed the second resolution, which declared that the results of West India emancipation were on the whole truly gratifying and satisfactory; and that most of the evils existing in the West Indies were attributable either to the pernicious influences of slavery, or to other causes altogether irrespective of the Act of Emancipation.

Mr. Cornish, in the course of a long and able speech, mainly animadverted upon the "truck" and "contract" systems, and the introduction of free immigrants, as exercising a very injurious influence upon the physical and moral condition of the free labourers of the West India islands. He paid a high tribute to the character of the negroes of those islands, and declared that they were a most industrious class; but he asked, what has the commercial question to do with the right or the wrong of slavery? As well might one ask what is the value of virtue, or the worth of justice. One out of every six of the coloured population were members of Christian churches, and none were admitted without the most rigid test of their qualification. The Baptist Missionary Society found that, at the present time, all the money that they had ever spent in the West Indies was from those represented in chapels, schoolhouses, and other religious property built by coloured communicants in Baptist churches. The great treadmill erected at, or near Port Maria, under the apprehension that emancipation would engender a vast amount of crime among the blacks, had never been used, and he had not heard during his long residence among them one of their number breaking into a house at night. Indeed, their vices were of quite a venial character. Black men occupied pulpits, black men filled important posts in the press, and they even took their places as legislators in the House of Assembly. The speaker concluded by an eloquent denunciation of the doctrine that man can hold property in man.

The Rev. Mr. Henderson, of British Guiana, seconded the resolution. He referred to the gigantic evils which slavery must necessarily create among the enslaved population, many of which must still cling to them, even at the end of sixteen years' possession of their rights, but he believed, from practical knowledge, that where justice is done to the free labourer he generally becomes a respectable man, and a good member of society. He referred to various laws existing in British Guiana [among others, to the masters' and servants' act], which he believed exercised a demoralizing influence upon the negro population. The speaker read copious extracts from the most recent reports of several magistrates residing in the colony, in confirmation of his statement that the coloured people were rapidly advancing in civilisation These documents particularly referred to their increasing regard for education, and the great progress which habits of temperance had made amongst them.

In reply to a question put by the Chairman,

Mr. Henderson stated that to his own knowledge the property of careful and judicious planters had greatly increased in value since the passing of the Act of Emancipation.

The Chairman thought ths information important, as the British public were continually hearing of the adversity to which property in the West Indies was subjected. A relative of his [a Captain Weston] had recently gone to an estate in Jamaica, which he found in a very deplorable state, but a personal examination of the cause soon assured him that, by the adoption of practicable improvements, it would pay a fair profit and become a valuable property. He did not think the Anti-Slavery Society could do better service than to lay such facts before the world. He considered a clear, distinct, and forcible history of the commercial question highly important to the success of the cause.

Mr. Joseph Sturge spoke of the impossibility of commercial success in the West Indies, while there were so many non-resident planters. He regarded it as a gratifying fact that three-fifths of the heads of coloured families in Jamaica are holders of freehold property.

Mr. Cornish referred to the great waste of sugar, both before and after its shipment. He considered the almost exclusive cultivation of sugar, the exclusion of other indigenous products, as having greatly retarded the progress of the colonies.

Mr. S. Bourne [late stipendiary magistrate of Demerara] said that he formed the acquaintance of Mr. Joseph John Gurney when he visited the West Indies. Mr. Gurney asked him whether slave labour was as cheap as free labour. At that time he was almost ready to reply in the affirmative, but on making searching inquiry, he came to a totally opposite conclusion. He believed that it would be a great advantage to the colonies if cotton, as well as sugar, was cultivated. Many benevolent persons of his acquaintance had been hampered with difficulties on the subject of emancipation. He was ready to prove to such persons—1. That by properly draining the land, one-third more canes would be produced. 2. That this measure would improve the general health, and also attract fresh capitalists to the colonies. 3. That the introduction of a more simple machinery [such as he had placed on view, in another part of the building,] would double the quantity of sugar produced. 4. By the suitable industrial education of the labourers. He suggested that the conference should appoint a sub-committee to consider the subject.

The Rev. W. James, of Bristol, remarked that he had conversed with gentlemen connected with the West Indies, who had complained that the negroes would not work. He wished some information on this point.

Mr. Bourne replied that he never knew of any deficiency in the labour market when a sufficient remuneration was offered.

The Chairman asked if the negro would work properly for stipulated wages.

Mr. Bourne replied in the affirmative.

A conversation ensued, in which Mr. Chamerovzow, Mr. Woodwark, and Mr. Joseph Clark took part.

Mr. Chamerovzow stated that the substance of the numerous letters that he had received from the West Indies on the subject, was to the effect that there was no indisposition to work on the part of the coloured population, and that when they refused to do so, it was almost invariably the fault of the planter.

Mr. George Thompson earnestly recommended every member of the conference to peruse Dr. Davy's recently published work on "Slavery before and after Emancipation," which contained the results of a very extensive personal inquiry on the subject which had been considered by the conference, and furnished a most valuable body of evidence to all abolitionists.

The resolution having been carried, the conference adjourned.

First Day—Afternoon Sitting.

At three o'clock the conference re-assembled, and J. T. Price, Esq., was voted to the chair, in the absence of Mr. Gurney.

M. Victor Schœlcher, (a member of the late French National Assembly) arose amid much cheering to propose the third resolution, which declared that the results of emancipation in the French West India colonies were highly encouraging, considering the brief period this measure has been in operation; and that they were an additional illustration of the perfect safety of immediate abolition. M. Schœlcher reviewed the state of public opinion in France on the slave question prior to the revolution of 1848. One of the first acts of the Provincial Government [which he should ever consider it an honour to have been associated with] was the abolition of slavery in the French colonies. They abolished it without transition, and in so doing the planters themselves had declared that the Government had acted wisely. In proof of this he quoted from various colonial newspapers. With regard to the insurrection of negroes at Martinique, that took place before the Act of Emancipation had taken effect, in fact that was a result of the revolution at home. He drew a rather gloomy picture of the present state of the colonies under the Empire. Slavery had been for ever abolished in the colonies by the decrees of the Republic, but much injustice was still perpetuated. The governor of Guadaloupe had dismissed the Attorney-General, and driven away the bishops, because they refused to make their high offices subservient to compulsory labour. Pride of caste, he thought, was an evil which takes the longest time to cure. It is because the free blacks have had the impudence to say, "Am I not as much as you?" that these difficulties have arisen. But there is order now in the Antilles, as there is in Paris. Any negro is liable to be arrested on the highway if he have not a passport, for which he is obliged to pay. The education of the blacks is subjected to equally obnoxious regulations. He spoke of the evils of free immigration, connected with which there are always the evils of slavery. But he found consolation in the fact that the destiny of evil is to be temporary, of good to be everlasting. He referred to the statement that the European republican leaders had agreed to overlook American slavery. It could not be so. He, for one, as a Republican, believed that slavery is nowhere so great a shame as in a republic. He denounced, in terms of strong indignation, the slavery of the United States, but believed that the American abolitionists would yet overthrow this, its last stronghold. —M. Schœlcher's address was frequently interrupted by the plaudits of the meeting.—In reply to a question, M. Schœlchers stated that 120,000,000 francs had been paid as compensation to the slaveholders by the French Government.

Mr. Sturge stated that he believed no man had done more than Victor Schœlcher towards effecting emancipation in the French colonies.

Mr. Chamerovzow said that he had ascertained from French colonial authorities that the prosperity of the Bourbon and of the other islands had considerably increased since the abolition of slavery.

Mr. G. W. Alexander, after paying a tribute of respect to the anti-slavery labours of Schœlcher, Lamertine, and Arago, stated that, during a recent visit he had paid to Guadaloupe and Martinique, he was glad to find but little of the prejudice against colour.

The resolution was then passed unanimously.

Mr. Chamerovzow brought formard a resolution, which lamented the continued existence of the Cuban slave trade; and urged upon the Spanish Government the fulfilment of the solemn engagement to effect its abolition, which it had entered into by treaty, as well as by the acceptance of £400,000 as compensation. Mr. Chamerovzow stated that frequent remonstrances had been addressed to the Spanish Government by successive British ministers, and that repeated promises of a satisfactory kind had been made in return, and several captains-general of Cuba had been removed. It was supposed by most persons that Generals Concha and Valdes were inclined to anti-slavery measures, and the rigid enforcement of the treaties; but they both had received immense sums of money for supporting the slave trade. General Concha, the present Captain-General, had also formerly held that office, during which period he received bribes. During the recent disturbances in Spain he had made his return to his present high office a condition of his support of O'Donnell. He [Mr. Chamerovzow] had read a copy of a book published by General Concha in Madrid, in which he asserted that Cuba must have a large slave population, and therefore that the African slave trade must be maintained. True, he issued, as all his successors have done, a proclamation stating that he intended to put down the slave trade, but certain arguments in the shape of ounces of gold had already prevailed with him. He will make professions, but will not fulfil them. Of General Valdes he could say, that he knew the names of persons engaged in the slave trade who had paid him for permission to do so. As a proof of the manner in which the slave returns are falsified, the speaker said that the census for 1850 made the number of slaves 100,000 less than they were stated to be in 1840—a falsehood all the more striking when it was known that from 15 to 20 thousand slaves are annually imported from Africa. The Spanish Government constantly increases the slave population to intimidate the colony; for in the event of a revolt against their rule, they would liberate the slaves that they might possess their support. For many years there has been an anti-slavery party in Cuba; but the men who petitioned O'Donnell for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade had been imprisoned, or otherwise persecuted. The majority of the planters are in favour of a discontinuance of the slave trade. Mr. Chamerovzow, in conclusion, stated that the annexation schemes prevalent in the United States had been originated by the liberal party in Cuba, and that American slaveholders have taken advantage of this circumstance. Another piratical expedition was being prepared. He considered that Cuban slavery was less odious in many of its features than American slavery. If America obtained Cuba, our West India possessions would be placed in great jeopardy. Lord John Russell had stated that, if that event took place, they could not be preserved.

Mr. Sturge briefly moved, and Mr. Isaac Bass, of Brighton, seconded the resolution.

Mr. Ralph Carr, of Watford, urged the greater importance of the land slave trade over the sea slave trade, considering, as he did, that the latter could not exist without the former.

After a suggestion from the Rev. James Ballantyne, M.A., of Edinburgh,

Mr. Parker Pillsbury, of Boston, in a short but eloquent speech, referred to the deliberate violation of the slave trade statutes of the United States by the Government of that country, in proof of the uselessness of remonstrating with the Spanish authorities. 19,000 Africans were imported into the States every year, and nobody could wonder at it, seeing that nearly every President is a slaveholder, and being one is a recommendation to the office. Slavery has only to say, "Do this, and it is done;" and it will obtain Cuba.

Mr. Reynolds suggested that application should be made for the return of the £400,000 paid to Spain.

After a few remarks by the Revs. Mr. Solly, C. Stovel, and Edward Mathews, and Mr. Carr, the resolution was ordered to stand over until the following morning, that the committee might make in it certain alterations which had been suggested during the discussion.

Second Day's Proceedings.

John Cropper, Esq., having been called to the chair.

John Candler, Esq., rose to move a resolution in reference to the extinction of the slave trade in Brazil. As an evidence of the animus of the Government he would mention that, in November, 1852, two small cargoes of slaves landed on the coast of that country were taken and restored to liberty by the authorities, and for more than two years not a slave had been imported there. A few years since an attempt was made to introduce a cargo by a Cuban slaver under the American flag, but the attempt was discovered and frustrated by the Government, who took and imprisoned the captain. So far as depended on the Brazilian Government, the slave trade was extinct and would remain so. Nobody in Brazil doubted the sincerty of the Emperor and his Cabinet in the matter. The native population looked with great suspicion upon the Portuguese who had been engaged in the traffic. Previous to 1852 no less than 50,000 slaves were annually introduced into that country, so that, during the last four years, 200,000 were saved from importation. All that had been effected through the determined efforts of the British Government. Three persons in Rio Janeiro formed themselves into an anti-slavery society; they shortly increased to 21, and when himself (Mr. Chandler) and Mr. Wilson Burgess were there, two years afterwards, they had increased to 215; and instead of holding their meetings with closed doors they held them in a public saloon. Attempts had also been made in the Brazilian Legislature to put down slavery. A bill was introduced into the legislature declaring every child thereafter to be born free. The effort failed. The people at large, however, were friendly to slavery. There were a few merchants and planters who thought they could do better without the trade than with it, but until they got a supply of emigrants they refused to free their slaves. During the present autumn a bill had been introduced into the Legislature to prevent the internal slave trade, and it was thought that public sentiment was so far advanced, that in the next session they would be able to carry it. In America there was but one State, Georgia, which forbid the internal slave trade; and that only upon a principle of expediency, because their market was already overstocked. In the Brazilian towns the larger number of inhabitants were slaves, and there could, therefore, be little persecution, because it might lead to rebellion. Horses and carts are now used where slaves were formerly employed for the transit of goods, which had given the slaves some satisfaction, as they were allowed to work partly for their own profit. The conference were justified, therefore, in their resolution, in expressing encouragement of the Brazilians who were disposed to give liberty to as many of their slaves as they thought were deserving it. Their laws were very favourable to that purpose, because every slave was entitled to go into the market, get himself valued by the authorities, and at that, or any subsequent period, demand his freedom at that price.

Mr. Robert Chaulton seconded the resolution.

Mr. Wilson Burgess supported it.

A gentleman inquired whether the prejudice against color, in Brazil, was as great as in the United States?

Mr. Burgess believed it was not; but he rather attributed the fact to the circumstance that the Brazilians were so very near the complexion of their slaves. (Laughter.)

The resolution was put and carried unanimously.

The Rev. James Sherman then rose to propose a resolution deprecating American slavery, reprobating the conduct of those American ministers who defended or apologized for it, and calling upon the churches in this kingdom to protest against it; commending those American churches which are faithful to the slave's cause to fraternal regard; eulogising the whole conduct of anti-slavery members of Congress, and finally expressing cordial sympathy with the abolitionists of America generally, for their fidelity and the uncompromising perseverance with which they had pursued their purpose. The resolution was moved by the reverend gentleman in a most able and eloquent speech, which we regret that our limits will not permit the insertion of, and which we will not impair the fame of by a mere sketch.

Mr. Duncan McLaran, late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, seconded the resolution. He was glad to support it, because it entered into no metaphysical subtleties or nicieties, and most vehemently condemned slavery; an institution which he regarded as containing all the worst evils that afflict society. He believed the resolution would have great weight, as the Americans are very susceptible of public opinion.

Mr. Alderman Harrison suggested that a resolution should be passed about the treatment of British colored seamen, who visited the southern seaports.

A discussion ensued on "the three-fifths clause" of the American constitution, in which Mr. J. T. Price, and the Rev. S. R. Ward took the principal part.

The Rev. Francis Bishop, of Liverpool, stated that it was with much pain that he rose to propose an addendum to the resolution, which might excite opposition. He observed that the anti-slavery senators were alluded to in the resolution in terms of deserved eulogy; but there are other men who are specially named, who were the pioneers in the great struggle for freedom, and who never could have labored as they had done, had they not possessed undying faith in justice, truth, and God. He referred to the American Anti-Slavery Society. He proposed that the name of that society, together with that of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, should be embodied in the resolution. He did not wish to enter into the question, but was prepared to prove, if necessary, that the most grievous injustice had been done to the members of the American Anti-Slavery Society in this country.

The Rev. W. James, of Bristol, seconded the proposal.

Mr. Joseph Sturge implored his friends not to press their amendment. He thought that the resolution as it stood was sufficiently broad and comprehensive, and that harmony would best be preserved by the mention of no particular society.

Mr. McLaren, being appealed to, objected to the proposed addendum on the ground of his ignorance of the character of the various American anti slavery societies, and of the fact that the resolution included all abolitionists.

The Rev. W. James maintained the catholicity of the anti-slavery platform; and was at a loss to understand why the committee should object to a recognition of the services of the most important anti-slavery society in America.

The Rev. S. R. Ward was satisfied with the resolution, because he considered that the phrase, "the abolitionists generally," includes the American and foreign societies to which he belonged.

The Rev. F. Bishop said that he had proposed an addition to the resolution because he had seen it stated in print that the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society had repudiated the American Anti-Slavery Society, on the false ground of its infidelity.

Mr. George Thompson paid a glowing tribute of respect to the American Anti-Slavery Society. Originally he was in favour of a distinct mention of it in the resolution, but taking into account various circumstances, he was disposed not to press the point at the present time, if he could understand that the committee intended for the future to reject no one whom the slave does not reject. If he could do this, he would suggest to Mr. Bishop the withdrawal of his amendment.

After a few words from Mr. Josiah Forster,

Mr. Bishop said he would withdraw his amendment if he had some satisfactory assurance from the committee.

Mr. Chamerovzow declared that no resolution condemning or misrepresenting the American Society had ever, to his knowledge, appeared on the minutes of the committee; and that they were animated by a desire to receive all abolitionists to their platforms and fellowship.

Mr. Bishop then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. Parker Pillsbury, of Boston, delivered a speech of great eloquence and power. We greatly regret our inability to give more than a mere sketch of his remarks. He severely animadverted on the past course of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society in reference to the American Society. He denounced Mr. John Scoble, and charged him with having sought to blast and to blacken the character of William Lloyd Garrison and his associates. He next reviewed the progress of the slave powers since 1820; exposed the corrupt state of American politics at the present time; expressed his belief that the political organisations against slavery were useless; and that the true motto for abolitionists to adopt is that of "No union with slaveholders." He criticised, at great length, the proceedings of the deputation of friends to the United States, and declared that a large number of American "Friends" were false to the slave. He illustrated the latter charge by several facts of which he was personally cognisant. Referring to the religious bodies of America, he characterised the course pursued by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions as having been grossly profligate and wicked. He accused it of having systematically supported slavery, and of having also, by extreme acts, countenanced polygamy among the Indians.

The Rev. Cuthbert Young interrupted Mr. Pillsbury, and charged him with having made mis-statements.

The Rev. R. Ward confirmed all that Mr. Pillsbury had stated, and said that he had to do with those very questions when Mr. Young was still within the walls of his alma mater.

Dr. Carlisle begged that Mr. Pillsbury might not again be interrupted.

Mr. Pillsbury said that he had documentary proofs in his pocket for all that he had asserted. He urged the importance of religious bodies in the country taking right action on the slavery question; stated that the rejection of Dr. Price from the Bible Society was one of the grandest testimonies British Christians had ever borne against slavery. After some further remarks, Mr. Pillsbury resumed his seat amid loud applause.

At this stage of the proceedings, Mr. Cropper was compelled to retire, and Mr. McLaren was installed in the chair. A very long and most important discussion respecting the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions now ensued.

The Rev. CUTHBERT YOUNG spoke in behalf of the American Board, and declared that its present action was of an anti-slavery character.

The Rev. JAMES VINCENT, of Cincinnati, Ohio, at considerable length analysed "the Treat letter" which Mr. Young had referred to as substantiating his statement, and endeavoured to show that its pretended anti-slavery was a blind and a delusion. Mr. Vincent also preferred serious accusations against the official members of various British missionary societies, and charged the editor of the British Banner with inconsistency in having at one time denounced the American Board, and with now being its advocate.

The CHAIRMAN thought the discussions on the subject should stop here.

Mr. SHERMAN considered it of such vital importance that he trusted Mr. Vincent would proceed.

The latter gentleman accordingly described the position of the American Tract Society, and also the American Sunday-school Union.

The Rev GEORGE SMITH replied at some length.

Resolutions in favour of the use of free-labour, and of the cultivation of cotton in the East Indies, and other parts of the world, were proposed by Mr. Elihu Burritt, seconded by Mr. George Thompson, and carried unanimously.

The Rev S. R. Ward proposed, and Major-General THOMPSON seconded a resolution, expressing sympathy with the fugitive slaves of Canada, and referring with satisfaction to their progressive condition.

Mr. Alderman PALK, of Southampton, proposed, and Mr. JOHN ELLIS (late member for Leicester) seconded a resolution protesting against the treatment of British coloured seamen who visit the slave states of America. These resolutions, together with one proposed by Mr. STURGE, which memoralised the Sultan for the abolition of slavery in Turkey, were carried unanimously.

The proceedings of the conference then terminated.

Two Weeks of Time.

Since our last issue the old Car of Time has been rolling forward, and two weeks more have been added to the days that are past and gone. During that short period, the holidays have come and gone, and as this is the first opportunity we have had of greeting our readers, we sincerely hope that the season has been to them one of profitable enjoyment.

Christmas, Merry Christmas has been here. To many it was indeed a day of rejoicing, a time of social reunion; then families assembled, and while enjoying the festivities of the day, the past was almost forgotten and the future lightly thought of.

May their hightost hopes and brightest anticipations be realized!

Within these same two weeks another year has dawned upon us, another account has been opened in the Book of Time, to be continued until the approaching year warns us that the Balance Sheets must be compared.

How many on the opening of the departed year started out with a large stock on hand of plans formed for the future! How many resolves to avoid vice in its many forms, were made? To shun the gaming table, to put away the "maddening bowl," to make renewed efforts to retrieve a good character or restore a ruined fortune? How many looked forward to long lives of happiness, surrounded with all the comforts that wealth can procure, or upon how many who went forward in the strength of manhood to do battle for their country, conscious of hardships to be encountered, yet willing to brave them all in defence of the right and their country's glory, and hoping, with a laudable ambition, to win unfading laurels by doing deeds of valor, has the New Year dawned?

Each heart knoweth its own sorrow, and of the millions who have compared notes, we fear but few, comparatively, will dare say, I am in a solvent condition. A great majority have been declared bankrupt.

The thousands who fell at Inkermann and on the banks of the Alma, assist in swelling that vast majority; but though they will never be again greeted by the accustomed salutations, the story of their noble achievements will often be recounted on many a day which shall usher in what we hope this will be to all,—A Happy New Year! S.

National Prejudices.

Prejudices against nation and race are fast being dispelled, the world over. If we turn our attention eastward, we shall see the most powerful nations of western Europe voluntarily waging a war against the encroachments of a despotism. The contest now is such as was never before witnessed. It is the people of Western Europe, on the one hand, and despotism on the other. It is no longer nation against nation, but the nations against the spirit of oppression embodied in the Czar. Such contests tend to undo the shackles of prejudice, the national title is now given only as a distinguishing feature, but the feeling among them is that of union. French, English and Turk, forgetting former animosities, stand side by side in a common cause. The spirit of enlightenment is convincing men of their natural equality, and that the fact of their belonging to one nation or another is but one of the accidences of birth. These convictions tend to promote the growth of liberal sentiments, before which national prejudices must vanish. As an illustration, take the English and French. These nations, though near neighbors, through long centuries cherished the most bitter feelings towards each other; but now, through the influences of Christian enlightenment, which cultivates and trains in a right direction, the natural love of liberty, not only for ourselves but others, have been the first to act in opposition to a despotism encroaching on a people whom both had looked upon as despicable. It may not be that in both of these cases the rulers are entirely freed from national prejudices, but what we wish to show is that the hearts of the people of the nations at large beat in the right direction, that they are becoming divested of prejudices of nation and race.

The people in other parts of the continent are ready to take part in the contest, but their hands are yet chained by the vampires who hourly extract a portion of their life blood; they wait, knowing that despotism, which is the product of pride, and inseparable from prejudice, if checked on the Danube, will be stayed throughout Europe.

If we now turn our attention homeward, we observe another exemplifiation of the fact, that national prejudices are disappearing. The different nations of the earth are peopling this western continent; they are coming, for the purpose of standing side by side with each other in the great battle of life; prejudice of race or nation is thrown aside, and all agree to join interests and become one people. Especially is this the case in Canada. Comprised in the term Canadian, and enjoying equally the benefits of wisely administered laws, are here found all nations and tongues; but no animosities are engendered in consequence of the mingling; on the contrary, the small amount of bitterness that may have existed as for instance, between Scotch, English, and Irish, is fast being numbered among the things that were.

We see it stated in a United States exchange, in palliation of the prejudice that exists there, against the "dark skinned races," that the prejudice of nations and race are inherent, and that lying too deep in the human heart to be caused by any difference of social position, it will always exist. That our cotemporary should err in judgment is not to be wondered at, being surrounded by the influences which tend to promote prejudice; but in Canada, where the laws are not inlaid with a despotic principle, we are enabled to judge correctly. The people of the United States afford an evidence of the correctness of our position; they, like Canadians, have assembled from the four quarters of the earth, and the moment that they formed their national compact, that moment they gave to the world a proof that they had so far "conquered their prejudices" as to rid themselves of those at least, which were directed against all, save those possessed of dark skins.

Coming to this point, these questions naturally arise. Is not the Know Nothing or Native American movement in the States an evidence of national prejudices? And why are the "dark-skinned races" subjected to such a blighting prejudice? In our opinion, the Native American move is no evidence of any prejudice distinct from that of color. The despotism which now holds sway in the States, is maintained by those who well know that with the spread of a population devoted to freedom, their system of slavery must fall. Knowing, therefore, that a great majority of the emigrants entering their country, are advocates of universal freedom, and being taught by experience that they will seek those localities where there is greatest freedom, and by their votes contribute to its maintainance, they have formed their present party, not from a prejudice to the Europeans, from whom they have descended, but in order the more easily to carry forward their despotism, which, as we before stated, is the result of pride; and as the pride of the despot always causes a feelings of hatred, or prejudice against his victim, so the enslaved condition of the colored people of the United States, by placing them far below all other classes of society, renders them objects of popular prejudice; and their color being a distinguishing mark, they are the more easily subjected to it. This prejudice will exist so long as the conditions on which it depends remain. S.

☞ A young man, named Samuel Reid, was murdered in St. John's Ward, last Tuesday night, after the election. The occurrence took place near the corner of Elizabeth and Edward Streets. The unfortunate youth was wounded in the thigh, with a clasp knife, so severely, that death quickly ensued from the rapid loss of blood. S.

☞ THE AMERICAN PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, for January, has been received; also, the WATER CURE JOURNAL. Both published by Fowlers & Wells, New York.

☞ THE LITTLE PILGRIM, for January, and the JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR, have also come to hand.

We would willingly have given the accompanying Circular entire, as it calls attention to a subject of vital importance, and which was presented to us under a different form some months since, but which from a press of other duties at the time, was suffered to pass without comment. We would just say the charges prepared against the American Society are strictly true, and that if the Tract Societies of Canada act in concert with it, knowing the facts as they must, they are equally guilty of aiding in disseminating arguments for sceptics by promalgating a spurious article under the guise of Christianity.

CIRCULAR.

American Tract Society—Its Dubious Character—Tract Societies in Canada.

To the Editor of the "Reform Banner"

STRATFORD, County of Perth, Oct. 20, 1854

SIR.—I hope you will spare me a space in your paper for the following remarks, as regards the "American Tract Society" of 150 Nassau Street, New York.

That Society has been in existence for over 28 years, and has been successful in disseminating and circulating many Tracts—republished editions and abridged editions of Religious works, and also Periodicals of its own, called the "American Messenger," and the "Child's Paper"—and it is admitted that their various publications are well got up, flashy and attractive in appearance, and cheap in price.

But are the principles which guide this Religious Society correct, or not? Its managers are accused (and such seems not to be denied) of:—

1. Publishing alleged copies of original books, wherein passages of the author are omitted and expunged, and of substituting passages for those they have so omitted and expunged—in fact of publishing as true, what is known beforehand to be untrue.

2. They are accused of intentionally and knowingly omitting all paragraphs, sentences and words, regarding Slavery, in the original works; the copies of which works are exposed for sale, and sold, as genuine and correct editions, both in the United States and in Canada.

3. That by such conduct, they, as a prominent Society of Religious men and Ministers, uphold the vile right of Slaveholding and Slavery, and of entirely avoiding in their publications and concealing all allusion to the vile traffic in human flesh, which is one of the crying public iniquities of several States of the Union.

I may quote one of the Laws of the Slaveholding States, that of the State of South Carolina, (and in others there are similar laws, and in some holding Slaves as real estate,) namely: "Slaves shall be deemed, sold, taken, reputed and adjudged in law to be chattels personal in the hands of their owners and possessors, and their executors, administrators, and assigns, to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever."

We know from experience that wicked intentions may be garbed in robes of what is really good, and it occurs to me, and will I think, to every thinking person, that from the fear of offending Southern Slaveholding States, with its system, and "peculiar institutions" of Slavery, this Society conceals the truth. It is not now assured that it will do so, The accusation is made that it does so, by the Press in Canada, and forcibly in the Globe and Examiner, to the great credit of the Editors of these papers (see Examiner of 27th, and Globe of 25th and 27th September.) Wherever the work of publication of any periodical or book, or tract, issued by the American Tract Society of 150, Nassau Street, appears, the same should now be received with the hesitation and doubt, that the Religious Book or Paper may not be a genuine article.

In vain, too, will any parent, on searching the columns of the "American Messenger" and "Child's Paper," find any article on the sin of Slavery, or of such a system being in existence, or as being unchristian, inhuman and brutalizing. Attractive and well printed, and with well executed small engravings in the "Child's Paper," though these papers be, such only help to act as blinds to the eyes of the religious reading public,—helps to aid in the concealment. How can the young and rising generation be guided in this matter, when a paper intended as the "Child's Paper" is, for their especial instruction, so conducted.

The wish of that Society is, and of its managers, that an American people may receive in a cheap and largely extended circulation of millions of pages, of volumes, Tracts and Periodicals, (a statement of which will be seen in the "American Messenger" of July 1854, and in the Upper Canada Tract Society's Reports.) a kind of Religious knowledge suited to the civil government of portions of that country. In other words, that a people in certain States, who buy and sell mankind, from the babe before it is born, and the sucking child, and its mother, even to the separation of both, and even so of husband and wife,—who hold these as simple "goods and chattels" which can be sold and mortgaged as my tables and chairs can be; that people must have a religion, and a religious class of books and periodicals, suited to their taste—to their inclination!

"The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" must be concealed, as uncongenial to Southern civil institutions. The Society stands accused, of placing the Gospel and Religion, as subordinate to civil and local laws. That which is from Heaven, must be yielded, and moulded and fashioned, to the thing of this earth, so far as regards the Southern States at least.

But the evil is still greater,—for to support this enterprising Society, which circulates what is stated, with hundreds of colporteurs, (travelling agents who peddle and sell, who are a useful class,) at its service,—this society claims and receives aid from the Eastern, Northern and Western States, and alas! from Canada, (which all repudiate Slavery,) and ramifies the circulation of its papers and books, among communities and people, who are ignorant of the deceit practised; and whose religious Teachers and Ministers stand accused of conniving at the scheme, by not sufficiently warning their people to eschew and avoid the religious publications of a Society which they the Ministers know (there are some exceptions) are circulated so widely and under the circumstances stated. Not only is the aid I refer to asked and given, but it has been stated and remains uncontradicted, that the funds are nearly all collected from the Anti-Slavery States and people, and from Canada;—the Southern people and those of Slaveholding States contributing but a mite, as it were, in comparison! As to the most prominent Missionary Society in the States, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, its income is about $280,000, of which only about $8,650 is given by the Slaveholling States!

But how are the people to obtain religious books and papers of a genuine and true character? True; and here it behoves the leaders and guardians of the various prominent Protestant Religious bodies in Canada, to bestir themselves and point out or institute a remedy. There is not a Protestant Book-Store in this Colony, it is assumed, in which the Books of that Society are not put before a religious public, to buy, and are sold.

But I am happy to be informed that in one instance at least,—and it is to be hoped there are others equally watchful,—the objections to the American Society will be met by a healthful, accurate and truthful supply of religious Books. I am informed that the London Presbytery of the (Free) Presbyterian Church of Canada, at their meeting lately at London, having in view the state of the American Tract Society, (and of which I am aware each member of the Presbytery was to a certain extent apprised)—have resolved to establish, or to induce the establishment of a Book-Store and Depot at London, with a system of colporteurage and circulation, within their bounds of Western Canada, which to every class of religionists will be unobjectionable, so far as the selling and circulating of what is genuinely the author's own words without a concealment of the truth, is concerned. Such will have the fervent wishes of many for its success. I trust too, that it will have a universal not a sectional object in view, in diseminating truth.

* * * * * * * * *

Are the Canadian Tract and Book Societies of Montreal, Kingston, Toronto and Hamilton, as such, sustaining the "American Tract Society," and the "American Sunday School Union Society," (which latter is similarly accused with its neighbour)? who carry the annual reports? In those at least of the "Upper Canada Tract Society" in Toronto, no warning is given of the deceptions of the American Tract Society. What does this mean, as well as the laudatory remarks by that Society in favor of the American one? The Upper Canada Society has made its purchases from the American Tract Society, at the same time knowing its standing, and concealing the same from the people of Canada. The Upper Canada Tract Society was accused, lately, under rather questionable circumstances, of a wish to co-operate with the American Society—but this has been denied. Still, its actions have not been above suspicion, but seem very doubtful, for there has not been, so far as known, any protestation or declaration by the Upper Canada Tract Society against the malpractices of the American one. Why this has not been done, and widely published—and why the publications of an American Society, known to be acused in its operations, are honoured above those of other American Societies which are known to be in orthodox standing, not accused,—are matters which a Canadian public are entitled to some explanation of.

I am Sir,
Your ób'dt Ser'vt,
JOHN J. E. LINTON.

N. B.—The President of the Upper Canada Tract Society, and several Ministers of Religion, have already, by me, been apprised of the main part of the sentiments in the above letter.

From the Anti-Slavery Standard.

The American Tract Society and its Expurgated Tracts.

A correspondent at Norristown, Pa., in a recent letter, says:

"You are aware that the American Tract Society has been charged with expurgating a few sentences, in relation to Slavery, from a work written on Love to God by the late Mr. Gurney. I understand that the Secretary of the Society at Philadelphia denies the charge, and claims that the work published by the Society was prepared for them by Mr. Gurney himself, and that it was published without alteration. Having seen the charge in anti-slavery books and papers, and never having seen it denied, I supposed it was admitted. Will you inform me, through the Standard or otherwise, whether the Society did make the alteration?"

As our correspondent farther says he does not wish to knowingly accuse others of what they are not guilty, any more than to be deceived himself, we presume he wishes to know whether the Tract Society has ever so mutilated and emasculated any book as it is accused of having done by this of Mr. Gurney. But we will answer both questions.

In Mr. Gurney's "Habitual Exercise of Love to God," on page 142 of the original edition, is the following passage:

"If this love had always prevailed among professing Christians, where would have been the sword of the Crusader? Where the African Slave Trade? Where the odious system which permits to man a property in his fellow-men and converts rational beings into marketable chattels?"

In the Tract Society's edition the passage stands thus:

"If this love had always prevailed among professing Christians, where would have been the sword of the Crusader? Where the tortures of the Inquisition? Where every system of oppression and wrong by which he who has the power revels in luxury and ease at the expense of his fellow-men?"

The special allusion to the Slave Trade and to Slavery, it will be observed, is totally suppressed, and the thought in Mr. Gurney's mind travestied by a general reference to oppression and wrong which means nothing.

How came it to be so changed? Perhaps it was changed by Mr. Gurney. We are willing to concede that it was probably done by him, inasmuch as the Secretary of the Tract Society denies that the Society did it. But is it likely that Mr. Gurney would make such an alteration unless it had been suggested to him? We think not. Why should he? What motive could he have? But, on the other hand, the Tract Society has a motive, it is in the habit of making such expurgations, and the probability is that it induced Mr. Gurney to consent to this, if not to make it with his own pen. Perhaps that consent was gained on the plea that the tract would be of great use and redound to the glory of God, if the Society printed it, but that it could not print it unless the change was made. Who knows? The Secretary; but the Secretary only make such revelation as pleases him.

But did the Society ever make any such expurgation? We have before us a Remonstrance of a church in Hartford against the policy of the Tract Society, and from it we learn some facts touching this matter. The Society, it seems, has reprinted the well-known "Essays to do Good," by the Rev. Dr. Cotton Mather, declaring in the preface,

"In this edition, such portions of the original essays are omitted, and such changes have been made in the phraseology, as might be expected after the lapse of more than a century since the work was written."

The natural inference from this language is that nothing had been omitted which could be of any interest to the reader of our time—a change, by-the-by, in it itself bad enough, and a liberty with any author not often excusable. But that is not all. On page 44 of the Tract Society's edition is this passage:

"O that the souls of our servants were more regarded by us! that we might give a better demonstration that we despise not our own souls, by doing what we can for the souls of our servants. How can we pretend to Christianity, when we do no more to christianize our servants?"

Now, if the reader will read this as Cotton Mather wrote it, and for "servants" substitute the word "slaves," he will find a difference, and still greater will he find it if, after the word 'servants' at the end of the first sentence he will add what Cotton Mather wrote, and what the Tract Society has altogether suppressed, namely:—"and not using them as if they had no souls! That the poor slaves and blacks which live with us may, by our means, be made the candidates of the heavenly life!"

And from the same page with this passage there is dropped by the Tract Society this whole paragraph:

"But if any servant of God may be so honored by him as to be made the successful instrument of obtaining from a British Parliament 'an Act for the Christianizing of the slaves in the plantations,' then it may be hoped something more may be done than has yet been done, that the blood of souls may not be found in the skirts of our nation; a controversy of heaven with our colonies may be removed and prosperity may be restored; or, however, the honorable instrument will have unspeakable peace and joy in the remembrance of his endeavours. In the meantime, the slave trade is a spectacle that shocks humanity.

The harmless natives basely they trepan,
And barter baubles for the souls of men;
The wretches they to Christian climes bring o'er
To serve worse heathens than they did before."

This is an act of the Tract Society of old date, and the Remonstrance of the Fourth Congregational Church, of Hartford, mentions a curious incident in connection with it. This book of Mather's remained out of print for a long period, after its first publication, till it was republished in England under the editorship of the Rev. Mr. Burder. The passages above cited he also omitted, remarking, however, in a foot-note, that he did so, because happily they were no longer applicable to his own country [England.] This edition of Mr. Burder was followed in the reprints of the "Essays" in this country, including the foot-note, till the Tract Society took it in hand, when that was omitted, as well as the passages to which it referred. "The English editor," remarks the Remonstrance, "made omissions because they were inapplicable to his country; but you [the Tract Society] suppressed the same passages because they were applicable to yours!"

Another and more recent instance of the peculiar manner in which the Tract Society shrouds the truth is mentioned in the Remonstrance. The Society has published an edition of the memoir of Mary Lundie Duncan, and the following passage, to be found on page 67 of the English edition, is altogether omitted:

"We have been lately much interested in the emancipation of slaves. I never heard eloquence more overpowering than that of George Thompson. I am most thankful that he has been raised up. O that the measure soon to be proposed in Parliament may be effectual."

On page 87 of the same edition is another reference to the departure of "George Thompson, the eloquent pleader for the abolition of slavery," on a visit to this country, and this the Tract Society also strikes, out, as well as these lines which Mary Lundie Duncan addressed to him on that occasion:

"Yet go, heaven-favored hero go!
Pursue your glorious plan;
Abridge the weight of human wo,
And raise the slave to man.

"Heaven bless your cause! you country's prayers
Attend you o'er the sea!
Go, break the chain that slavery wears
And bid the oppressed be free."

Again, in other places, similar suppressions are made relating to the emancipated West Indian Negroes as "no more degraded lower than the brutes—no more bowed down with suffering from which there is no redress," and as now being able to "seek the sanctuary fearless of the lash" and to call their children their own."

Now, to all this the Secretary of the Tract Society would probably reply, as in the case of Mr. Gurney's book, that whatever changes were make, were made with the consent of the author; and the Remonstrance adds, "we hear that the authoress has recently consented to have the book remain on your [Tract Society's] list thus altered, rather than have it wholly suppressed." But, it adds—and we presume it does not speak without authority—"we know that the authoress, Mrs. Lundie, while in this country, was seen by one of your Secretaries before the Society republished the work, and though urged to consent to this mutilation, absolutely refused, declaring that the lines sought to be suppressed were precious to her for their sentiment and for her daughter's sake; that the Secretary then reminded her that, as there was no copyright for it in this country, the Society could go on and publish it in such form as they pleased; and that she replied that she knew she was in their power and they could do as they pleased."

Our correspondent, we have no doubt, is herein satisfactorily answered. The evidence against the Tract Society is strong enough to hang it if the maiming of books were a capital crime.

Progress in Canada.

The extract below, from a correspondence of the Colonist, will, doubtless, be interesting, especially to persons looking up homes in Canada, either in country or town. The rapid sale of land in that remote locality is worthy of note. S.

"My next stay was at Owen Sound, the great mart in my opinion of the west. When I stood on the Esplanade above the town, and beheld that fine natural harbour, that splendid bay opening out to the broad expanse of waters, stretching away to the north shore of Lake Huron, with its countless islands, and its inexhaustible mines—when I look at the river with its valuable water frontage as far up as the mills, a mile from the bay—when I saw that broad track of splendid land called the Indian peninsula, which has lately been transferred to the Government for sale—when I reflect on all that nature has done for Owen Sound above any other place in the west, I cannot but think it destined to become a great city, and that in a very few years. Nature has smiled on Owen Sound above most other places, and the settlers there have great cause for joy and thankfulness.

There are somewhere about 22 stores in the town, 2 large foundries, 2 flouring mills, 3 breweries, 5 or 6 hotels, and 3 local papers the Comet, the Lever, and the Times. On making inquiries, I found that nearly 200 copies of the newspapers from your office are received at the Owen Sound Post Office weekly, and from the strong British feeling that exists in the neighborhood, I believe you may expect hundreds more in a short time. I had the pleasure to be present at the Agricultural Fair in Owen Sound. I must give them the credit for producing the best vegetables I ever saw in Canada—I never saw their equal in the old settlements; the horses and cattle of different kinds were all very good. If the first settlers in the Sound had done as much for themselves as Charles Allan, Esq., did for the villages of Elora and Fergus, the Northern railroad would be at the Sound by this time, instead of stopping at the Hen and Chickens. But it seems that while nature has done everything here, art has done nothing. Your Toronto capitalists and business men should go up to the Sound, bringing money and workmen with them. A commencement has been made; it only wants means and skill to make this a great and wealthy city, possessing all kinds of valuable advantages for business, health and pleasure. I took the road leaving Owen Sound, crossing to Southampton or Saugeen, which is 32 miles distant. I left the Sound in the morning, but finding the roads very bad, I only got fifteen miles to where there is the prospect of a rising village called Invermay; this name was given by Mr. Oliphant, of the Indian Department. Hiram Kilburn, Esq., is the owner of the site of the village; there are several respectable families settled there at present. Mr. Kilburn deserves great credit for his enterprize in starting this new village. There are two or three taverns and one or two stores here. Captain Burford, a gentleman of good family from the south of Ireland, has settled here with his family. Leaving Invermay, I went on to Southampton, arriving there on the evening of the second day, and put up at Mr. Belcher's Hotel. I was very much astonished to see so flourishing a village; three years past I was there, but there were only 3 log houses, and now there are 5 or 6 stores, 4 hotels—in fact now it is a large village, full of very respectable inhabitants. Some of the merchants told me that they had got in this fall from 17 to 27 tons of goods. Their stock appears to be of a good style, and they seem to carry on a great trade with the fisheries. There is a baker in the village, and I must say I never eat better bread in all my life; in fact it would do Toronto credit. He is from Scotland; his name is McLaren. I was astonished to see the crowds of people congregated round the Land Office in the village, from early morning till 10 o'clock at night, all wanting lands. If any Land Agent in Canada labours hard, I believe it is Mr. McNab, He told me there was the same crowd every day. I believe that there will not be one acre of land in the county of Bruce for sale by the first of January next.

Canada Papers in England.

As a means of spreading correct information in England respecting Canada, which will tend to increase very much the emigration here, the accompanying suggestions may be opportune:—

On a recent occasion I alluded to the fact of Canada being little, or at any rate very imperfectly known in this country. The evil is being in some degree remedied; facts and remarkable statistics occasionally rise out, and the valuable letters of William Chambers have been most opportune; but there is still a void that ought to be supplied. A Canadian newspaper is a rare thing to meet with. In all London I cannot find a Canadian paper in any of the numerous coffee houses, and penny reading rooms. A few stray numbers may be seen packed away in the office of a news agent in Bucklersbury, carrying on his business in the upper part of a house in an out-of-the-way back court; at Deacons, in Walbrook, I find occasionally a few odd numbers, chiefly Halifax and St. Johns' papers, and an occasional Montreal and Quebec paper. I think I once saw a single Cobourg, and three numbers of a Kingston paper—excepting a few of the Old Countryman there is not one Toronto or London journals to be seen. Would it not be worth the attention of the Canadian newspaper publishers to send copies to the chief news rooms in this country. The value of the advertising media would be greatly enhanced to advertisers. There would be little or no ultimate loss. Proprietors of news rooms and leading coffee houses would, in time, be willing to subscribe; at any rate the plan would do much to place authentic information before the people of this country; and if some party would undertake the agency of Canadian business, who had time to attend to it in some central situation, where files of all Canadian papers could be inspected, and maps and plans consulted. It would also be a very great improvement if a view of the buildings, and as far as possible of the entire property, were to be seen. This could be easily accomplished by the aid of Photography. It will be at once a novel and important feature, and doubtless worth the consideration of a Canadian Photographer, to devote his attention to this kind of business.

Again you ought to aid the progress of emigration. This may be accomplished in many ways, which will readily occur to you. The Yankees across the Lakes, by their most liberal ill-timed, insane "KNOW NOTHING" movement, appear to be doing all that in them lies to divert the stream of immigration from the States next season. Let, then, their folly and madness be your opportunity! Let only your condition and prospects be properly known in this country, and you will find bone and sinew pressing upon you in numbers you've never yet dreamt of, and British capitalists eager to invest in Canadian securities.—London Correspondence of the Old Countryman.

City Elections.

The result of the Polls is as follows:—

ST. JOHN'S WARD.—R. Dempsey and J. H. Cameron, Aldermen; R. Moodie and John Bugg, Councilmen.

ST. ANDREW'S.—R. P. Crooks and John Carr, Aldermen; E. B. Gilbert and H. Pretty, Councilmen.

ST. PATRICK'S.—J. Dunn and A. Wilson, Aldermen; T. Mara and T. Earls, Councilmen.

ST. GEORGE'S.—G. A. Philpotts and John Duggan Aldermen; E. Wright and Drummond, Councilmen.

ST. JAMES'S.—C. E. Romain and J. Good, Aldermen; John Wilson and A. M. Smith, Councilmen.

ST. DAVID'S.—G. W. Allan and W. Henderson, Aldermen; A. Beatty and John Carruthers, Councilmen.

ST. LAWRENCE.—J. Smith and W. Gooderham, Aldermen; William Murphy and T. M'Conkey, Councilmen.

Great Fire in Toronto.

The splendid establishment of Jacques & Hay, Cabinet Makers of this city, was burned to the ground on Friday morning the 29th ult. The fire originated in one of the rooms among paints, oils, varnish, &c.; and though discovered by the watchman on the premises within a few minutes after it broke out, the want of sufficient water to flood the room instantly rendered it impossible to check the flames. The fire brigade were soon on the spot, but their efforts were of little avail. Even the lumber, immense quantities of which were stored on the premises, was nearly all consumed. The buildings were high and their contents of the most combustible kind. Fortunately the wind was blowing towards the bay or the conflagration would have been much more disastrous. As it is, the loss is probably greater than any that has ever befallen a single proprietor in this city. The value of the lumber, machinery, buildings, and partly finished work is estimated at £20,000. The insurance was small, being only £3,000. A part of this was for the benefit of a creditor of the concern.

The labor of many years has thus been swept away at a single blow. Over 200 hands at work in the factory are turned out of employment in the middle of winter. Much sympathy is felt for the enterprising proprietors, and a meeting is to be held for the purpose of devising a plan to enable them to rebuild. A gentleman who has left town for a few days authorized us to say that he will contribute £25 either as a donation if that plan shall be adopted, or as a loan without interest for a long term. We hear that another gentleman of considerable means has offered to loan £1000 at 3 per cent for a considerable period. We have no doubt that a sum will be raised sufficient to enable Messrs. Jacques & Hay to re-build and commence operations. The site is a good one and the business profitable. The establishment was a credit as well as a benefit to the city, and ought to be sustained.—North American.

RECIPROCITY IN NOVA SCOTIA.—The Reciprocity Bill has passed the Nova Scotia Legislature by a vote of 32 to 10. This is the last act necessary to the fulfilment of the treaty.

The Treaty with Austria.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Chronicle writing on the evening of the 7th gives the following summary of the text of the triple treaty:—

"The treaty commences by repeating and recording the declarations and the principal acts of the conference at Vienna, as well as the declarations and engagements contained in the notes exchanged on the 8th of August, 1854, between the high contracting parties.

"It maintains the four points of guarantee as the necessary basis of peace, at the same time that it reserves and recognises to each of the Powers the faculty of extending them by additional conditions.

"Austria binds herself to France and England, as she had already done to Turkey by the treaty of the 14th of June, 1854, to occupy the Principalities, for the purpose of repulsing the Russian troops, if they attempted to re-enter them.

"Austria proclains the right, as justly belonging to Turkey and to the allies, of making all the movements which may suit them for the purpose of attacking either the Russian troops or the Russian territory.

"If, in consequence of her attitude in the Principalities, or for any other cause, Austria should find herself at war with Russia, the alliance, offensive and defensive, between her, France, and England, shall be established, by the fact of the war.

"If, before the end of the present year 1854, Russia should not have made propositions which are considered acceptable, and which ensure good and durable peace, the three Powers will advise as to the means of obtaining that peace.

"The three high contracting Powers bind themselves not to accept any proposition for the re-establishment of peace, without having deliberated upon it in common."

Arrival.

The Atlantic arrived at New York on the 31st, bringing dates to the 18th.

Nothing of importance had occurred at the seat of war up to Dec. 4th. The roads were impassable and the trenches filled with water, owing to heavy rains.

Omar Pacha was at Varna, embarking troops for the Crimea.

On the 12th, Parliament was opened by Her Majesty in person.

Her Majesty's speech is said to have no effect on funds.

A bill to enlist a German legion was read in the House of Lords, and one in the Commons to send the militia to the garrisons abroad.

A private letter says that the treaty with Austria was ratified on the 14th.

Parliament was opened in due form, by Her Majesty in person, on the 12th. The day was very fine, and great numbers flocked along the route of the Royal cortege.

The Queen and Prince Albert were received with most enthusiastic demonstrations of loyalty.

The Queen's Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen—

I have called you together at this unusual period of the year, in order that, by your assistance, I may take such measures as will enable me to prosecute the great war in which we are engaged with the utmost vigor and effect; and assistance I know will be readily given, for I cannot doubt that you share my conviction of the necessity of sparing no effort to augment my forces now engaged in the Crimea. The exertions they have made, and the victories they have obtained, will be recorded in the brightest pages of our history, and have filled me with admiration and gratitude. The hearty and efficient co-operation of the brave troops of my ally, the Emperor of the French, and the glory acquired in common cannot fail to cement still more closely the union which happily exist between the two nations. It is with satisfaction that I inform you that, together with the Emperor of the French, I have concluded a treaty of alliance with the Emperor of Austria, from which I anticipate advantages to the common cause. I have also concluded a treaty with the United States of America, by which subjects of long and difficult discussion have been equitably adjusted. These treaties will be laid before you. Although the prosecution of the war will naturally engage your chief attention, I trust that other matters of great interest and importance to the general welfare will not be neglected. I rejoice to observe that the general prosperity of my subjects remains uninterrupted.

The state of the revenue affords me entire satisfaction, and I trust by your wisdom and prudence you will continue to promote the progress of agriculture and manufactures.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons—

I rely with confidence on your patriotism and public spirit. I feel assured that in the momentous contest in which we are engaged, you will exhibit to the world the example of an united people. Thus shall we obtain respect of other nations; and may trust, by the blessing of God, we shall bring the war to a successful termination.

The passage relative to the victories of the Crimea was delivered with graceful emotion. Her Majesty having delivered her speech, rose, and giving her hand to Prince Albert, left the House. The assembly then dispersed.

The Lords re-assembled at 5 o'clock, and an important debate ensued, in which the Earl of Derby took a prominent part. He was very severe on the conduct of the war, but threw no obstacles in the way of its vigorous prosecution.

Mr. Layard, in the Commons, also made a very severe attack on the inefficient management of the war department. He blamed everything, and stated his impressions that the treaty with Austria was no better than waste paper, and would only raise fresh obstacles.

D'Israeli spoke on the same side, with his usual sarcasms, and endeavored to turn all the Government measures into ridicule.

Lord John Russell made a long defence of the conduct of the Ministry, but hardly a very satisfactory one.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that the Russians are said to have suffered a loss in the Sea of Azoff corresponding in magnitude to our losses of the 14th.

In an unpublished portion of Prince Menschikoff's despatch of the 24th, he states that near Cape Berdjinskai, on the north coast of the Sea of Azoff, a hurricane had demolished the breakwater, driven on shore 35 Russian vessels, and sunk 5 others.

The march of the Russian reinforcements towards the Crimea had ceased.

The Latest.

The Paris Moniteur of Saturday morning, the 16th ult., publishes intelligence from the Crimea of the 7th. The batteries will be ready to open their fire in three days. The intrenchments of the allies being completed, they can winter in their present position. They were easily and regularly supplied with provisions. A despatch from Marseilles brings news from Constantinople to the 5th. Prince Napoleon was ready to return to the Crimea. The Duke of Cambridge was to return soon to the Crimea. Accounts from Balaklava of 3rd, state, that a new battery of thirty-six guns had been established against Sebastopol. The French will have 150 pieces of artillery in position. Great precaution had been taken against the Russian fire directed against ninety-two fusees, which had been landed to set fire to the Russian fleet. The garrison of Eupatoria had been reinforced by two battalions. It was reported that 60,000 Russians had passed into the Crimea by way of Perekoo; also, that an engagement had taken place between a Russian corps and an English detachment. The latter is said to have pursued the Russians into the very town. On the 6th, two Russian steamers came out under the protection of the batteries, and exchanged shots with two small French steamers, but without hitting them. Some English frigates came up and protected them. The Hannibal and Golden Fleece had arrived with English troops.

From Toulon it is stated that the division of General des Salles had left on board of several men-of-war.

Advices received through Vienna, [but for which we cannot vouch] state that the Russians made a sortie against the French lines on the 5th. Eight divisions of the line, under General Forey, repulsed them with great loss. They also state that the French are arming batteries with guns from Henri VI., that the English have constructed 50-gun batteries, and that Guyon, Haslan Pacha, and ten Polish staff-officers go from Erzeroum to the Crimea.

A letter from Vienna, of the 10th, in the Post Amot Gazette, of Frankfort, says:—"The Russian army of Sebastopol is threatened by a danger which becomes every day more and more formidable—a scarcity of provisions. It is positively stated that a complete famine prevails in Northern Russia, and that the victualling of the Russian army is so badly managed, that only the corps which are stationed the nearest to the depots receive any provisions, while those at a greater distance, are left to their fate. The garrison of Sebastopol already feels the effect of this serious state of things, and the strength of the soldiers becomes exhausted in the works, without being renewed by sufficient food. The want of meat is replaced by a profuse allowance of spiritous liquors, which, however, cannot last long, and its use, instead of causing enthusiasm, only causes a kind of lethargy. The measures adopted by the allies to procure supplies are well carried out. Large quantities are sent from Austria on account of the French and English commissariat, the result of which will be to secure the army of the Crimea against any scarcity of provisions."

Prince Menschikoff, writing from Sebastopol on the 8th, reports that nothing of importance had occurred at Sebastopol up to that date. The fire of the allies continued to be very weak, and caused the Russians scarcely any loss.

THE DANUBE.

A letter from Bucharest, under date 11th, mentions that Omer Pacha, that morning, left Bucharest for Varna, where the remainder of the nineteen Turkish battalions ordered to the Crimea were being embarked. Thirty-five thousand men are to be sent. Of date 8th, it is stated that the whole Turkish army had recrossed the Danube.

Said Pasha was occupying the Dobrudscha, and Calarosch and Giurgeve had received Turkish garrisons.

The last of the ships of the fleet are under weigh for England.

Interesting from Prussia.

Some of the London papers [says a Berlin letter of December 13,] contained a statement a few days, back, that Prussia had already decided upon joining the new treaty of alliance. I, therefore, telegraphed to you the correct state of the case, namely, that Prussia had not yet done so, but would do so when the treaty had been ratified, and she had been invited to do so. The first was, and still is, a matter of fact, based on reliable information taken; the second is a matter of opinion, founded on observation and enquiry. I am glad to find by your leader of the 9th instant, that you attach no credit to the statement above alluded to, in absence of any information to that effect from me. The treaty has not yet been ratified as far as I can learn, though it probably will be so before you receive this.

A letter, dated Berlin, Friday the 15th, says:—"At a cabinet council held yesterday, it was decided that Prussia shall join the Western Powers, stipulating for the concession of certain advantages on the North Sea and the Baltic. Baron Vinke's motion for an address in answer to the King's speech has been rejected. M. Bothmann Hollwég's motion has been withdrawn."

Russian Loss on the Sea of Azoff.

BERLIN, Dec. 10.

A communication from Warsaw of the 8th has been received, to the effect that in an unpublished portion of Prince Menschikoff's despatch of the 24th ultimo, he states that near Cape Berdjanskaia [on the north coast of the Sea of Azoff,] a hurricane had literally demolished the breakwater, driven on shore 35 Russian vessels and dashed to pieces five others.

Opening of the Prussian Chambers.

The opening of the Chambers, by King Frederick in person, took place on Thursday.

The most prominent and generally interesting portion of his Majesty's address will be found subjoined:—

"The King observed, that, "a bloody conflict had broken out between three powerful members of the joint family of European States. This conflict has not as yet affected our Fatherland. I have fresh occasion to hope, from recent events, that the basis for a better understanding will soon, perhaps, be attained; this will draw closer the bond of union between Prussia, Austria, and the rest of Germany. I shall continue to look upon it as my task to plead for peace, for the recognition of the independence of foreign States, and for moderation. Should I, eventually, be compelled to define the true position of Prussia, then my faithful people will, I am certain, bear the inevitable burthens with resignation, and meet such eventualities. The army will be put in a state of readiness, the improvement in individual arms will strengthen our efficiency in war, our materiel be increased, and the loan voted by former Chambers will be realized."

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—A Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post, in a letter dated Dec. 20th, says: "It is said that the Sandwich Islands' Treaty will probably be refused, on economical grounds, by the President. During Mr. Fillmore's administration we could have had the Islands for nothing, but the King has since, it is believed, got a notion of its value which does not correspond with the estimate made at Washington. He is supposed now to demand as an equivalent a salary equal to his revenue from the Islands, of which he was the sovereign, thus leaving nothing for our own government, which will be subjected to increased expenditures for its naval protection. The Government does not wish to purchase a coal depot for our ships at too dear a rate. That this objection will loom up in the discussion on the acceptance of the treaty (if we get it) there is no doubt."

AN INCIDENT AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.—One day last week, a gentleman connected with one of the first Produce and Commission Houses in Montreal, left the St. Lawrence Hotel in the 5 o'clock Morning Stage for Watertown, on his way to the west, for the purchase of produce. His trunk was strapped on to the back of the sleigh behind. At a watering place, about six miles on the way, it was discovered that the trunk had got loose from the strapping, and was only held by the strap passing through one of the handles, and had been dragging in that manner until it was knocked open and its contents principally gone. It was made known that the trunk contained twenty thousand dollars in Canada bank bills, put in packages of from two to five thousand cash. Upon returning along the road, scarcely yet day-light, the owner and those accompanying him, found to the amount of 10,000 dollars, and on arriving here, soon learned that a Mr. Southwarth (a colporteur,) had found a package of two thousand, which was returned. Again returning upon the road, a labourer on the railroad was fallen in with, on his way to the Village, with the balance of the loss, ten thousand dollars, having found them on his was to his daily toil. The gentleman, with commendable liberality, having regard to the honesty of the finders, presented the honest labourer fifty dollars, and to Mr. Southworth thirty. How much happier was that poor labourer with his fifty dollars fairly acquired as the reward of his honesty, than he would have been with the whole package feloniously retained? Surely, "honesty is the best policy."—St. Lawrence Rep.

THE CANADA

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

CAPITAL $200,000.

HUGH C. BAKER, Esq., President.
JOHN YOUNG, Esq., Vice-President.

ASSURANCES may be effected in this Company on single or joint lives, or on the contingency of one life surviving another; for the whole term of life, or for a limited period; by a single payment, or a limited number of payments; or annual payments only ceasing at death; to secure a sum at any given age, or at death, should death occur before the attainment of that age. Endowments for children, immediate or deferred annuities, and generally any transaction contingent on the value and duration of life, may be effected in this Company.

Among the advantages offered by this, the only Life Assurance Company ever established in British North America, may be enumerated moderate rates and small expenditures; local management and speedy settlement of claims; liberal conditions, especially in reference to lapsed policies.

Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and full information as to the prosperous condition of the Company, may be had from

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS & CO., are our general agents,—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

Concession C 11 to 40 inclusive, 100 acres each

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony,—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number

PRESIDENT.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

TREASURER.

GEORGE WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Esq.

HON. SECRETARIES.

REV. JAMES SHERMAN, AND SAMUEL HORMAN-FISHER, Esq.

COMMITTEE.

APSLEY PELLATT, ESQ., M. P., G. F. WHITE, ESQ., REV. T. JAMES, REV. J. C. GALLAWAY, A. M., JAMES SPICER, ESQ., REV. GEORGE SMITH, REV. THOS. BINNEY, ROBERT FORSTER, ESQ., E. N. FOWLER, ESQ., JOSEPH SOUL, ESQ., L. A. CHAMEROVZOW, ESQ., W. JONES, ESQ., J. TALBOT TYLER, ESQ.

It was moved by the Rev. J. Wemberley, Rector of Dorrington, seconded by the Rev. George Wilkins, and adopted:-

"That the best thanks of this Meeting be presented to the Earl of Shaftesbury, for his kindness in presiding on the present occasion."

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Anti-Slavery Agitation, the Principles of Universal Freedom and a Bible Union not based on complexional considerations, and that the perpetuity now resting upon these cardinal principles is now imminent, by reason of the Fugitive Slave Laws of Her Majesty's colonies against another, and believing that the ground of the complexional characteristic stamp of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens of the Province, to promote the same by Lectures and to diffuse a loyal spirit among the coloured Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate, to overcome in order 2nd. To encourage and support a Press or Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch tower to notify the citizens of its country against the anti-Christian, anti-Republican, rebellious designs of many in the United States and this country, who would cause to put a policy for emigrants, formerly home and free, independent from white emigrants who may and do settle here; to counselling the former to be a "seed pea in a field of tares," as the Providence of God intention; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Union in British America, unless those of darker hue become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. To use in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by every constitutional means, and to encourage a loyal agitation in literary, social and religious matters. As a nucleus of operations to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote its circulation in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the Colored People, in offering a plan for, the organization of the School, beg leave to state:

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3rd. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livelihood.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS,
JOHN D. PECK,
AMOS G. BEMAN,
JOHN JONES,
J. D. BONNER,
J. MCCUNE SMITH,
Committee on Manual Labour School.

1. The title shall be "THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL."

2. The foundation fund shall be thirty thousand dollars.

3. Twenty thousand dollars shall be in stock of 2000 shares, at ten dollars per share.

4. Ten thousand dollars shall be in donations to be solicited from the friends of the cause.

5. The shares shall be payable, ten per cent. at the time of subscribing, and ten per cent, every first day of July, October, January and April thereafter, until the whole is paid.

6. The School shall be organized and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these Trustees shall be the Committee on Manuel Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders,) and annually thereafter. Each share of Stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

a. For every branch of Literature taught, there shall be one branch of handicraft also taught in the School.

b. Each pupil shall occupy one half his time when at School, in work at some handicraft, or on the farm.

c. The handicrafts shall be such that their products will be articles saleable for cash, or money's worth, at a market within easy access from the School.

8. In organizing the school, the following regulations shall be strictly enforced:

The agent appointed by the Committee, Frederick Douglass, Esq., shall be empowered to receive donations and take subscriptions for stock, giving a receipt for the latter, signed by himself and Rev. Amos G. Beman, the Secretary of the Committee. As soon as, and as often as the Agent aforesaid shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars, either in subscriptions or donations, he shall pay the same over to the Treasurer, John Jones, Esq., of Chicago, who shall deposit the same forthwith in the Bank of America, Chicago, Illinois: the Treasurer aforesaid, as soon as he shall receive one thousand dollars, and for every thousand dollars thereafter, shall give bonds with two sureties to the President and Secretary of the National Council of Colored People, for double the amounts aforesaid. For his services, the Agents shall receive five per cent, on all stock instalments paid in by him, and ten per cent, on all donations above two hundred dollars paid in by or through him.

10. The members of the Commitee on Manual Labor School shall also be empowered to receive donations for the same; and they shall transmit all said donations to the Treasurer, by draft, within ten days after receiving the same. They shall also be entitled to five per cent, on all such donations paid in by him.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Frederick Douglass' Paper or Alsened American,) which shall contain acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

Mark, the Sexton.
A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.
A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Book Notice List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Poetry.

The Dying Year.

BY MISS E. L. SHEPPARD.

The old year was dying last night,—
The breeze went wailing by;
And the stars from their thrones above
Looked down with misty eye.

O! the moon wore a mournful look,
The earth had on a shroud;
And spirits abroad were singing
Their dirges deep and loud.

"Old year thou art dying now!
An icy finger is on thy brow—
We watch thy mystic flight,
'Mid the solemn shades of night,
And a phantom train to bear thee away
To the gloom
Of the tomb
Where the dead years lay.
Oh child of the eternal!
We heralded thy birth,—
Thy mission to the earth,—
Rise now to the supernal.

"Oh! dying! dying year!
Thou hast gone laden with hope and fear,—
And thy moments have been
To the hearts of men;
But onward steps in the great march sublime,
And prophet voices tell of that time
Foretold,
Of old,
By mystic ken
As 'peace on earth—good will to men.'

"Oh! old and dying year!
Thou hast looked on human tears—
On pale forms keeping
Their watch and weeping
O'er joys that were hid
Under the coffin lid.
We sing an anthem o'er thee;—
And for the dead before thee;—
For the aged head
In its cold bed,
For manhood's light
Now quenched in night,
And sweet child's breath
Gone out in death.
For the dust that is lying on buried love,
For the hopes, fond hopes now garnered above.

"Go! go! old year,
Haste! haste! to thy bier,
We sound thy wail
On the midnight gale.
But ere morning dawn
We must be gone
Back to our viewless sphere.—
The cold winds blow
And thou must go,
Oh old and dying year!"

Their tones died out upon the air
And on the midnight blast;
And the spectral host went sweeping by,—
With them the old year past.

Miscellaneous.

From the Dublin Nation.

Dean Swift and the Cobbler.

It happened that the Dean was one day passing through Patrick's Close, when he espied a cobbler hard at work in his stall. Poor Crispin, though half naked, was singing away like a lark, and hammering at the heel of an old shoe with an apparent lightness of heart that astonished the Dean when he contemplated the merry wretch's obvious misery.

"Friend," said the Dean, pausing in his walk at the stall, and addressing him, "you seem to be very poor; but then you seem to be very merry?"

"Its not mirth sir," replied the cobbler—"I am singin' for the children in the cellar below."

"How is that?" asked the Dean, "I don't understand you."

"Why, sir, said the man, "whenever the poor things are hungry, and have nothing to eat, I sing droll songs for them, in order to make them forget the hunger."

"What family have you?"

"Not many, sir—only twelve or thirteen, or so—but plase God, there's a good time comin'—Nelly, sir, has her gifts—and between you and me, is a valuable subject to her Majesty—as for myself, God help me, I'm obliged to keep hammering away at the leather as well as I can—just as you see me, sir, at the heel of this old shoe."

"And have you no prospect," asked the Dean, "of improving your condition in life?"

"If there be such a prospect, sir," replied the cobbler, "I have not been able to catch a glimpse of it yet; but I suppose you have heard the proverb of our trade, sir—once a cobbler, always a cobbler."

"The proverb is a bad one," observed the Dean, "and strikes at the very root of industry."

"It does'nt touch me at all events—for as far as industry goes, I'm a pattern to the neighbourhood; but, unfortunately, the harder I work, the poorer I get. However, we have one comfort, which is, that there's a better world before us, and that we are preparing ourselves for it."

"How is that?" asked the Dean.

"Why, sir, fasting and prayer are the best means of working out our salvation. It's true, indeed, we haven't time to pray much, but we make it up in the fastin'—as for my own part, since I cannot fast and pray, I fast and sing."

"Oh ho!" thought the Dean, "this a character; I must try him a little farther. What did you mean by saying, the harder you work the poorer you get?"

"Nothing plainer, sir; my family's growing up, and the employment goes down; you may understand me without a dictionary."

"Well, then," said the Dean, "suppose a friend were to enable you to lay in a quantity of leather, and all the necessary materials for making shoes, let me ask, could you make them?"

"Could Dane Swift write a ballad—

'Ye people of Ireland, both country and city,
Come listen with patience, and hear our my ditty;
At this time I'll choose to be wiser than witty,
Which nobody can deny.'

"God bless the Dane at any rate—by puttin' down Wood and his halfpence he saved me from bankruptcy; I should have closed my stall only for him. But, after all, he deprived me of a good berth of it."

"What berth?" asked the other.

"Why sir, the post of Solicitor-General that I had in my eye at the time; but faith he stopped my promotion. However, divil may care for that—I can hammer the leather still, if the work would only come in.

'The halfpence are coming, the nation's undoing;
And there's an end of your ploughing, your baking, and brewing;
In short, you must all go to wreck and to ruin.
Which nobody can deny.'"

The Dean began to feel more than amusement in his chat with the merry cobbler, and after some further conversation, he said—

"Well, now, you comical rogue, do you know Dean Swift?"

"Not by person, sir; that's a pleasure before me yet; but I know him well by carrecther."

"What do you know about him?" asked the Dean.

"Why, that he's a true friend to Ireland and her people, and an enemy to all oppressors.

'Both high men, and low men, and thick men and tall men,
And rich men, and poor men, and free men, and thrall men,
Will suffer; and this man, and that man, all men,
Which nobody can deny."

"Faith," he added, "if he wanted a carrecther, and came to me for one, he would have no reason to complain of it."

"Well, now," said the Dean, "you seem to be a merry, honest fellow, and I think if you were assisted to improve your condition, that the assistance would not be thrown away upon you."

"Well, I think not," replied the cobbler, "I'm a good deal of that notion myself. Honesty, industry, and good humor runs in our family; but, somehow or other, poverty insists on being a relative as well as the others, and sticks to us like wax."

"Suppose now," said the Dean, "that I lend you the sum of ten pounds, to buy leather and commence shoemaking, will you promise to pay me at the rate of half-a-crown a week?"

"I can only give you my word for it at the present time," replied the cobbler; but you'll find I'll keep it."

"Well, then," said the Dean, opening his pocket-book, "here are ten pounds for you, which I give, trusting you will make good use of them.'.

"You are Dane Swift" said the cobbler, "for no other man would do such an act as this."

"I am," replied the Dean, "and will further befriend you if you deserve it. Now, good-bye, and be industrious."

"Asy, your reverence," replied the cobbler. "I can't part from you that way. Down to my cellar you must come, till Nelly and the childer sees you, or I give up the money. It's the honor of the thing I look to—and besides, I have a duty to discharge. Come, your reverence, don't be ashamed! it'll be no longer a cellar while you're in it, but a charming room; and for the same raison, you must get drawing room treatment—besides, I have an ould custom of the country to fulfil."

The Dean, whose curiosity was excited to know more about a man whom he looked upon as an original, suffered himself to be prevailed upon, and descended into the cellar. After the cobbler had introduced Nelly and the Dean to each other, he whispered to the former, into whose hands he thrust the ten-pound note; and in a few minutes she returned with a bottle of claret!

"What's this?" exclaimed the Dean. "Do you expect me to drink with you?"

"We have an ould and holy custom in this country," replied the cobbler, 'that the man who gets the money always gives the trate; because, you see, sir, nothing prospers when it's not done."

The Dean received a glass, and drank to his prosperity; after which he returned his steps homeward, considerably amused, and not a little mystified by the rater eccentric conduct of the Crispin. Before he went, however, he enjoined him to come to the Deanery every Saturday at an appointed hour, to pay him his weekly instalment of half-a-crown.

Accordingly, when the day and hour came, he presented himself at the hall-door, stating that he wished to see the Dean upon business.

"You, you rascal," returned the servant; "have you the assurance to suppose that Dr. Swift could have any business with you, unless through the servants."

"I am come by his own appointment," replied the cobbler, "and it's not unlikely, if you refuse to bring the message, that you will find a slippery stone at his door. You ought to know him, I think. His reverence took a glass of claret with me this day week in my own place. If you know who the Dean is, remember, you don't know who I am."

With some difficulty the man went up and delivered the message; when, much to his surprise, the Dean immediately desired the man to be shown up to the drawing-room, where he happened to be sitting.

"Well," said the Dean, "I am glad to find that you are likely to be punctual in your payments."

"Sir," said the cobbler, "you will find here as regularly as Saturday comes. There's the first half-crown."

"That is very right," said the Dean; "nothing like punctuality and honesty."

The Dean, who was reading, then resumed his book, feeling naturally certain that the man, now that the affair between them had been transacted, would, of course, have gone about his business—but in this he was mistaken, for the cobbler held his ground.

"Pray, why do you wait?" asked the Dean, at length; "have you not paid the money?"

"No doubt of that, sir," replied the cobbler, "but you cannot forget the old custom of the country—the man that gets the money always gives the thrate."

"Oh!" exclaimed the Dean, "you shall have it," and as he spoke, he rang the bell.

"John," said he, when the servant entered, "give this man a glass of whiskey."

"Sir," said the cobbler, "I, though a poor man, got you a bottle of claret, and you who are a rich one, offer me a glass of whiskey. I expect, sir, to get as good as I gave."

"And you shall, too," replied the Dean; "John, give that man a bottle of claret. Now, sir, I understand you," he added, "a bottle of claret is worth four shillings, and your weekly instalment is only half-a-crown—begone, you rascal, and never let me see your face again. I could afford to lend you ten pounds, but I could not afford to be repaid upon your own principle."

The tradition, however, goes on to say that the cobbler, whose name, we think, was Parker, proved himself to be an honest man, and punctually paid the money in question, which pleased the Dean so much, that he became a friend and warm supporter to him, and scrupled not to aid him with both his purse and counsel until he had the satisfaction of seeing his witty protege an independent and respectable man.

General Summary.

In this age, when military chieftainism is much in vogue, and biographies of living characters are all the rage, it is somewhat surprising to us that no writer has undertaken to set forth the merits and distinguishing qualities of General Summary. He is a fellow of very comprehensive genius, of great and various resources, and embraces in his single head (though a small one) all sorts of knowledge. His taste for novelties is remarkable. He abounds in anecdotes, humor and wit; and withal is a notorious collector of murders, fires, failures, and shocking accidents. He is besides something of a punster; and it is astonishing how suddenly he can change from grave to gay, and with what sang froid he can laugh at a joke, before he has done wiping his eyes at some tale of distress. As a faithful historian, however, we are obliged to mention that he is exceedingly fond of scandal, and oftentimes proves a great mischief-maker, retailing all the vile rumors of the day, and making himself busy with other men's matters. And yet he is liked the better for it.

General Summary is emphatically a man of letters. But he is more particularly distinguished for his acquisitions in modern than ancient literature. He keeps up with the spirit of the times, and is perhaps more conversant with newspapers than any other general of this or any other age. He is a great friend to the printers, and is supposed to lend his support to nearly a thousand different papers. He is moreover a prodigious traveller, going from one extremity of the country to the other with incredible speed and crossing the Atlantic many times a year.

General Summary is a fellow of prodigious appetite, and swallows without distinction whatever comes in his way. He takes down with the same ease, and apparently the same relish, mammoth pumpkins and beets, mammoth oxen and porkers, cows with five legs, four children at a birth, snakes with two heads, toads in a solid rock, sea serpents eighty feet long, living snakes vomited from the human stomach, an old bear and three cubs, water-melons in May and peach blossoms in October; whole armies slain in battle, steam doctors and land-gulls, duellists and mad dogs, thieves and impostors, rioters and robbers, black eyes and bloody noses, French dancers and female lecturers, cold water and blue ruin, mysterious knockings, snow fourteen feet deep, vessels wrecked in a storm, whales and whalers, witches and water-borers, fires and floods, blood and wounds, dunder and blixum.

A Giant in Size and a Hero in Deeds.

Some men have a charmed existence. In the midst of incidents of the most appalling and destructive nature, from which escape seems utterly hopeless, they stand unscathed. An instance of this kind occurs in the case of a color-sergeant of the Grenadier Guards, whose name is P. F. Davies. He has been in all the engagements in the Crimea, and has not yet received a wound. Of Herculean frame, standing six feet four inches high, and weighing upwards of twenty-five stone, he presents a somewhat prominent mark, and fills a rather large space in the ranks, and to have come out of the desperate battery charge at the Alma, and the fearful slaughtering melee on the heights of the Inkermann, in both of which the balls were whistling from all quarters, and bayonets were glistering in every direction, must be ranked amongst the miracles of human contingency, as they utterly baffle every attempt at explanation.

One of a devoted band of two hundred grenadiers, in the midst of thousands of Russian infantry, and without ammunition, having fired their last charge, yet determined to sell their lives as dearly as possible. Davies defended his colors with the utmost audacity, and literally mowed down the enemy, who made a rush to capture them. On this occasion, Colonel Hamilton, who commanded this fag end of the heroic grenadiers, seeing that there was nothing left for his men but the bayonet, ordered them to form four deep and charge. The order was, of course, instanly obeyed, and in a few minutes a clear gap was visible in the Russian columns, and our gallant men quickly rejoined their comrades. Amidst dead and dying, first using the bayonet, then the butt-end of his musket, with his arm unnerved from sheer fatigue of striking down the enemy, this sergeant, who, according to the letter of an eye-witness, towered like a giant above the surrounding level of heads, and to miss which would appear an utter impossibility, appeared at the roll-call after the terrible engagement, without a wound, and with scarcely a single scratch upon him.

To enumerate the number of the enemy killed and put hors de combat by the single arm of Davies, would appear almost incredible; suffice it to state, following the relation of trustworthy witnesses, that he performed prodigies of valor, and gave the Russians a taste of the real metal of which a British grenadier is composed. Davies, we believe, has been in the army seventeen years, having entered the grenadier corps, as a mere lad of fifteen; he has, therefore, worked his way up to his present position, and is generally liked by his fellow soldiers, from the good temper and kindly feeling which he uniformly evinces towards them. In spite of his portly frame and heavy weight, he was capable of running against any man of his regiment for a hundred yards, and as for jumping, he could, to use the familiar language of his comrades, "clear a five-barred gate like a swallow." In all athletic sports he was a leading authority in the regiment, and took especial delight in seeing the men indulge in them. On landing at Scutari, Davies naturally attracted a great deal of attention. His gigantic size astonished the Turks: and his fine military gait was the general theme of admiration.

French Sentiment of English Heroism.

It would be difficult [says the Times Paris Correspondent] to give a just idea of the admiration excited on all hands and among all classes of the people of Paris, by the heroic conduct of the English at the battle of the 5th; and when lauding them, they in some measure seem to forget the gallantry of their own soldiers in their enthusiastic praise of their allies. I say 'among all classes,' because one paltry and selfish faction [the Fusionists], which would, if it dared, express its affliction at the triumphs of the allied armies, is forced by shame to unwilling silence. It is but just to say that none are louder in their praise than the Republicans, and none more eager to do justice to the fine qualities of the British troops than those who were, until this noble fellowship of danger and of victory, believed to be animated only by animosity against us. The Charivari itself contributes to swell the general enthusiasm, and the British soldier, quite as often as the French, figures in the foreground as the leading personage in its daily sketches. I was purchasing a cigar a day or two since in a shop on the Boulevards, when a cabman came in to buy tobacco. "Is it true," said he, addressing a Frenchman, "that 8,000 Englishmen kept the field against 45,000 Russians until Bosquet came up, and that in company with our soldiers, they charged the enemy and killed 9,000?" "Yes." "Then, although I have always hated the English, and thought them false and perfidious, if an Englishman were now to fall into the Seine, I would jump after and try to save him, though I can't swim a stroke. Here are heroes; why the Old Guard could never have done more: and to think they are Englishmen whom I have been hating all my life! But it is never too late to learn."

Profusion of Life in the Ocean.

Not a shell or stone is brought up, but is thronged with living beings. Every branch of weed gives shelter to multitudes of creatures: some temporary lodgers, some permanent residents. Life is a parasitic upon life. The surpula builds its stony case on the abodes of the shell-fish, and the delicate lacework of the moss coral overspreads the surpula. Over the stem of the sea-weed creeps the graceful plumes of the zeophyte spring. These again are thickly invested by the pretty cells of many smaller species; and they, in turn, minute as they often bear in profusion the curious forms of microscopic animalcules. Let us take a stone from the heap lying in our boat. It is a perfect museum in itself. It is richly colored in parts by the nullipore—one of the lowest forms of vegetable life, which does for the scenery of the ocean what the moss and linchen do for the scenery of the upper world. Here is a circular cluster of cells. "looking like beautiful lacework, carved in ivory;" here a little saucer of the purest whiteness, containing within a number of stony tubes, the habitation of a whole company of tiny polyples. A sponge overgrows one portion of the stone, itself the home of many a living thing; a sea anemone has possession of another. The little encromite is present, and near it a small star fish. There are worms, too, in plenty, and more of life and beauty than we have space to describe. It is pleasant to think of the happy existence which a single stone can support. The forms to which we have chiefly referred are visible to the unassisted eye; but as Humbolt remarks, "the application of the microscope increases in the most striking manner our impression of the rich luxuriance of animal life in the ocean, and reveals to astonished senses the consciousness of the universality of being."

The Monster Lump of Gold in San Francisco—The Largest in the World.—We chronicled yesterday the finding of an immense lump of quartz gold in Calaveras County, weighing 161 pounds, or 2,576 ounces avoirdupois. Estimating it to contain 20 pounds of quartz rock, which is a large allowance, in the opinion of experienced persons who examined it, the actual weight of the gold in it will be 141 pounds, or 2,256 ounces avoirdupois, the value of which, at $17 25 per ounce, would be $38,916. This is the largest nugget of pure gold ever found in California or in the world! It was brought down to this city yesterday by Adams & Co., and will be shipped to the Atlantic States in the steamer of to-day. The proprietors of it were so excited by their good luck that they sat up beside their treasure night and day on its way here. Mr. Perkins, one of the Company to whom it belongs, states that it was taken out in Calaveras County on Wednesday evening, Nov. 22, just as the company were about quitting work for the day; he would not give any particulars in regard to where the claim is located, except that it is in the county above named. The company consists of four Americans and one Swiss. Mr. Perkins belongs to Lexington, Ky., and for the past two years, although he has laboured hard, was very unsuccessful, never having more than $200 at any one time during that period. The length of this immense mass is about fifteen inches, and its width from five and one-half to six inches. As one side is extremely irregular and uneven in its formation, it is difficult to arrive at the exact thickness, but it will probably average four inches. The other side is almost flat, and presents a solid mass of pure gold; the only quartz perceivable is on the upper or ragged side, and some pieces are so loosely imbedded in the precious metal that, with the aid of a pointed instrument, they might be easily removed. The whole mass, at some period has probably been in a fused state.

The Lord of the Soil.—The man who stands upon his own soil, who feels that by the laws of the land in which he lives—by the laws of civilized nations—he is the rightful and exclusive owner of the land which he tills, is by the constitution of our nature under a wholesome influence not easily imbibed from any other source. He feels—other things being equal—more strongly than another, the character of a man as lord of an inanimate world. Of this great and wonderful sphere, which, fashioned by the hand of God, and upheld by this power, is rolling through the heavens a part of his—his from the center sky. It is the space on which the generation before moved in its round of duties, and he feels himself connected by a visible link with those who follow him, and to whom he is to trasmit a home.—Everett.

We saw something in the Sunday Mercury, what we liked exceedingly. The editor copied a paragraph which stated that the dress of a woman of fashion, if she "goes out a good deal," costs about two thousand dollars a year, upon which the Mercury well remarks:—"We know some ladies, 'who go out a good deal,' whose dress ought not, judging from external appearance, to cost quite so much as a thousand dollars in fifty years. They are ladies who go out in the morning, and do not return until the shadows of evening have fallen around their homes; they earn less than a dollar a day, and out of it support an old mother, a sick sister, or a young child."

The writer adds a hint to the effect, that ladies who spend two thousand dollars a year on their dress, ought to think of these sisters of theirs, and occasionally put on the robe of charity which covers such a multitude of ill deeds. The truth is, that a woman who spends two thousand dollars a year upon dress, is either very silly or a very wicked woman. A jewel of value never requires so costly a setting. And, with regard to "the robe of charity," we may quote Tupper's maxim:—"Extravagance and Meanness are twin sisters."—Life Illustrated.

Taking the Smell out of Clothes.—Sitting on the piazza of the Cataract House, at Niagara Falls, was a young, foppish-looking gentlemen, his garments very highly scented with a mingled odor of cologne and musk. A solemn faced, odd-looking man, after passing the dandy several times; with a look of aversion which drew general notice, suddenly stopped, and in a confidential tone, said, "Stranger, I know what'll take that scent 'out of your clothes; you—" "What do you mean, sir?" said the exquisite, fired with indignation, starting from his chair. "O, get mad, now—swear, pitch round, fight, just because a man wants to do you a kindness!" coolly replied the stranger. "But I do know what'll take out that smell—phew! You just bury your clothes—bury'em a day or two. Uncle Josh got afoul of a skunk, and he—" At that instant there went up from the crowd a simultaneous roar of merriment; and the dandy very sensibly "cleared the coop" and vanished up stairs.

Church Troubles.—The Rev. Dr. Bond editor of the New York Christian Advocate, in noticing the opposition to the appropriation, of missionary money to the preachers laboring in slaveholding conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says: "We have seen strange things in the lapse of threescore years and ten, but this caps the climax of the marvellous; and though we are no prophet, nor the son of a prophet, we venture to predict that mischief is now brewing in our church—agitations, convulsions, and disruptions, such as we have never witnessed before.

Husks of Corn and the leaves of beech trees, for beds, are just as much better than straw as that is better than feathers, which are the worst of all substances to sleep upon. Husks for beds should be gathered from the green corn, which may be fed to man or beast without loss, and dried in the shade, and then hackled in fine shreds. Fill the tick and stitch it through like a mattress, and for several years it will be as good as one made of hair. In place of a straw bed, or under mattress, husks are far superior to straw. The leaves of the beech tree, particularly if gathered like the husks, when green, make an excellent mattress, in which no vermin will ever breed. It would be an advantage to all mattresses to use pine or cedar leaves with the straw or other material.—Life Illustrated.

A French writer, M. Leon Faucher, in the Revue des Deux Mondes attempts to show the financial inability of Russia to carry on for any length of time an expensive war against two of the richest as well as most powerful states of Europe. To this the Russian Government made an informal reply in the same paper. This document is said to have been transmitted to the office of the Revue by the Saxon ambassador in Paris. It is curious, as containing certain statements and positive figures respecting the Russian war budget, which the Russian Government hitherto carefully refrained from making public.

According to this official communication, the customs of Russia, which produced in the years from 1822 to 1826 but thirteen millions of silver roubles, from 1848 to 1852 produced nearly thirty millions. The ordinary revenue in 1839 was, according to M. Tegoborski, 164 millions of roubles; in 1853 it amounted to nearly 225 millions.

The military budget of Russia for 1854 calculated for a force of from 800,000 to 900,000 men, was 84,200,000 roubles for the army, and 14,400,000 for the navy. Each man in the Russian service costs not more than £16 a head, whilst in France each soldier is estimated at costing £40. Of course M. Tegoborski contests the justice of M. Faucher's remarks. Russia, according to its advocate, is the least indebted, the most prosperous, and the most powerful State in Europe. It has contracted no forced loan, and touched no metallic deposit. Its trade has not suffered, though its products by circuitous transit may have become dearer to the purchasers.

The port of Odessa exported to the value of 20,000 roubles more in 1845, than in 1843, an assertion which we submit to the contemplation of our admirals in the Black Sea. Let us not omit to mention an answer of M. Faucher's is appended to the Russian statement, and those curious in the finance of Emperor Nicholas will do well to consult both.—Michigan Free Democrat.

Pure Wine.—Here are some facts which will hurt no one to read, just now. We hope our Legislature in passing a prohibitory law, will in some way protect the community from the dangerous drugging so common.

The first extract is from the celebrated Dr. Nott. He says:—

"I had a friend, who had been once a wine dealer, and having read the startling statements made public, in relation to the brewing of wines and the adulteration of other liquors, generally, I enquired of that friend as to the verity of the statements. His reply was, 'GOD FORGIVE what has passed in my own cellar, but the statements MADE are true and ALL TRUE; I assure you."

A physician in New York purchased a bottle of what is called genuine champagne, of the importer, had it subjected to chemical tests; it was found to contain a quarter of an ounce of sugar of lead. Who would like to drink a mixture of sugar of lead and water?

A gentleman in New York who made champagne, purchased some of the regular importer, wishing to give his friends some of the genuine article. At a convivial party, he produced his pure as imported; when the corks began to fly, one dropped near him; on examining it, he found it was his own fabrication. The supposed importer had purchased it, and by his French tinsel and French labels, sold it back, as pure, to the original fabricator—biting the biter.

The Rev. Dr. Bairds has stated, that "little or no wine is drank in France in a pure state, except it may be at the wine press. The dealers purchase it at the vineyards in a pure state, but in their hands it is entirely changed, by adding drugs or distilled spirits."

Says Horatio Greenough, the eminent sculptor, "that although wine can be had in Florence at one cent a bottle, the dealers do not hesitate to add drugs and water, to gain a fraction more of profit."

An Episcopal Clergyman, recently returned from the Continent of Europe, visited an immense manufactory of all kinds of wine, Logwood came in as a great ingredient, so great that the proprietors kept a vessel in their employ for its importation.

The dyers in Manchesier (England), say, "the wine brewers are running away with all the best logwood;" and the London people say, "If you wish to get genuine Port, you must go to Oporto, make your own wine, and ride outside of the barrel all the way home."

☞ The anti-Liquor Bill has been postponed till after the recess. Temperance people must agitate the question during the winter. Arrangements should at once be made to get up petitions, and to have them numerously signed for the re-assembling of parliament.—Montreal Witness.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, Dec. 14.

Their Lordships met at five o'clock.

THE WAR WITH RUSSIA.

The Duke of RICHMOND presented a Petition from the Mayor, Aldermen, and Council of the borough of Wakefield in the county of York, impressing on the Government the necessity of immediately bringing into requisition all the military power of the empire, for the purpose of carrying on the war with an energy that will bring it to a speedy, a successful, and an honorable termination.

TRAINING AND DRILLING FOREIGN TROOPS.

The Duke of NEWCASTLE moved the second reading of the bill which he had laid on the table, to provide for the training and drilling of a limited number of foreign troops. His Grace having briefly reviewed the Parliament enactments upon this subject, the last of which, in 1806, limited the number of foreigners so admitted to 16,000, observed that from 1807 to 1815 there was scarcely a siege or battle in which the German Legion had not taken a part.

The Earl of ELLESBOROUGH opposed the bill, which, he said, had for its object the substitution of foreigners for the present militia force in this kingdom.

The Duke of RICHMOND bore a glowing testimony to the services of the German Legion in the Peninsular war.

The Earl of DERBY said that the jealousy of Parliament against foreign mercenaries was a well founded one. As to the precedents, there was none of the slightest value in favour of such a measure, for the German Legion was principally composed of Hanoverians, who were subjects of the King of this country. But from whence did they propose to form this legion? The noble Duke who had introduced the bill had said that he did not know who they were. Were they to be Greeks? (A laugh.)

The Duke of NEWCASTLE, with considerable warmth, said that he had not stated that he did not know who were the troops proposed to be enlisted. What he had said was, that until communications had been made with the foreign Governments, it would not be right that he should state them to the House. He regretted that the noble Earl appeared to be anxious of following his old precedent of mis-stating the facts and arguments addressed to their Lordships.—(Cheers.)

The Earl of DERBY was happy to see, last night, that the noble Duke was somewhat more humble and civil than usual, while making his defence, but was sorry to find that he was now returning to his old habits, which were not quite in accordance with that courtesy usually exhibited by most members of their Lordships' House towards each other. (A laugh.) But the other noble Duke had stated that a sympathy did not exist between the troops which were about to be employed and those of this country. He (the Earl of Derby) was, however, ignorant that there was that sympathy; the people of this country did not know it, and if the noble Duke knew from whence they were about to draw their supplies, he had at all events not condescended to inform their Lordships; and until Parliament knew who were the men to be employed, there was an additional reason for that constitutional jealousy on the subject of the employment of foreign troops. Was it to be Polish? There would be a significance in that. Such a force would possess a common interest with us. (Cheers.) He thought the fact of the Government demanding such an assistance in the first year of the war was a humiliating confession of weakness.

The Earl of ABERDEEN, after replying to the several objections raised by the Earl of Derby, said: The object of this bill is to introduce into this country, for a limited time, for the purpose of drill and for drill only, a sufficient number of foreign troops; and as soon as they are in a condition to be employed as troops, then to be sent to the seat of war. That is surely not the same thing as maintaining a foreign garrison in this country. (Hear, hear.) It is merely for a temporary purpose, and for a limited number of men, until they are fit to be employed in foreign service. I think the limitation has been placed at 15,000 at one time. It may be very proper to limit the number; when the first 15,000 shall be so drilled and sent abroad for foreign service, then it will be perfectly in the power of the Government, if they think proper, to have 15,000 more. ("Hear, hear," from the Earl of Derby.) Doubtlessly, it is with that intention, if the exigency of the service requires it. My noble friend opposite, who spoke first, took upon himself to say that Sir Robert Peel never would have consented to such a measure. I do not know what measure Sir Robert Peel would have approved or rejected; but, after all, a very great statesman, whom my noble friend resembles much more than I resemble Sir Robert Peel, namely, Lord Chatham, in the war of 1756, had no scruple in employing German troops in aid of British forces; and I am not therefore prepared to say certainly that Sir Robert Peel would have refused his assent to a measure of this description. But the whole objections of the noble Lord appears to arise on a fallacy. (Hear, hear.) Volunteering from the militia to a more or less extent will go on; but all that will require time, and cannot be available in the same manner and to the same extent, as troops raised on this principle. Not at all admitting the accuracy of the description of the employment of this force in England, where it will not be employed at all, I cannot look on it as liable to any serious constitutional objection to have such a force as I have mentioned employed merely for the purpose of being drilled previous to being sent out on foreign service; and I cannot think the opposition raised by the noble Lords to this measure is a tenable one; and I must say I think it has been ill-conceived by the noble Lords opposite, who profess such extreme anxiety and impatience that Her Majesty's Government should be exhorted to the utmost possible degree to exhibit an adequate amount of vigour in this crisis. It will only be by misrepresentations of the real nature of the force that any shadow of an objection can be urged against it. I trust, therefore, that your Lordships will see that the objections urged to this measure are wholly untenable, as represented by the noble Lords opposite.

The Earl of MALMESBURY opposed the bill, as he thought it was fraught with inconvenience, if not danger, to bring foreign troops into this country.

The Duke of ARGYLE said, that one of the strongest grounds on which we were entitled to ask the aid of the subjects of foreign countries was, that they took an active interest in this war. (Hear, hear.)

Earl GREY, though he regretted the necessity of employing foreigners, would not oppose this Bill.

In answer to the Earl of Glengall,

The Duke of NEWCASTLE said, it was the intention of Government to embody the whole of the Irish Militia.

The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

THE QUEEN'S ANSWER TO THE ADDRESS.

The LORD CHAMBERLAIN of Her Majesty's Household (the Marquess of Breadalbane): I have the honour to report to your Lordships that, in obedience to your order, the Address of this House, in answer to Her Majesty's most gracious Speech from the throne, was duly presented to Her Majesty, that it was graciously received, and that Her Majesty has returned the following answer:—

"I thank you for your loyal and dutiful address. I felt confident that I should receive your cordial co-operation in the measures which I considered necessary for the vigorous prosecution of the war in which we are engaged; and I trust that, under the blessing of the Almighty, those measures will tend to the re-establishment of the peace of Europe on a sure and lasting foundation."

Militia Bill.

On the order of the day for the second reading of the Militia Bill,

Objections were urged to points of detail by Colonel SIBTHORP and Lord LOVAINE, who suggested, that, on the volunteering of a militia regiment, another militia regiment should be raised in the county.

Lord PALMERSTON said, such a step was not contemplated by the Government. There were many county gentlemen now in the militia whose social position rendered it far more important that they should stay at home than that they should do garrison duty abroad. No imputation would, therefore, be made on the public spirit of any gentleman who declined to volunteer; and, on the other hand, he hoped, if Her Majesty declined the services of any gentleman who did volunteer, it would not be considered a slur on his character.

The Bill was then read a second time. On the Motion that it be committed to-morrow,

Mr. DISRAELI suggested, that the Committee be delayed till Monday, and, in doing so, he expressed his regret that such a measure should have been introduced at the present time. It would render the militia service unpopular in the country, and it would give foreign nations an idea that we were already at the end of our resources. He was, therefore, opposed to the principle of the Bill, but, in the present circumstances, he would not offer any opposition to the Government; but he did hope the Committee would be delayed till Monday.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL denied that this measure would give foreigners an idea of our weakness. The army was now on little more than peace establishment, and, although recruits were now coming in freely, still it must be remembered those men could not at once be transformed into soldiers. It would be easier, therefore, three years hence to find an army to garrison our foreign dependencies than it was in this first year of the war. He had no objections to postpone the Committee till Monday.

Mr. ADDERLEY reminded the government that our Colonies were both able and willing to furnish a military force to Her Majesty, which would render unnecessary both this measure and that for employing troops. He appealed to the Colonial Minister whether it was not true that Canada had expressed a willingness to furnish both money and men.

Sir GEORGE GREY had no doubt of the facts referred to by the honourable gentleman, though they had not yet reached him in an official shape. It was very far from the intention of the Ministers, in introducing this Bill, to throw any doubt on the loyalty and attachment to this country of the Colonies. He had no idea that it would be necessary to send the militia to Canada, for the Canadians had already taken measures to raise a militia of their own.

In answer to Mr. Smyth,

Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT said, it was not intended to give militia officers army rank, for that would be to put them over the heads of officers whose services were incomparably more arduous than those of the militia could be.

The Committee was then appointed for Monday, and the House adjourned at half-past six.

Foreign Enlistment Bill.

Lord John Russell, in moving the Bill, fortified himself by an appeal to Constitutional History, showing how matters went in the days of MARLBOROUGH, when, in an army of 60,000 men, only 40,000 were in English pay, and only 18,000 of these were British soldiers. The noble Lord specified other Wars, in which the same practice prevailed. Lord JOHN made short work of all argument by an appeal to facts. He told the House, that if they thought fit to offer a bounty of £50 each for recruits, and to send them forth, while unprepared for the service, he had on doubt they would obtain a sufficient number of such men; but looking at the War as a thing which, by possibility, at least, might be protracted, and to the propriety of husbanding the resources of the country, he deemed it a gross fallacy to say, that if they had 200,000 Englishmen and 40,000 foreigners, that they were relying upon foreign swords. Lord JOHN very properly intimated his conviction, that it would be unwise, and every way most impolitic, to renounce a policy which had been approved by a CROMWELL, a CHATHAM, a MARLBOROUGH, and a WELLINGTON.

Sir EDW. BULWER LYTTON spoke strongly on the subject. But, prohaps, the most significant circumstance of the Debate was the speech of Lord PALMERSTON, not remarkable for its length, but for its explicitness. In a direct and common-sense manner, the noble Lord showed the folly of those who demanded Government to explain everything in and about the Legion before they had received permission to form it. The admirers of the noble Lord, who of late had been so clamouring for his elevation to the Premiership, will derive no comfort from the speech of last evening. Lord PALMERSTON spoke as became an honest statesman, telling the House, in plain terms, that there was no mystery in the matter, except that mystery which he was unable to solve,—how it was, that gentlemen, who professed their willingness to assist the Government in carrying on the war, should object to the first measure that Government proposed for that purpose! He held, that the reinforcement of 20,000 or 30,000 foreigners would be a great assistance to the brave men now in the Crimea, who so richly deserved, and so loudly demanded additional aid. Mr. DISRAELI performed his part with his usual adroitness and desperation. On the previous night, the Right Honourable Gentleman intimated his preparedness and determination to give the Bill the utmost oppositon; this intimation is not unimportant, since, after all that he and his party could do, the Bill has been carried by a large majority.—British Banner.

The Times' view of the Austrian Treaty

The ratifications of the treaty signed at Vienna on Saturday last, between Austria, France and England, will doubtless be exchanged as speedily as possible, and the treaty itself will then be made known to the world. In the mean time a variety of conjectures have been hazarded on this important subject, some of which have been transmitted to us by our own correspondents abroad; but we are satisfied that the real substance and purport of the treaty has not yet transpired. Whatever may be its provisions, we undertake to affirm, from our knowledge of the policy of the allied Governments and of the intentions of Austria, that it does not postpone for a period of three months the decision of a question of vital interest to the conduct of the war and to the future peace of Europe; that it does not contain any guarantee, either direct of indirect, of the possessions of Austria; that it has never been intended to send a division of the Austrian army either to Varna or the Crimea; that it does not contain any promise of subsidy or secret article; that the belligerent Powers have not in any way bound themselves to make any fresh propositions of peace to Russia, or to enter upon negotiations on any basis proposed by the German States; and, lastly, that, although France and England adhere to the Four Points contained in their Notes of the 8th of August, as the chief substance of their demands and the sole basis of negotiation at the present time, they have distinctly intimated what their interpretation of those propositions is, such as to include all the great objects of the war, and that the Cabinet of Vienna concurs in this interpretation of those terms. The conjectures we have mentioned having been more or less accredited and circulated in Europe, we feel it our duty positively to contradict them; and we are inclined to believe that, when the articles of the treaty are known, they will prove much more consistent with the account we gave on Tuesday last of the results of this negotiation. If our information is correct, although this convention is not an actual treaty of offensive and defensive alliance between Austria and the Western Powers, inasmuch as Austria is not at this moment at war with Russia, it is of nearly similar significance, and the strongest engagement which, under the circumstances, Austria could sign. We mean by this expression that we believe the Emperor of Austria to have contradicted a positive engagement to enter into an offensive and defensive alliance with the belligerent States against Russia, unless peace upon the terms exacted by all the Powers, be concluded before the termination of this current month of December; or, in other words, unless, in answer to the announcement at St. Petersburgh that Austria is about to join the Western alliance, the Emperor of Russia declares at once his inability to prolong the contest. Such an act of surrender on the part of the Czar is at present highly improbable. He rejected those terms in the summer, when they were presented to him in a more conciliatory form, and when they were not preceded by the invasion of the Crimea. Count Nesselrode declared that such terms could only be accepted by the Russian Government if it had already suffered the defeat and exhaustion of a protacted and unsuccessful war; so that the very language in which the Emperor scornfully rejected this proposal seems to condemn him to abide by the consequences of that refusal.

The very first pledge of the sincerity of Russia, if she professed her readiness to enter into negotiations upon the conditions required by the rest of Europe, would be the entire cessation of her military movements and preparations; these are, however, carried on with unabated activity. A despatch from Warsaw, dated the 4th of December, states that General Sievers is concentrating the First infantry Corps of the Russian army, with a portion of the Imperial Guards on the left bank of the Vistula, that is, on the extreme western frontier of the empire, while General Paniutin is advancing with the Second Infantry Corps on Podolia and Volhynia. Movements of this magnitude and importance, undertaken by whole armies (for each infantry corps consists, when complete, of about 52,000 men) at this season of the year, when the troops would otherwise be taking up their winter quarters, indicate a conviction of a near approach of hostilities. Prince Gortschakoff, and the Russian agents in Germany, have been lavish of their promises and unsparing in their exertions to prevent the conclusion of the treaty between Austria and the Western Powers, but there is no reason to suppose that they are authorized to make large concessions after an act of all but direct hostility than they consented to make in the whole course of the previous negotiations. The policy of Austria, though slowly executed, has been steadily pursued; she has given ample and repeated notice to Russia and to all the world that, if peace was not restored, she should throw the weight of her armies on the side of the Western Powers as soon as her preparations were completed and the factious opposition of her German confederates overcome. Accordingly, within four days after the conclusion of the additional article of her treaty with Prussia, which removed all uncertainty in that quarter, she entered into her present engagement with the Western Powers, which bring her to the verge of a declaration of war against Russia, and of an offensive and defensive alliance with France and England at the close of the present year.

The effects already produced upon the whole of Germany by the intelligence that the treaty with the Western Powers is actually signed has been great and instantaneous. It is everywhere felt that the time is approaching when Germany may hope to play a bolder and nobler part than she has hitherto borne in these transactions. The King of Prussia boasted the other day in the speech in which he opened the session of the Prussian Diet, that he was acting in the closest union with Austria, and that, whatever might be the necessities of the time, Germany would act as one body. We are not so sanguine as to believe that the inertia and the divisions of the Confederation can be so easily overcome as to make the German States parties to the agreement now subsisting between the allies, or to engage the federal forces of Germany actively in the war; but the Prussian Assembly, to which the words we refer to were so recently addressed, can hardly fail to ask for proofs of that intimate union with Austria, which means also union with the West of Europe; and among the first objects of the alliance concluded at Vienna, we have no doubt that one of the chief purposes of the Three Powers is to apply their influence with energy to determine the future conduct of Prussia at this crisis. It is fortunate that at the moment when the Chambers are just convoked at Berlin an event of this importance occurs, not in the obscure regions of diplomacy, but in the face of Europe. A few days more will bring this treaty to the knowledge of the public, and the question will then be asked with authority whether Prussia intends to adopt the resolutions of the triple alliance, or to separate herself from them by a neutrality, which is a disguised adherence to the cause of Russia. The King of Prussia is suspected in Germany of some secret engagement or personal promise to his Imperial brother-in-law, which precludes him from acting as an independent German Sovereign on behalf of the honour and interests of his country; and it is remarked with astonishment that the military forces of Prussia have been studiously removed from the Polish frontier, so as to leave the kingdom defenceless on the eastern side. But these suspicions will ere long be brought to a more decisive test; for when Austria announces that she shall join the Western Powers, and place herself at the head of the national party in Germany, unless the peace of Europe be immediately secured, the neutrality of Prussia is, in fact, the only circumstance which encourages and enables Russia to carry out the war.

At a recent meeting of the Mixed Commission in London, England, for the adjustment of Anglo-American claims, Mr. Alexander McLeod, whose name will be well recollected by all our readers, preferred a claim against the United States government for compensation to the extent of £5,000, for the suffering and losses sustained by him during his imprisonment and prosecution in the United States, on the charge of being concerned in the attack on the Caroline. Mr. McLeod was himself present at the meeting of the Commission, and entered into a legthened statement of his case. The claim was resisted by Gen. Thomas on the part of the United States government, on the ground that the controversy having been once settled could not now be re-opened, and that Mr. McLeod's was not one of those cases which came properly within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners. He also deprecated its revival, as being calculated to disturb the present good understanding between the two countries. The claim stands open for judgment.—Colonist.

More Republican Sympathy with Despotism.

An attempt has been made at San Francisco to effect the liberation of some of the Russian prisoners captured at Sitka by the British and French fleet. A number of Russian prisoners were on board a captured Russian ship, which put into the harbor with the allied squadron for refreshments, when, after the sailing of the ships of war, the sympathising Yankees got warrants of habeas corpus, issued by a sympathizing court, and boasted they would set the prisoners free under a sham of legal proceedings. The matter, however, coming to the ears of the British officers, the ship hove anchor, and sailed for Vancouver, before the sympathisers effected their kind design. Proceedings were then entered against the officers for contempt of court in not obeying the writ! Pity they should not have shown contempt for such a court! We have a strong impression that their contempt would have been shown in a still more striking manner had the sympathisers actually attempted to carry their design into operation. The Times lately asked the question: "If it could be possible that a Yankee was only just a Russian under somewhat different circumstances?" The question we think will have to be answered in the affirmative, if such disgraceful proofs of the fact, be much more indulged in, as the above, and many others which we find recorded in the American press.—Niagara Mail.

ADDRESS.

TO THE READERS OF "THE (LONDON) EMPIRE."

It is not without reluctance that, yielding to the judgment of those whom I esteem wiser than myself, I to-day address the readers of The Empire over my own proper signature.

My purposes, firstly to announce the fact that I have become co-editor and principal proprietor of this journal; and, secondly, to say something which shall indicate, with sufficient distinctness, the principles by which my Editorial Management will be regulated, the general views which I intend to promulgate, and the ends to which my literary labours will be directed.

The Empire, since its establishment, twelve months ago, has been distinguished for its able and manly advocacy of the cause of social morality, of sound liberal opinions, and of progressive reform. It will continue to be so distinguished, any deficiency of talent on my part being amply compensated by the more meritorious contributions of those with whom I already have the honour to be associated, and of others who I have reason to believe will lend me their occasional and valuable co-operation.

What I have been during the whole course of my public life, that I shall inflexibly remain—the ardent friend and supporter of Free-trade and the rights of industry—of the absolute and perfect equality of all religious sects—of the largest practicable increase of the independent political power, of the people—of justice to our colonies, and especially to the conquered subjects of our vast Indian Empire—of the exercise of the moral influence of this nation in favor of the total and universal extinction of slavery and the slave trade; and, finally, of the Christian principles of Peace—especially the substitution of pacific arbitration, in all international disputes, for the present senseless, absurd and bloody appeal to the sword; and the gradual overthrow of those gigantic military institutions of Europe which menace the tranquility of the world, are the strongest bulwarks of despotism, and the most formidable obstacles to the advancement of civilization, and the triumphs of pure undefiled religion.

I shall hold MORALITY to be the true foundation of all POLITICS, and shall first inquire—not what is EXPEDIENT, but what is RIGHT; regarding it as ever in the highest degree inexpedient, and in the end necessarily injurious, to depart from the principles of truth and rectitude. I shall endeavour to test all questions by the unadulterated standard of Christian ethics, and by their bearing—not on the prospects or projects of a party, but upon the widest and best interests of the human race; trying to adhere to what is morally right—right everywhere, and right for all time. Conducted on these principles, The Empire will not be a strict party paper, but will be the friend of every party that shall prove its desire to carry out, in whatever direction, the maxims of individual, national and universal justice.

I have a high veneration for the BRITISH CONSTITUTION; but I do not regard every INSTITUTION that has grown up under it as of equal sacredness and value with the Constitution itself. Institutions are but the machinery for promoting the liberties and securing the rights of the people, and, like all other things which are the offspring of mere human invention, are liable to defects, and prone to decay. They are means to an end, and should never be regarded as the end itself. Institutions for men, not men for institutions, will be the watchwords of this journal. I hold the opinion of Wordsworth, that

> Our life is turned > Out of its course, whenever MAN is made
> An offering, or a sacrifice, a tool,
> Or implment, a passive thing employed
> As a brute mean, without acknowledgement
> Of common righ or interest in the end.

In contemplating my future editorial career, I neither expect nor desire to avoid controversy; but it shall be my study and my effort to show myself an honourable and just minded antagonist, and to preserve the columns of this paper unstained by calumny, and uncorrupted by selfishness. While I shall claim and exercise "the liberty to know, to think, to believe and to utter, freely, according to my conscience," I shall, as I have ever done, most scrupulously respect the same right of free utterance in my contemporaries, and be ready to do battle for it as ardently on behalf of others as for myself.

I enter upon my present labours and responsibilities unpatronized and unprotected by any party in Church or State, and I look for support to those only who respect individual independence and political integrity, and who may desire to aid me in an earnest effort to contribute something towards the creation of a public sentiment that shall give ardour to virtue, confidence to truth, and freedom to mankind.

I have toiled long enough in the cause of reform and progress to be prepared for any measure of disappointment which may befall me. I have never yet stipulated, and do not now stipulate, for success. If I can satisty myself that I have done my duty, I shall rest contented with the issue.

DOMINICA.

The New York Tribune, has a late letter from St. Domingo, of which the following is an extract:

* * * "It is a positive fact that your Government is making or has made a treaty with the Dominicans. By it, the Bay of Samana is to be ceded to the United States for a naval depot. In return, the United States, are to officially acknowledge the independence of Dominica. There is some hitch about the details.

"As near as I can find out, they want some modification of your tariff or port regulations, which Mr. Ceazneau, who is the American Minister Plenipotentiary, has no authority to promise, though, they say, the President is willing to do it without. Perhaps it is adjusted by this time. If it is, you will doubtless have the business officially announced in the forthcoming Message of Gen. Pierce.

"Most people here who know anything about it, thinks it is a step toward annexation, and the planters and traders are jubilant accordingly. Some of the old Spanish stock go against it, for the same reason. Everybody considers that with such an ally as the United States on their side, they would have no difficulty in keeping the upper hand of Soulouque's folks, at the other end of the island.

"I suppose you do not know much about your new allies? I will give you the benefit of my short experience. Here, in San Domingo, and, I suppose elsewhere, they are of mixed Spanish and African blood, in all sorts of proportions.

"Two-thirds of them are what you would call mullattoes, (they have half-a-dozen different names for them here,) and pretty much all the other third are black. There are a few pure whites, principally Spanish—hardly any English or Americans. They work just as much as they have to, and no more. Their language, religion, customs, &c., are a good deal like Cuba. They hate the Haytiens, with whom they have been at war for years, like poison. This is the main article in their political creed. San Domingo is a decaying little old town, with a Spanish cathedral, arsenal, &c. I have not been into the interior, but I am told the soil is good for sugar, cotton and tobacco, and I know the climate is hot enough for anything.

"The Dominicians claim the largest (eastern) half of the island, but the Haytiens outnumber them in population. There is a little trade between the Haytien ports and New York, principally in coffee. The whole American commerce with Dominica, in a year, cannot amount to more than a million dollars. They send some coffee, mahogany and campeachy wood to the States, and get in return, pork, bacon, flour, cheap cotton goods, &c. It will make another slave State, if it is annexed, which, I suppose, is the reason the American Government wants it."

Singular Slave Case.

The Indianapolis Journal of the 13th inst., contains a report of a trial in that place, under the seventh section of the act of 1850, for the rendition of fugitives from service. One of the chief witnesses for the prosecution was Cyrus Fillmore, a brother of Millard Fillmore, Ex-President of the United States.

In August, 1853, Benjamin Waterhouse stopped at the town of Orland, in Indiana, having in his waggon with him three colored persons. Cyrus Fillmore was standing on the steps of a public house in that town as Mr. Waterhouse drove up, and saw the negroes, and questioned Mr. W. if he was on the "underground railroad." He replied that he was, and inquired for Captain Barty.

Waterhouse was indicted in March, 1854, for aiding the escape of slaves; but the indictment being defective in several important particulars, it was quashed. The chief defects were, that the negroes were not known to have been slaves; and, if slaves, it was not known who their owner was. The marshal was determined to make an example of Mr. Waterhouse, and Cyrus Fillmore was engaged by him to go to Canada with Mr. Payne, of Lexington, Ky., the son of the alleged owner of the men, and try to discover the negroes, and ascertain from them evidence against Waterhouse, &c.

Fillmore says: "I told him of Clark, who was also an Abolitionit, and he finally drove up there. Thomas Clark came out when they drove up, but can't say I saw them get out; saw them no more after they drove to Clark's; I was within ten feet of the negroes as the waggon turned in the street; this was 20th to 25th August, 1853."

He goes on then to state how he went to Canada with Payne, and found, as he supposed, one of the same negroes that he had seen with Waterhouse. This was in June, 1854.

Cross-examined—Had a conversation with defendant last May; saw the negroes in the waggon only; might have been twenty or thirty feet from them, but did not scrutinize them; noticed the one who was driving, the most, and this was not Tom; as they turned the waggon, they came, say ten feet, from me; think the negroes drove in town, and then over to Clark's; may be possible I am mistaken as to driving in town; became acquainted with defendant seventeen years ago; deputy marshal first wanted me to go to Canada, but I did not want to go, and the marshal urged me to go; I have always been in the habit of working for pay; and confident the defendant used the term underground railroad.

Re-examined.—Defendant was going north, he thinks; depends on the road they came in town; might have been fifteen minutes they stopped; Tom was not driving; noticed the driver most; Marsh was to pay me; supposed I was to be paid in addition to expenses.

It appears from the testimony of Mr. Payne, that he was induced to go to Canada, and take Fillmore with him, and that their expenses would be paid. The two men then started for Canada, and Dr. Marsh, the deputy marshal, accompanied them as far as Detroit. Mr. Payne found his slave Tom at Windsor, Canada, sick; they recognized each other; Fillmore was with him. Tom was one of the negroes whom Mr. Fillmore supposed he saw at Orland, in the waggon with Mr. Waterhouse, in August previous.

Upon this evidence Waterhouse was again indicted, and the recent trial lasted three days. George W. Julian and E. H. Brackett appeared for the defence, and R. W. Thompson for the prosecution.

The report in the Journal says that Mr. Thompson spoke over three hours. The court was at the pains to tell the jury "that the Constitution could never have been formed unless it should contain the clause in relation to fugitives." He also informed the jury that a slave, when found in Indiana (where the law presumes every man to be free) is, nevertheless, prima facia a slave, and it lies with the party denying it to controvert that presumption. These are a few of the points made by the court in explaining the law and the evidence to the jury, who were strongly invoked to bring in a verdict of guilty.

The jury, after being out several hours, returned a verdict that Mr. Waterhouse pay a fine of fifty dollars, and be imprisoned in the court-room one hour, and that the Government pay the costs. This is all they would do.

The Cincinnati Gazette, from which we gather these facts, says:—

"We have been informed, the fact does not appear in the report of the trial in the Journal, that the jury refused to impose the fine of $50, unless the court would first agree to immediately remit it, and that the fine was so remitted.

"Such is the result of the first case tried in Indiana, under the 7th section of the Fugitive Law. The case affords much material upon which to seriously ponder. It is, we believe, a new feature in our criminal jurisprudence, for the Government to pay the owner of lost property for his time and expenses in hunting it up, and also to furnish men at the public expense to aid him in the search."

Mr. Cyrus Fillmore must have a very low estimate of the duty which he, as the brother of the Ex-President of the United States, owes to the public or private character of our chief magistrates, when he, for the paltry pittance of "three dollars, and expenses paid," would consent to become a mere slave hunter."

From Frederick Douglass' Paper.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS: DEAR SIR:—I hope that in my taking the liberty of asking a place in your paper, I do not trespass on your views or those of the readers of your paper. What I am about to say, I do with the very best of motives, especially those who may think with me on the great matters that pertain to our general welfare. The only regret and fear with me is, that we are too inactive on our part, while those that think differently are on the watch-tower at their post, proclaiming the scheme of emigration in every town and village in our state. The people of this city have had four lectures on the plan, prospects and success of emigration. Three by Miss Shadd, and one by Wm. E. Walker. Permit me to say that these individuals differ widely on the place to go, to the lady for Canada and the gentleman for Liberia, both assuming high grounds to sustain the possession they pretend to assume. Miss Shadd took the ground that the people of color reach every station in the government that is now held by any class of the people which she said could not be had in the United States any where, some of which was mentioned, such as justices of the peace, stations in the army, and such like; and the reason that more were not filled by men of color, was incapability. I must say it is a great pity that women are not admitted in the Assembly of the law-making power. There would be at least two out of the forty thousand people of color who might be admitted into that department of the government. The idea of a colored nationality is out of the question. If this be true, then all the great ado at Cleveland will prove abortive; and the money spent by the Pittsburghers will be nothing more than to enrich the railroad companies. The position that Miss Shadd took in relation to the Canadas being annexed to the United States, was folly, and never could be done, especially if the people of color would go to that place, which would put a stop to any plan of annexation. If one could have dropped down in the midst of the assembly at any time during the evenings that were occupied by Miss Shadd, and not being acquainted with the aims of the people of the city, would come to the conclusion that the people were in favor of going to Canada.

The next day on the second evening, she gave the product, climate & soil of the country, and promised to exhibit some of the products of the same. This was not done. The time taken up on the last evening, was a reply to Mr. Walker. At the close of the meeting, the Rev. A R. Green offered a resolution complimentary to the lady, and endorsing the ability of the editors of the Provincial Freeman, recommending the same to the people of the city. This was done, when no one expected. Mr. J. I. Gaines made an effort to prevent the passage of the resolutions, but failed. He, however, made one true statement, and that was, that the emigrationists always skulk behind everything, to effect carrying out their ends. I have already said more than I intended, and must content myself by saying nothing at present, touching Mr. Walker's position, as his plan is out of the question. Then, in conclusion, I must say I have not heard anything that had a tendency to change my mind on remaining in the United States, under the tree that we have planted.

D. JENKINS.

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 25, 1854.

From the Liberator.

Visit to Canada.

[We publish the following letter from a highly intelligent colored citizen of New Bedford, at the request of Capt. Dreyton, to whom it was addressed. It speaks well for Canada and the fugitives.]

NEW BEDFORD, Dec. 18, 1854.

CAPT. DANIEL DREYTON:

DEAR SIR,—According to promise, I send a line to say I have paid a visit to Canada, and will give you a brief report of what may interest you concerning the country. I was much pleased with it, and found the people in a condition far more favorable than I anticipated. Prejudice against color does not exist in any department of trade, nor in the social relations. Any colored man who has the means can enjoy similar advantages to his paler brother, and the crushing influence that meets us at every avenue here is unknown in Canada. There is much wealth among the colored people. Some own large farms, and live independent. Many are engaged in mechanical pursuits, and are encouraged. None that I saw complained that their color prevented them from doing well. They seem content, and wonder how our people consent to remain in a country that withholds from them the rights of man.

I did not see any object of poverty there. None need suffer, if they are willing to labor. Wages are as high as in the United States; the cost of living not more than half. Our friend Mr. Parker is doing a fine business. He has made some good trades in land, and bids fair to become wealthy. Himself and family fully appreciate the change. I have come to the conclusion that a colored man can never develop his mechanical genius or mercantile ability in the United States.

Your friend, E. R. JOHNSON.

From the Anti-Slavery Standard.

Letter from Canada.

We are permitted to publish the following private letter from an emigrant to Canada to her friend in this city. It is just such a letter as one likes to read from a new country, and cannot fail to interest our (with Dr. Smith's leave) coloured friends, who, we think, will agree with us, that here is a pleasanter picture than that recently presented to them in Augustus Washington's letters from Liberia:

BUXTON, Canada West, March 23, 1854.

MY DEAR MRS. HARRIS: I take up my pen to write you a few lines, after so long a delay. I suppose you all thought that we were all dead, but it is not so, I can assure you, although we have been quite sick since we arrived in Canada. I have been quite ill with the pleurisy, and, in the Fall, we all had the dumb ague and fever; but now we are enjoying good health, except my son John; it left him feeble and a pain in the side; but he never was strong in health. This is a healthy place—but little sickness except the ague and fever. We arrived in Chatham on the 13th May, after a pleasant journey. It's really beautiful to travel in the Spring, and to behold the different faces of nature's beauty. In the steamboat we went to Troy; then took the cars to Buffalo, and there we put up until Monday from Friday, and I found Buffalo a very pretty place indeed; then we took the steamboat for Detroit—a beautiful sail across the Lake—Erie—and out of sight of land, it seems to me as on the sea; and then we took the steamboat again for Chatham—then we were done and at our journey's end. Now, Chatham is a fine place indeed, a town pleasantly situated on the banks of the Thames; and there we kept house six weeks—we had a small house—much cheaper than to board; and then my husband went to Buxton, to the coloured settlement, a distance of six miles, and purchased a farm of fifty acres, with nine acres cut down and one all cleared. The man who had taken it had to give it up, or build; it's a pleasant place. So, my husband liked it, and bought it and paid the money on the spot. He had to pay for the improvements and the balance of the ground—but if you buy a farm with no improvements on it, then it is two dollars and a half an acre. And he hired his house put up, and on the first of July, we moved on our farm. O, my dear friend, how I do want to see you again; I do wish you would try and come to Buxton, Canada West. Come to a land of liberty and freedom, where the coloured man is not despised nor a deaf ear turned to them. This is the place to live in peace and to enjoy the comforts of life. In September, we got a fine cow, with a heifer calf ten months old. So I have been quite a country-woman. I both churned my own butter and milked my own cow. We have got three nice sows, and, by and by, I shall have some geese, and chickens, and ducks, and all those things. Here is nine thousand acres of land now taken up by coloured people in Buxton, where we live; and Mr. King, the government agent, who sells the land, has purchased eight thousand more to sell at the same rate; and the people are coming in from all parts, and the place is filling up fast. I hear that OLD FILMORE is a screwing you all up tighter still, but don't stay there, come to Queer Victoria's land, where they are not making laws to oppress and to starve you. I raised a fine sight of tobacco. We had turnips as big as the crown of your husband's hat, and cabbage as large as a water-pail. O, don't laugh, for it's a fact—for the ground is so rich it raises everything up in no time. We were late, so we had only Fall things. There is a saw-mill and a grist-mill building in Buxton, and a school now here, with seventy or eighty scholars. O, we are just beginning to live well enough without the white man's foot on our necks. Away with your King Fillmore, I am for QUEEN VICTORIA. GOD SAVE THE QUEEN. We have all kinds of game, deer, raccoon, ground-hogs, black-squirrels, hens, pheasants, quails, wild turkey, wild duck, woodcock and red-headed woodpeckers, and sapsuckers, wild red raspberries and plumbs, crabapples and wild gooseberries, and all kinds of nuts. Not as cold as I thought. We have Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian meetings, too. We are to have a log-rolling soon, and then we will have ten acres cleared. They (the people) all will help you to raise and log, and you help them again. Whatever you raise in the ground, you can sell it in Chatham, six miles from here. My husband walks up and down once or twice a-week, and thinks nothing of it; but I hope soon we'll have a team of our own. There is a number come from Toronto to this place, as land can be got cheaper—20s.* an acre and ten years to pay it in, and land that will bring anything you plant just as I did in Weeksville (only it wanted more manuring); only put in the seed and pray to the Giver of rain, and they will come up. O, dear, how I want to see you again. Do come to Buxton, Canada West. * * *

Printed for the Proprietors, at their Office, 5, City Buildings, King Street East.

We give, this week, a correspondence from Frederick Douglas' Paper, over the signature of D. Jenkins, wherein the writer warns his Anti-Emigration friends of the fact, that the Canada Emigrationists are doing good service in the cause.

We pass over the attempted fling at the two colored women,—which is evidently given for the want of argument,—to express our gratification at the result of the meetings.

The writer tells us that had any one "dropped down in the assembly during the evenings occupied by Miss Shadd, not being acquainted with the aims of the people of the city," he "would have come to the conclusion that the people was in favor of going to Canada."

It is time that the sentinels of Anti-Emigration were at their posts, when, according to Mr. Jenkins, by the arguments advanced during two lectures only, the intelligent people of Cincinnati should be so convinced of the futility of their aims, which seem to have been directed to devising plans for remaining in the most cozy positions possible "under the tree" which they "have planted"—as to give such evidence of their conviction of the soundness of the Canada emigration movement, that an impartial observer would have supposed them in favor of it.

The passage in relation to the adoption of the resolutions, is clearly a proof that the people were convinced of the claim to their consideration and action, of the emigration plan. The resolutions, although brought forward when not expected, were concurred in, notwithstanding they met with opposition. We hail this as a sign that the leaven of truth is about to leaven the whole lump, Mr. Jenkins not excepted, notwithstanding his effort to cling to the indolent idea of reposing under the "tree," whose roots are surrounded by chains, while such a work is to be done as the cultivation of this "free and happy land."

Our reason for not excepting Mr. Jenkins from the number on whom the light of truth has dawned, will be found near the conclusion of his article, where he contents himself with saying nothing about Mr. Walker's position, from the fact that "his plan is out of the question;" thus plainly admitting that he has noticed the Canadian Emigrationists, for the reason that their plan is feasible. This effort of Mr. J. to struggle against his conviction, reminds us of the story of the little boy, who, being surprised in a fit of crying, so suddenly as to forget it, on recollecting the fact, asked his mamma what he had been crying about!

As an evidence of the hopeful influence of a short residence in Canada, on the feelings, when a comparison is instituted between it and the United States, let the letter from Buxton, be examined, or if any one has been almost persuaded to go to Liberia, let the recent developments of the state of that colony, be read in connecton with this letter, and the very concise one from E. R. Johnson; both of which give a true statement of our prospects here.

Such facts as these we wish to keep impressed on the minds of our people, until they see and acknowledge by their actions, that they must either pursue the course adopted by all intelligent people, who, scattered among and oppressed by those more powerful, go abroad where they can best improve their condition, or remain, hoping against all hope, the "hewers of wood and drawers of water,' until they die out from very degradation. ☞ A Bytown paper, alluding to a public meeting recently held there, on the subject of the war, says, that a most significant hint was given by both French and English speakers, that in the event of war with the United States, both races would, as in 1812, stand shoulder to shoulder to repel the invader.

☞ George Thompson, the well-known British philanthropist, has assumed the chief editoral position in the London Empire, a first-class weekly journal. A copy of the first issue under his charge, from which the proceedings of the Anti-Slavery Conference, given in our last, was copied, reached us two weeks since.

☞ The National Era, of Washington, D. C., the Olive Branch, of Norristown, Pa., the Wesleyan, of Syracuse, and the Genessee Valley Free Press, of Wellsville, each enter on the new volume with an improved appearance. The Branch and Press are considerably enlarged.

☞ The Crimea is about the size of Massachusetts.

☞ The Legislature of Nova Scotia has voted £2,000 to the Patriotic Fund.

☞ The Town Council of Brockville has voted £50 towards the Patriotic Fund.

☞ The domestic servants of Edinburgh, Scotland have subscribed £180 to the Patriotic Fund.

Arrival of the "Baltic."

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The Baltic left Liverpool on Saturday, 30th p. m, and reached New York at 3½ this p. m.

The Sarah Sands had put into Cork with her sails damaged, and would proceed on her voyage after repairing, without returning to Liverpool.

The Arabia sailed from Marseilles, on the 21st of December, with 1,640 French troops for the Crimea. There is no news of importance from the Crimea.

A high diplomatic conference was to be held at the residence of the British minister in Vienna on the 28th of December. The ambassadors of England, France, Austria, Prussia, and Russia (Prince Gortschakoff) were to take part in the discussion. The conference was to be of a positive character.

A Vienna despatch of the 28th says Gortschakoff presented a note which he has received from St. Petersburgh to Count Buol. It is believed to be unsatisfactory, but is not the final one.

Affairs before Sebastopol were unchanged up to December.

The Russians claim to be doing considerable damage to the approaches of the allies. Nevertheless the French third parallel was mounted with cannon.

The reinforcements of the allies down to the 18th Dec. reached 18,000 men.

An official despatch in the Paris Moniteur from Balaklava says:—The situation of the allies is excellent. Liprandi, with 40,000 men was manoeuvring in the vicinity of Balaklava. Menschikoff was sick, and Gen. Osten Sacke was in command.

In the meantime, 5000 Turks had landed at Eupatoria. The destination of Omar Pacha's army was kept secret. It is thought they would invest the north side of Sebastopol.

The railway expedition from England was already on the way, in several steamers and two sailing ships, with all the materials for constructing a railroad from Balaklava to Sebastopol.

The wretched state of the country had almost put a stop to operations. The communication beween Perekop, and Simpheropol was completely interrupted, and a week had expired since a courier had arrived at Odessa from Sebastopol.

At last accounts the weather had improved, with heavy frosts, and both armies were renewing their activity.

Admiral Hamelin, writing on the 12th, says, for the last four days the place has kept up a tolerably brisk fire; the enemy has made vigorous sorties against our lines and those of the English.

A skirmish occurred near Inkerman, on the 15th.

On the 17th December, Omar Pacha left Shumla for Constantinople.

A letter says the defence of the fortress is now to be conducted on a new plan.

The costly material will be removed from the bastion on the walls, and carried back to the ships.

Twenty two ships have been equipped, and are now ready for sea.

It is probable the garrison had mined the places which they pretended to have left.

We have further particulars as to the naval sortie at Sebastopol.

Two Russian steamers, towing six gun boats, went out of the harbour, December 6th, and after firing at a French steamer, and bomb ketch, were compelled to retire.

The passage between the sunken ships is only wide enough for one vessel to pass at a time.

The allied fleet was moored outside the double bay Chersonese.

Opening of the Cobourg and Peterboro' Railway.

Friday last being the day fixed upon to celebrate the formal opening of the Cobourg and Peterboro' Rail Road, was observed by our townspeople as one of general rejoicing. Early in the day numbers of people might be seen collecting about the streets,—whilst others were engaged actively preparing to receivetheir expected guests. The day was exceedingly fine, and all nature seemed desirous of contributing to the joyous occasion.

At a quarter to 12 o'clock, the Mayor and Corporation, according to previous arrangement, proceeded in a body, accompanied by large numbers of the inhabitants to the Station in Peterboro' East for the purpose of meeting their guests. The President and Directors, the contractor, Mr. Zimmerman, and Engineering staff of the Road, the Mayor and members of the Corporation, and other principal inhabitants of Cobourg.

True to the time fixed for the arrival of the train, [½ past 12 o'clock] the neighing of the noble Steam Horse, might distinctly be heard in the distance, as he proudly rushed forward over his iron pathway, at a terrific pace, bringing in his wake, a long train of cars filled with human beings.

The sight was truly magnificent, and to those who never before witnessed such a sight, it must have been a thrilling one indeed; in another moment all was motionless, save and except the hundreds of human beings who were rapidly discharging themselves from the immense train of cars, many of whom were for the first time enjoying a ride upon their own pet railroad.—Peterboro' Review.
